SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1932

Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., minister of Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, with the din of clamorous and clamant voices in our ears, we would hush earth's noises and wait in this quiet moment for the still, small voice of the Eternal Spirit, lest we forget whose servants we are. Amid the tumult and shouting of troubled days we would lift our eyes to the eternal verities. In our bewildering doubt and darkness lift upon us the light of Thy countenance, Thou God who hast been our help in ages past, Thou who art our hope for years to come. Breathe through the heats of our desire Thy coolness and Thy balm. In discordant and disordered days may our ordered lives confess the beauty of Thy peace.

We pray for new insights and for larger sympathies. Recognition of our oneness in Thee makes vivid our realization of the oneness of humanity across all separating barriers of border or breed or birth. Lift the levels of our thinking and living above the fog of blinding prejudice and selfish seeking.

As we look to Thee now in this national shrine of each patriot's devotion, inspire these servants of Thine and of the people to face the vast needs of the present and of the future with dauntless courage and that brotherly compassion for the baffled and discouraged multitudes which moved the heart of that Lord and Master of us all. We ask it in His name. Amen.

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present a petition in the form of resolutions of members of the Worcester Women's Democratic Club, of Worcester, Mass., favoring the repeal of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without all the signatures and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without all the signatures, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the members of the Worcester Women's Democratic Club assembled in session this the 28th day of May wish to go on record as being in favor of the eighteenth amend-ment being repealed, as we believe that this was never constitutional.

Resolved, That if the eighteenth amendment is retained, some ystem should be inaugurated that would compel those desiring the enforcement share the necessary expense of same.

Resolved, That we present the above sentiments to our United States Senator, David I. Walsh, to have him give this immediate attention.

GLADYS I. HENNESSY (and others).

MANUFACTURERS' EXCISE TAX

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, some days ago I received a letter from the Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts asking that there be incorporated in the revenue bill a provision expressly exempting States and subdivisions of States from payment of the tax on the sales of articles covered in the special section of the revenue bill imposing certain excise taxes. The opinion of the experts and of the committee was that such a provision was not necessary. In connection with the explanation I have made, I ask that the letter to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Statehouse, Boston, May 9, 1932.

Hon. David I. Walsh,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Walsh: If the Federal revenue bill is to provide excises or taxes on various commodities ranging as to articles from automobiles and lubricating oils to checks and telegrams, the Commonwealth and its subdivisions will be vitally affected.

For that reason I am writing to call your attention to the fact that it would be of great assistance to Massachusetts and its subdivisions to have written into the revenue bill a provision expressly exempting governmental activities from the Federal charge, instead of being obligated, as at present, to establish the fact, in asking for refunds, that the tax was exacted on a transaction purely in the exercise of a governmental function.

The original revenue proposal (H. R. 10236) as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means to the House March 7, 1932, carried a provision under the title of manufacturers' excise tax providing for exemption from the excise as to governments. This ried a provision under the title of manufacturers' excise tax providing for exemption from the excise as to governments. This appears at page 239, at lines 13-15, inclusive. Under this provision the following would not be subject to the tax:

"(5) Sales to a State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency thereof by articles for use solely in the exercises of a governmental function."

I believe Commissioner Long has alreedy talked this matter over

I believe Commissioner Long has already talked this matter over with you at length. I am, therefore, not going into greater details other than to back him up by saying that there will be permanent and material benefit to the Commonwealth by including some such provision as that quoted above in whatever revenue bill is enacted by Congress.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH W. ELY.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 11499) for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar, which is known as the Goldsborough bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

THE WORLD COURT (REPT. NO. 758)

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] and myself and by direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I submit from that committee a report on the protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice. In all reasonable probability there will be a considerable demand for copies of the report. I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] whether some additional copies might be printed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] is not in the Chamber at the moment, but I am a member of the Committee on Printing and I am sure there will be no difficulty in having that done.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. FESS. In order to get a sufficient number I would suggest that the report be made a public document. I think that will give us a sufficient number. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report can be printed in the usual manner.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire what the report is? Is it the report on the World Court?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us take it up. It is 15 minutes after 12 now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator what his intentions are with regard to fixing a date for taking up the matter? Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like very much to agree upon a date at the next ensuing session of Congress.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that would be reasonable, but I am informed that we evidently can not get an agreement. So I suppose it will be necessary to move to make the matter a special order. That can be done only in executive session.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We shall take it up later. The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed as a Senate report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Collier, Mr. Crisp, Mr. Rainey, Mr. Hawley, and Mr. TREADWAY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 1029. An act for the relief of Basil N. Henry; and H. R. 4868. An act for the relief of George E. Casey.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 26) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Roanoke Colony Commission to report a plan and program for the celebration in 1934 of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of English-speaking civilization in America on Roanoke Island, N. C., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SENATORS FROM MINNESOTA

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a clipping from the Minneapolis Tribune entitled "In Defense of Our Senators" may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN DEFENSE OF OUR SENATORS

To the EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

In reply to David E. Hasey's wild and woolly warbling about the Farmer-Labor Party being of no value, and his claim that Hon. Henrik Shipstead did not accomplish anything, I must say that it is my opinion that men of Mr. Hasey's stamp are the reason that Hon. Henrik Shipstead can not accomplish the great and good deeds but he proposed in the state of the deeds that he proposes. I would judge by Mr. Hasey's warbling that he does not read the Congressional Record.

If he does read it I would refer him to Shipstead's speeches made on December 22, 1931, February 6, 1932, March 7, 1932. I would also call his attention to a speech made by Hon. Tom Schall on March 16, 1932—a masterpiece. I suppose Mr. Hasey is well posted on Abraham Lincoln's speeches and Theodore Roosevelt's advice.

If he can show me where Lincoln or Roosevelt have showed any more wisdom than Schall and Shipstead I will be pleased to be shown, providing he does not make such foolish and rank mistakes as he has made in his write-up of May 25, 1932.

I will be glad to send Mr. Hasey a few of my Congressional Records if he will read them.

am and have been a Republican for 50 years, but not a hide-I am and have been a Republican for 50 years, but not a hidebound Republican that can not support a man that believes it is his duty to preserve our Constitution, our flag, and our people regardless of his political party. People with real blood in their arteries support men for office and for leadership who believe in our representative form of government. I could cast my vote for a Democrat conscientiously if he was for the best interests of our country, but not the Joe Robinson or Al Smith or Raskob brand. There is not a State in the Union that has better Senators than our State of Minnesota, regardless of whether Mr. Hasey or anybody dislikes them because of their politics.

STUDY OF WAGE LOSSES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the so-called economy bill is about to be presented to the Senate. The bill referred to is expected seriously to affect the living standards and conditions of members of the National Federation of Federal Employees, an important association of workers, many of whom are friends and neighbors of ours, who have given long years of faithful service to the Government. Under direction of Mr. Luther C. Steward, president, and Miss Gertrude McNally, secretary, an exhaustive study has just been completed by that federation indicating estimated wage losses of such employees experienced since 1913, on the basis of the decline in the purchasing power of the dollar and changes in the cost of living. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks, this important and suggestive study to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the study was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREFATORY STATEMENT

The following study, made for the national federation by its actuarial expert, Vice President Ulrey J. Billier, and considered the most complete and accurate of its kind ever attempted, is offered by the Government workers' organization as incontrovertible evidence that wage cuts now would have the effect of sharply accentuating a wage deflation trend which actually has been going on for nearly two decades.

Briefly, the national federation's study shows in a series of tables that, in all salary groups, workers have sustained continuing losses in "real wages" ever since 1913, the year used as a basis of comparison. This pre-war year is universally utilized by statisticians for comparative purposes.

For example, taking a $900 a year clerk, it is revealed that with the advance of the Government's own Index Number for the Cost of Living from 100 in 1913 to 172.5 in 1924, the index value of the $900 salary was $1,553, while the actual salary was but $1,028, making the average salary "lag" $390, and the $900 clerk's "real wage"

Now, using this same clerk as an illustration after the enactment of the classification act, the federation's study shows that the index value of the $900 salary from 1925 to 1931 averaged $1,510, while the actual salary received was $1,191. Here the salary lag was $319, with the real wage only $713. It is especially noteworthy that while the peak of the index number of the cost of living was reached in 1925, when it was 177.9, by 1931 it had fallen to only 145.8, still far above the 1913 mark of 100.

Furthermore, the study shows that for each $900 clerk the salary lag, a definite actual loss to the individual, was $6,518 from 1914 to 1931.

"Analysis of our tables will show," the national federation points out, "that the real wage of this $900 clerk dropped to $510 in 1919; that for 3 years it was below that of a laborer in 1913; and that the average annual real wage for the whole period of 18 years was below that paid to a junior messenger ($720) in 1913

($720) in 1913.

"Moreover, what happened to this $900 salary in loss of purchasing power also happened to every other statutory salary paid by the Government during this period. The salary lag, or loss in real wages, of all the employees in the Government service during these 18 years is so vast a sum that it is seemingly unbelievable, and one hesitates even to estimate the amount."

To afford a more comprehensive picture of what has occurred to all Federal wages, and to indicate the scope of the federation's survey, the organization has made public the facts with respect to the relatively limited number of $5,000 salaries.

It is shown that the average index value of that salary was $7,875 from 1914 to 1924, with the salary actually received standing unchanged at $5,000. The real wage was $3,345, with the salary lag averaging the surprisingly large sum of $2,875. For the 11 years from 1914 to 1924, the total salary, at $5,000, was $55,000. The total real wage received was $36,800, and the total loss in real wage $18,200. wage $18,200.

Analyses duplicating that made for the $900 salary from 1913 to 1924 have been made by the national federation for the following wage groups: $1,000, $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, $1,800, $2,000, $2,350, $2,500, $3,600, $5,000.

Commenting upon the facts developed, Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees, has said: "For perhaps the first time in the entire history of the Government, we now have accurate statistical data showing the cost of living for given years, the number of dollars paid to Federal workers, the amount of goods those dollars could buy, which means 'real wages,' and then a recapitulation of the losses sustained by virtue of declining purchasing power and markedly rising living costs.

"These data which we now have in hand prove conclusively that in addition to receiving salaries which are low, Government workers have had the further handicap of the above-mentioned economic factors. While wages in private industry and business have risen sharply in line with the reduced value of the dollar and the enhanced cost of living, the advances in Federal salaries have been commensurate in no way with changed conditions.

"These data are especially valuable at this time when proposals have been made to cut Federal salaries. The facts we have developed point clearly to the inevitable effect of such a step, and in themselves should show the way to the only just, equitable, and humane congressional solution." rising living costs

WAGES AND THE COST OF LIVING: A STUDY OF WHAT HAPPENED TO THE SALARY OF A $900 CLERK FROM 1913 TO 1931

SALARY OF A $900 CLERK FROM 1913 TO 1931

Seemingly only a few people have a clear conception of the fluctuating value of the dollar, as they appear to think that the dollar is an accurate measure of value, as the yardstick is of length, or the pound is of weight; but this is not the case, for the dollar is like rubber—it stretches and shrinks in value or in purchasing power. What follows is a story of the pay envelope of a $900 clerical employee of the Government working in the District of Columbia from 1913 to 1931.

Brief definitions of the terms used in the article appear to be necessary, and are as follows:

Nominal wages v. real wages: A nominal wage is measured necessary, and are as follows:

Nominal wages v. real wages: A nominal wage is measured by the number of dollars the wage contains, but the real wage is measured by the purchasing power of the dollars in the nominal wage. The relationship existing between the nominal and the real wage, at different times, can best be ascertained by using the Government's index number, which shows the variations in the purchasing power of the dollar, as applied to the cost of living, purchasing power of the dollar, as applied to the cost of living, year by year, since 1913.

The Government's index number: The Government's index number, compiled by the Department of Labor to show the variations in the cost of living, year by year, clearly gives the fluctuations in the purchasing power of the nominal wage and enables one to determine the real wage.

The index number for the cost of living is based on the cost of the six items, properly weighted, which constitute the principal purchases necessary for the support of a worker and his family. These items are as follows: Food, clothing, rent of dwelling, fuel and light, house-furnishing goods, and miscellaneous.

Basic number used: The Government's index number starts with the year 1913 and assumes that the cost of living for that year, measured by the prices paid for the six items mentioned above, is a normal cost or standard, so the index number of 100 is given for the year 1913. Increases in the cost of living in later years are added to the base number of 100. For example, the index number for 1927 is 172. This indicates that the same items costing $1 in 1913 cost $1.72 in 1927.

Purchasing power of the dollar: The term "purchasing power of the dollar" is used to measure the difference in the purchasing units in $1 in the different years since 1913 when compared with the purchasing units in the dollar in 1913. For example, in 1927 the index number was 172, which indicates that the dollar in 1927 was worth only 58 cents when compared with the dollar in 1913. If one will think of the dollars in 1913 as "big dollars," containing 100 cents, and the dollars received since that year as "little dollars," varying in value from 97 cents (1914) to 50 cents (1919 and 1920), the idea will be plain.

Statutory salaries: In 1913 the salaries of employees in the cleri-Statutory salaries: In 1913 the salaries of employees in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service of the Government working in the District of Columbia were fixed by law, and were, as a rule, $900, $1,000, $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, $1,800, and $2,000. There were higher salaries, but they were largely paid to administrative officials and to the professional service. There were then two grades of messengers, one receiving $720 and the other $840. The pay of laborers varied somewhat, but there was one class that received $600 a year.

Index value: The term "index value" appearing in the table which follows is used to denote what the equivalent salary for the year should have been to equal the salary in purchasing power in 1913. To illustrate: A statutory salary of $1,000 in 1913 had the same purchasing power that a salary of $2,004 had in 1920, as the index number for the latter year is shown as 2004.

Salary lag: This term denotes the salary loss due to the excess of the cost of living for the year under consideration over the cost of living in 1913, when the salaries for both years were the same amount; for example, an employee who had a salary of $1,000 in 1913 and the same salary in 1920 had a "salary lag" in 1920 of $1,004 (more "lag" than salary), as the index cost of living showed 200.4 for 1920, and whatever salary the employee received less than $2,004 was a salary loss, or a "salary lag."

As the cost of living mounts wages increase, but much slower than the cost of living; always there is this salary lag.

During the World War all workers' salaries lagged behind the cost of living, and obviously the employers reaped the benefit, Uncle Sam included.

Uncle Sam included.

Uncle Sam included.

Actual salary: By actual salary is meant the statutory salary plus the bonus. The first bonus became effective on July 1, 1917, and the increase amounted to 10 per cent of the salary up to $1,200 and 5 per cent of the salary from $1,200 to $1,800, both inclusive. The second bonus became effective July 1, 1918, and the amount was $120. The third bonus became effective July 1, 1919. The amount was $240. The bonus of $240 was continued until July 1, 1924, when the reclassification act took effect.

In 1913 the minimum salary paid a full-time clerical worker in the District of Columbia was $900 in some departments and $1,000 in others. The table which follows will show what happened to the salary of a $900 clerk from 1913 to 1931.

Column 2 gives the index number; that is, the cost of living for the year compared with the same cost in 1913.

Column 3 shows the salary necessary to equal the salary of 1913

Column 4 gives the actual salary received by this $900 clerk during the year.

Column 5 shows the salary lag, or loss in pay for the year.

Column 6 shows the value of the dollar or its purchasing power for the year.

Column 7 shows the real wage for each year when compared with the purchasing power of the dollar in 1913.

Owing to the increase in the cost of living from 1913 to 1924, inclusive, this $900 clerk, to keep even with the additional cost, should have received each year the amount given in column 3 for the year; but he did not get it, he only received the amount given in column 4 for the year. His total salary lag, or loss, for the 11 years was $4,286, or an average annual lag, or loss, of $390.

If this employee had received a salary of $900 a year during this 11-year period, his total salary would have been $9,900; and if the purchasing power of the dollar had remained constant, his real wage would also have been $9,900. However, owing to the fluctuation in the purchasing power of the dollar, his real wage for this period of 11 years, measured in 1913 dollars, was only $7,412, or an average annual salary of only $674. His pay was thus reduced below that of a junior messenger, $720, and for three years was below that of a laborer in 1913. His actual salary loss during this period of 11 years was $2,488, or an average annual loss of $226, and these were "big dollars," not "little dollars."

AFTER RECLASSIFICATION

The classification act, which became effective July 1, 1924, abolished the statutory salary of this $900 clerk; but his position was not lost, it was simply transferred to grade 1, clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, and the salary, $1,140, became the entrance salary of the grade. This salary remained the minimum wage for clerical workers until July 1, 1928, when the Welch Act became effective, and the minimum salary of a clerical worker was raised to $1,260, and this salary is merely the old statutory salary of $1,000, plus the bonus of $240, plus $20.

COMMENT

A study of the tables, given above, will show that the real wage of this $900 clerk dropped to $510 in 1919; that for three years it was below that of a laborer in 1913; and that the average annual real wage for the whole period of 18 years was below that paid to a junior messenger ($720) in 1913.

Moreover, what happened to this $900 salary, in loss of purchasing newers also harmoned to every other statutory salary paid.

chasing power, also happened to this $900 satary, in loss of purchasing power, also happened to every other statutory salary paid by the Government during this period. The salary lag, or loss in real wages, of all the employees in the Government service during these 18 years is so vast a sum that it is seemingly unbelievable, and one hesitates to even estimate the amount.

The index number is easily understood; for example, the number for 1927 is 172. This merely indicates that the items costing $1.72 in 1927 could have been purchased in 1913 for $1. The cost

$1.72 in 1927 could have been purchased in 1913 for $1. The cost of living in 1927 was 72 per cent above the cost of living in 1913. In computing the purchasing power of the dollar in this table fractional parts of the cent less than one-half were ignored; if the fractional part was one-half cent or over, it was called 1 cent. The Department of Labor prepares its index numbers in June and December of each year. The December index is given in the table except for 1931, when both are given; the first is for June and the last for December.

If the Government had enacted a law in 1913 and established a statutory salary of $1,000 for this position, and at the same time had added a provision to the law that the salary should be raised or lowered according to the increase or decrease in the cost of living as shown by the Government's own index number prepared to show the fluctuations in the cost of living, the Government would have placed in the pay envelope of the employee occupying this $1,000 year by year the amounts given in column 2. But, unfortunately, there was no such provision in the law, so the employee actually received the amounts shown in column 3. The salary lag, or loss, is shown in column 4; this represents the additional sum that should have gone into the pay envelope to keep the purchasing power at $1,000. If the cost of living had remained the same as in 1913 during each year from 1913 to 1924, the nominal wage and the real wage for this position would also have remained the same—$1,000; but owing to the fluctuations in the purchasing power in the dollar, the real wage received, measured by the purchasing power of the dollar in 1913, was as shown in column 5. in column 5

The table further shows that during the period covered by the study, 1914 to 1924, the $1,000 clerk received the pay of a junior messenger in 1913, or a trifle more.

For the Government's index number for the cost of living and the value of the dollar year by year since 1913 see Table 1, "Salary of $900 clerk."

It will be noted that the pay of a $1,200 clerk was reduced in purchasing power during the whole period from 1914 to 1924 to approximately that of a senior messenger in 1913 ($840); that from 1917 on it was below that of a senior messenger; that in 1918 to 1921 it was at or below that of a junior messenger; and in 1919 it was just a little above that of a laborer in 1913.

Many able employees were had at this salary during this period, and they performed highly important work.

Employees in the $2,000 class were assistant chiefs and chiefs of divisions or were important key men in their bureaus. It will be noted that the salaries of these chiefs and key men dropped to $1,060 in purchasing power in 1919, and that their average annual real wage was only $1,405 for the whole 11 years, measured by the purchasing power in 1913.

COMMENT

Employees in this class were chiefs of important divisions, assistant chief clerks of bureaus, or held technical or professional positions. It will be noted that their average real wage during the period from 1914 to 1924, inclusive, had less purchasing power than that of the $1,600 clerk in 1913. Attention is called to their real wage for 1918, 1919, 1920.

COMMENT

Employees in the $3,000 class were largely in administrative, scientific, and technical services. Obviously, their work was regarded as highly important. These employees did not receive a bonus at any time. Attention is called to the purchasing power of the $3,000 salary from 1918 on.

COMMENT

Employees in the $5,000 were heads of bureaus and other high officials of the Government. The real wage in their salaries, measured against the purchasing power of the $5,000 in 1913, was remarkably small from 1918 to 1924. It is evident that the reclassification act of 1923 was due years before it was enacted.

COSTS OF MEAT CHOPPERS, OPTICAL AND DRAWING INSTRUMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 219) submitted by Mr. Reed on May 9 (calendar day, May 31), 1932, as

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate, for the purpose of section 336 (Title III, special provisions) of the tariff act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic article or articles and the competitive foreign article or articles, and to report at the earliest practicable date, on the following items:

1. Meat or food choppers, classified for duty under paragraph 335 as kitchen utensils or under paragraph 372 as machines; together with replacement parts, classified under paragraph 356 as cutting knives, under paragraph 372 as parts of machines, or under paragraph 397 as manufactures of metal.

2. Optical instruments as described in paragraph 228(a) (b).

3. Drawing instruments, classified for duty under paragraph 360, and other scientific and laboratory apparatus and instruments as described in the same paragraph. described in the same paragraph.

Mr. REED. That is merely the usual request for the Tariff Commission to make a study and report. I hope the resolution may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What are the commodities to be investigated?

Mr. REED. The two latter clauses of the resolution are important from the standpoint of the national defense. The manufacture in this country of the products referred to is attended with considerable difficulty, and is conducted by comparatively few firms, which are not very prosperous.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has been found necessary, Mr. President, to abandon some very important investigations to be conducted by the Federal Trade Commission in order to carry out the program of economy which is in contemplation, if not in progress. I was wondering whether the Tariff Commission will be equipped with the funds to prosecute the investigations here suggested?

Mr. REED. I think so. The investigations are comparatively simple. The number of firms in this country, as I say, which produce these articles is very limited. The number of firms abroad that compete here is also comparatively

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator tell us how well supplied with funds the Tariff Commission will be to carry on its regular work?

Mr. REED. I do not know how their appropriations for this year compare with those for last year, but I do know that they have experts on their regular staff who are fully qualified to make this investigation. They have already made a large part of it, and are thoroughly familiar with the competitive situation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if the retrenchment program shall be carried out, it will be necessary to discharge quite a considerable number of the experts, will it not?

Mr. REED. It will doubtless be necessary to discharge some of them, but not all of them. I do not think the investigation will cost very much money.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I assume that it is in contemplation that the investigation will show the inadequacy of existing rates and result in recommendations for increased

Mr. REED. I am not sure of that. The manufacturers of this country claim that to be so, but I am not competent to say whether their claims are correct or not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the rate on optical instruments as described in paragraph 228?

Mr. REED. I do not remember; I can look it up and tell the Senator. What is the paragraph number?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Two hundred and twenty-

Mr. REED. I will tell the Senator in a moment; it is pretty hard to carry the figures in one's mind.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I realize that.

Mr. REED. I have the figures right here.

Mr. KING. What section is it?

Mr. REED. In section 228 (b) the rate is 45 per cent ad valorem and on optical testing instruments the rate is 60 per cent.

What I am particularly concerned in now are fire-control instruments of the type that are used by our Army and Navy. We had a very difficult time at the beginning of the World War in making those instruments in this country, and we do not want to get back into that position again. We are still making a few of them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield the floor. Mr. KING. I do not want to be critical; but we are frequently importuned to increase tariff duties, though we have a substantial monopoly of the commodity for which the increase is sought, upon the ground that the national defense calls for such action. A few days ago we were asked in a very eloquent speech by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], because of the national defense, to put a higher tariff duty upon a certain mineral.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. It was not only in the interest of national defense that the request was made, though that was one of the arguments used in favor of the tariff rate proposed.

Mr. KING. I understand that there is a sort of duality running through these requests for increased tariff dutiesfirst, the national defense, and, second, to furnish employment to American workingmen-but usually back of it, of course, is a desire for increased monopoly.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is a work of futility to obtain information from the Tariff Commission now, even if they were able to furnish accurate information in regard to all of the prices at home and abroad, in view of the so-called depreciated currencies and the fluctuations in the industrial and economic field at home as well as in the industrial and economic field abroad. It is like the valuation of the railroads; it changes every day. Railroad stocks of two or three years ago or a week ago or even perhaps yesterday would not show the same valuation to-day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I will yield in a moment. It seems to me it is just like trying to measure the tide as it comes in and out. At a particular moment when the tide is measured it shows a certain height, but in a few minutes it has changed. It is exactly the same with the commodities produced at home and produced abroad. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. The fire-control instruments of which I speak are principally made in France and Germany, neither of which is troubled at the moment by depreciated currency; so that factor will not enter into the consideration.

I want to assure the Senator that I am not masquerading a tariff claim for my State behind some matter of national defense. There is not a single one of these articles, so far as I know, made in the State of Pennsylvania and there never has been. Their manufacture, so far as I am aware, is limited entirely to Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. KING. The Senator is now referring to optical instruments.

Mr. REED. Yes; to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the resolution.

Mr. KING. And not to meat choppers?
Mr. REED. As to meat choppers the situation is entirely different. There is one concern struggling along in Philadelphia with a cost of production for a typical meat chopper of 67 cents, while meat choppers are being brought in from Germany duty paid and profit paid to the importer and being sold at retail for 50 cents. There is something wrong there. The local manufacturers tried to cut their costs; they have reduced wages several times; but evidently the manufacturer in Germany is either dumping or else he has some mysteriously low cost.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the evidence before the Tariff Commission and before the Senate reveals the fact that in the case of thousands, and hundreds of thousands for that matter, of commodities produced in the United States we can compete successfully with other nations but we have been in the habit of permitting such resolutions as this to go through and I shall not object although I state again that it will be a work of futility to obtain any information at the present time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation, inasmuch as there has been brought into the discussion a statement I made the other day in regard to an ! increase in the tariff on manganese. I am not asking that this matter be brought up now, but I want to make clear my position, that I favor American industry against a monopoly from Soviet Russia. I think American industry and the American people are entitled to more consideration at the present time than are the industries of Soviet Russia, and I made the effort I did in behalf of an increased duty on manganese, Mr. President, in the interest of the industry throughout the United States, and not just for my own State

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration, under Rule VIII, of the calendar of unobjected bills, commencing with Order of Business No. 104

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon when we are going to have another morning hour. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is the first we have had since the 9th of May, and that there are a great many exceedingly important measures on the calendar. Of course, the unobjected bills are apt to be the least important measures on the calendar. I merely inquire of the Senator what the chances are in that respect.

Mr. McNARY. I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the able Senator, and I can say that we will have two calendar mornings during the week in addition to the present

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the number of the order of business at which the Senator from Oregon desires to begin the consideration of the calendar?

Mr. McNARY. Order of Business No. 104, the first number on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof, was announced as first in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 268) to amend subdivision (c) of section 4 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 1663) to prohibit the sending of unsolicited merchandise through the mails was announced as next in

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Economy Committee of the Appropriations Committee has reported a similar measure. This is the George resolution. I call the attention of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to it. Mr. JOHNSON. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1856) to provide for the relief of farmers in any State by the making of loans to drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation, and/or similar districts other than Federal reclamation projects, or to counties, boards of supervisors, and/or other political subdivisions and legal entities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROSCOE MEADOWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2375) for the relief of Roscoe Meadows, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, Roscoe McKinley Meadows shall be held and considered to have served as an officer of the Navy of the United States during the World War other than as an officer of the regular Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Roscoe McKinley Meadows."

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 166) to print the pamphlets entitled "Draft of Mooney-Billings Report" and "Appendix Containing Official Documents" was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the resolution go over. COMPENSATION AND MILEAGE OF MEMBERS OF AND DELEGATES TO CONGRESS

The bill (S. 2494) to amend section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, passed and approved March 4, 1925, relating to the compensation of Members of and Delegates to Congress was announced as next in

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that subject matter is covered by the economy bill, and I ask that this bill may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

The bill (S. 2495) to repeal section 17 of the act passed and approved July 28, 1866, relating to mileage of Members of Congress, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. DALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho referred to Senate bill 2494 as having been taken care of by the Economy Committee. Senate bill 2495 has been taken care of by the Economy Committee, too-both of them.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Economy Committee dealt with the question of mileage?

Mr. DALE. Yes, Mr. President; the mileage has been cut in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. To what extent?

Mr. DALE. One-fourth.

Mr. BORAH. I can deal with the matter by way of amendment. I ask that Senate bill 2495 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

LAWRENCE L. MYATT AND MILLER S. BURGIN

The bill (S. 3051) to reinstate Lawrence L. Myatt and Miller S. Burgin as midshipmen in the United States Naval Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

HOSPITAL ON CROW INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 276) for the construction and equipment of a hospital on Crow Indian Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not know who it was that suggested that the bill go over, but I will say that Senate bill 276 and Senate bill 2987 are authorizations for the completion of two small hospitals, one on the Crow Indian Reservation and the other one on the Blackfeet

Indian Reservation. The department says they are very much in need of these two hospitals. The only reason that the department suggested for not recommending them was on account of the financial condition at the present time. I have not the report that was made by the committee, but these are merely authorizations and not appropriations.

Mr. REED. Yes; I understand, Mr. President; but what prompted me to object was the letter from the Indian Commissioner saying this:

We must consider, in the order of priority, the needs of the service as a whole, giving special attention to Indian groups who are not now provided with hospital or medical facilities. While we are sympathetic to the needs on the Crow Reservation, in view of the foregoing, we are unable to recommend the enactment of S. 276 at this time.

Why is not that a sound objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if that is a sound objection, there never would be any hospitals on some of the reservations where they are needed, just because of the fact that somebody has not recommended them. A hospital is needed on the Crow Reservation, and one is needed on the Blackfeet Reservation. These are merely authorizations, not appropriations; and the Indians on these reservations are desperately in need of these hospital facilities.

Mr. REED. But they already have hospitals there.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator had ever seen the hospitals that they have, he would realize that they are old, antiquated, just old junk; as a matter of fact, just old buildings that are not properly equipped for hospital service. The Indians on both of these reservations have no place where their tubercular subjects can be properly treated. They have no place except these old, worn-out buildings. No physician would think of sending a patient to these hospitals.

Mr. REED. Part of the Crow Reservation hospital was built in 1908. The main building was built in 1916. That does not sound old and antiquated.

Mr. WHEELER. It is not only old and antiquated, but it is insufficient to take care of the Indians that are there. This is just an authorization. When the question of appropriation comes up I will go into the matter further with the Senator; but I hope he will not object to these two authorizations at this time.

Mr. REED. I do not know enough about the subject to stand here and block these bills indefinitely. If some one who is familiar with the needs of the Indians, as I know the Senator is, insists that these hospitals are needed, and no one else familiar with the needs of the Indians objects, I am not going to persist in my objection.

Mr. WHEELER. The whole committee has gone out there and investigated this matter, and the full committee has recommended the construction of the hospital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120,000 for the construction and equipping of a hospital at Crow Agency on the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.

HOSPITAL ON BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 2987) providing for the construction and equipment of a hospital upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the construction of a modern 50-bed hospital, fully equipped, upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana.

The bill (S. 1058) repealing various provisions of the act of June 15, 1917, entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes" (40 Stat. L. 217), was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withdraw his objection to that bill. It has already passed the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, so many people have entered objections to the bill that I think it ought to be pretty well considered before it is passed; and I do not believe we can do it in the short time that is available this morning.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It passed the Senate a year ago without the slightest objection from anybody.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, does the Senator realize that there were put in the Record the other day the requests of two different organizations that they be given a hearing on this bill? Will not the Senator ask to have the bill sent back to the committee so that they may be heard?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not like to do that. The bill has been before the committee now for more than two years.

Mr. BINGHAM. They claim that they have not had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not the case, Mr. President. They have had every opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BOARD OF INDETERMINATE SENTENCE AND PAROLE

The bill (S. 1155) to establish a board of indeterminate sentence and parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] give me his attention? This is a bill providing for the establishment of a parole board. I was wondering if the conditions now call for this legislation.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, they certainly do. There is no bill before the committee that has been more thoroughly considered and has more general approval of those who are charged with the responsibility of this particular activity in the District of Columbia than this measure. It is urged by the District Commissioners, and comes here with the approval of the Budget Bureau. It was very carefully gone over by the corporation counsel, and its passage is particularly desired by the director of the Bureau of Prisons, and it has had his careful examination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I find that the bill provides a number of salaries, and also authorizes the payment of traveling expenses. I should like to be informed as to the amount which it will cost.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CAPPER. The Senator from Vermont reported the

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Vermont

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that the bill under consideration is Senate bill 1155.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. AUSTIN. No salaries at all are carried in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is mistaken about that. There is no appropriation for salaries, but there are authorizations for salaries. Here is the language

Salaries and the actual and necessary traveling expenses of each such parole officer shall be paid out of the appropriation for the maintenance of the penal institution to which he is assigned and receive compensation in accordance with the rates established by the personnel classification act of 1923. (All other necessary ex-penses incurred in the administration of this act shall be paid out of the appropriations for the penal institutions from which prisoners are paroled, and such appropriations are hereby made available therefor.)

What I am inquiring is, How much is this bill going to

Mr. AUSTIN. I could not answer that question.

RAT.PH E. WILLIAMSON

The bill (S. 2458) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection for a moment I would like to state to him that a bill for the relief of others who suffered losses in the fire referred to in this measure was passed in the Seventieth Congress, but the name of Ralph E. Williamson was inadvertently omitted from the list of the claimants. Twenty-one other claimants have been paid on the same basis on which relief is asked in this case, and therefore the committee has reported this bill for the relief of Mr. Williamson.

We have an affidavit from the claimant stating that he did not receive any insurance on account of this fire. As I stated, 21 other claimants have been paid, and the committee unanimously favor paying Mr. Williamson $565. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $565 to Ralph E. Williamson, as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and heigh used by the War Decses having been appropriated and heigh used by the War Decses having been appropriated. poses having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That before said claim is allowed and paid the Comptroller General of the United States shall make an investigation of said claim to determine the extent and amount of such loss and damage, and such claim shall be adjusted in amount not in excess of the difference between insurance paid, if any, and the amount set out herein and upon certificates issued to said claimant by the said Comptroller General of the United

LOANS TO VETERANS ON ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The bill (S. 1251) relating to the making of loans to veterans upon their adjusted-service certificates, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of the bill [Mr. BARKLEY] about it. It seems to me it is a bill which should be passed. There are veterans living in my State who desire to get loans on their certificates, but they are not allowed to under the restrictions of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when we passed the original bonus act, it did not provide, as I think it should have provided, that all the certificates should bear the same date, so that there would have been no discrimination between those who rushed in to get their certificates and those who were either modest or indifferent about it.

The results were not foreseen until we passed a year or two ago the loan act providing for the lending of 50 per cent of the value of the certificates, and the House intended, and thought they had provided, that the 2-year limitation fixed in the original law should be taken out of the bonus loan act; but it was not, and as the Director of Veterans' Affairs has interpreted the law-and I think it is according to the wording of the statute-the 2-year limitation still

That operates as a penalty against those who did not rush in and get their certificates, many of whom probably never expected to apply for the bonus certificates; but, under the changed circumstances, were required to do so, or felt called on to do so, so they can not obtain loans under set up, and that money is being set aside to retire the

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; under the original bonus act there is a sinking fund provided for the ultimate redemption of all the certificates.

Mr. COPELAND. I think this bill is meritorious and should be passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I sincerely hope it will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection withdrawn? Mr. REED. Mr. President, as will be seen by looking at the report, the bill would entail an immediate cost of $70,-000,000, in addition to the amount we have already spent and are now spending on veterans' loans. The only reason why these men can not get loans now is that they did not apply soon enough for the certificates. We might as well waive all the time limits in the act and provide that everybody who did not apply and has not applied yet may come in and get a loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think that, as a matter of fact, it is to the credit of ex-service men who did not apply, and might never have applied for their bonus certificates, except under changed circumstances? The result of the law, as it is now, is that they are penalized because they did not rush in at first and obtain the certificates provided by the original bonus act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think it is greatly to the credit of those who never applied and who have not applied yet; but I know of my own knowledge that a campaign was run by many Legion posts, most Legion posts, to find applicants for these bonus certificates, that they drummed up the men and urged them to apply. Men who were loath to apply and felt that the country did not owe them anything, were urged to apply, and almost put to shame if they did

I shall have to insist on my objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is the first time I ever heard that statement made. I think probably it is true that some of the Legion posts, recognizing the fact that the average man does not keep in touch with all the acts of Congress, simply took steps to advise them of their rights in the matter, so that they could take advantage of the law if they saw fit to do so

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

The bill (S. 3950) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired there-under, and for other purposes," as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to refer to the bill just passed over.

Is it not a fact, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky, that if a man applied a year and a half ago, in six months from now he can borrow, so that there is no great economy to the Government in postponing payment of the bonus now?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no economy in postponement. Of course, a man who had never applied for a certificate and applies to-day would be entitled, under the law, to a loan in two years. The question is whether we shall compel him to postpone his application because under the circumstances at the time he felt that perhaps he would not take advantage of the bonus law, yet has been compelled to do so under the changed circumstances.

The fact that this might ultimately cost $70,000.000 is not at all pertinent, because the only difference is that under

Mr. COPELAND. Is it not a fact that there is a reserve | the bill a veteran could get his loan now instead of having to wait two years.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. KING. Mr. President, objection was made to the consideration of the bill by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I was speaking under the rule, another bill having been taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now considering Senate bill 3950.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] has an amendment he desires to have considered in this matter, and I ask that the bill be passed over until he has an opportunity so to have it considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 3950 will be passed over.

IMMIGRATION VISAS

The bill (S. 34) to provide for review of the action of consular officers in refusing immigration visas was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who objected to the consideration of the bill, to the measure.

Mr. REED. I feel that I have to object to this. I will say in a word just why I object.

Mr. KING. If the Senator objects, that is all right. I never ask a man to give a reason.

Mr. REED. I am glad to give my reason. There is nothing concealed about it.

Mr. KING. The committee unanimously agreed upon the bill, after an amendment was made transferring the jurisdiction to the State Department.

Mr. REED. Unfortunately, I was not present, or it would not have been unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say to the Senator from Utah that I do not think this bill is practicable. I believe it would be almost impossible of operation. If we undertake to treat the right of admission of aliens as a quasi-judicial matter and give a right of appeal from consular agents to the State Department, we necessarily invite the use of political influence, and we would have every Member of Congress besieged to make an effort to get aliens into the United States.

Mr. REED. Exactly. In self-protection we ought not to pass the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there is to be any discussion, I should want to speak on the bill; but I am willing to pretermit discussion in the face of objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill goes

PLUMBING AND GAS FITTING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3400) to amend an act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act to regulate plumbing and gas fitting in the District of Columbia."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Kansas to explain what this bill would do.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the main purpose of the bill is to authorize the superintendent of plumbing in the District of Columbia to revoke licenses for malpractice or fraud. At the present time he has no authority whatever along that line, and there have been numerous instances of plumbers who have at one time or another secured licenses, and have been proven to be unfit, having been found to be responsible for some bad jobs of plumbing. Yet the authorities have had no control over them. No one is opposing the bill, and it is generally desired by the authorities.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I see that the bill proposes to raise the present rate of $3, the annual license fee for master plumbers, to not less than $25 and not more than $50.

Mr. CAPPER. That rate was fixed over 40 years ago, away back about 1890, I think, and it is out of line with the license rate in all other cities, and nobody is objecting to the increase.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator say that the license fee of $25 to $50 is a normal fee?

Mr. CAPPER. I have investigated that thoroughly. got information as to the license fees required in something over 50 cities. Many of them are as high as $100, and a few are as low as $10. This would give some latitude to the superintendent of plumbing, and we fixed it so that he could make it as low as $25 or as high as $50, as it seemed de-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no effort to fix the rate for plumbing services in the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. Not at all. No one raised any objection to the provision in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. It seems to me that to leave the discretion between $25 and $50 is unwise, and certainly there ought to be an amendment, that when fixed, the fee should remain as decided on until there should be a proper regulation or an ordinance or promulgation of a different fee, because as it is provided, one plumber might be charged $25, and another $50. A fee of $25 might be applied to-day and next week one of $50. It seems to me there ought to be some uniformity, and after a fee is fixed, that it ought not to be capriciously changed, enlarged, or reduced. It ought to be fixed for a given period. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the committee assumed that the superintendent of plumbing would be a man who would be disposed to handle the matter fairly, and who would take no advantage.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows we can not always depend upon the wisdom or the fairness of bureaucrats. shall not object.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not see why we should not fix a definite fee and let it stand, either at $25 or $50. The officials would then have authority to grant or deny a license. To provide that it may be $50 or $25 means that the superintendent may grant A a license for $25 and charge B $50, just as his whim might influence him. That would seem to me to open the way for discrimination and unfairness. Why not fix a fee, say, at $50?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the bill merely gives the commissioners latitude to fix any license fee, not less than $25 nor more than $50. They would not fix different fees for different applicants. They would, within the range fixed, between $25 and $50, have the right to fix the fee.

Mr. BRATTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. RELIEF OF INDIANS IN WASHINGTON, IDAHO, AND MONTANA

The bill (S. 1523) for the relief of certain tribes or bands of Indians in the States of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the bill would cost the Government of the United States sixteen and a half million dollars. It is urgently requested by the Indian Commissioner that it should not be passed. It would give compensation to a lot of Indians for the violation of a treaty to which they were not parties. I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3879) to amend an act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555), entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims," was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I object to that measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 939) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2842) to authorize construction of the Casper-Alcova division, North Platte project, Nebraska-Wyoming, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I request that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 4080) to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEBERT. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 3223) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. INDIAN HIGH SCHOOL, SHANNON COUNTY, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 2340) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a brief explanation of this bill has been requested by several Senators.

It is really an effort at a new educational idea for the Indians. I am one of those who think that most of the money spent under the present system of educating the Indians is lost. We take them away from their relatives, away from their reservations, away from their natural environment. and send them to some far-away place and keep them in modern homes, steam-heated houses, and give them the idea that all they need is to get an education in the arts and that they can then go home and make a living. The fact of the matter is that they go home and find themselves incompetent to meet existing conditions. They find themselves out of touch with all their friends and relatives and are lost on the reservation.

This is an effort to get some cooperation in an Indian county which has a central school board. There is only one school board in the county. It is a county system. larger part of the land is still held by the Indians, but there are at least two or three hundred white settlers there. It is the belief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the county school board that they can get together on a central school in the county which would teach vocational training mainly instead of having imposed upon the Indians a lot of things which are not useful to them at all. The school would be attended by the whites and the Indians alike and the expense borne jointly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the commissioner reports that he is opposed to the bill. I have had no opportunity to study the matter. I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

SENATORIAL CONTEST

The resolution (S. Res. 60) to hear and determine the contest of George M. Pritchard against Josiah W. Bailey for a seat in the Senate from the State of North Carolina was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed

WAR-RISK INSURANCE CASES, SOUTH CAROLINA

The bill (S. 3145) providing for the appointment of commissioners to hear cases arising under contracts of war-risk insurance in the district courts for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Over.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the objection until I can make a brief explanation of the bill? Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. BRATTON. According to information furnished the Judiciary Committee, there are about 1,500 cases pending in the Federal courts of South Carolina brought by ex-service man upon their war-risk insurance contracts. There are only three Federal judges. The result is that the cases can not be tried. They are in cold storage, so to speak. The bill authorizes the three Federal judges acting together to appoint a commissioner who shall sit at such times and places throughout the State as they may fix; that upon consent of the parties-that is to say, the veteran and the United States—the commissioner shall have jurisdiction to hear the case without a jury and render judgment subject to review by the Federal judge. It provides a salary of $6,000 a year for the commissioner. The act expires December 31, 1934

I know of no better other way through which that volume of business can be dispatched than the one provided.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator what are the peculiar conditions which require a provision of this kind for the State of South Carolina more than for any other State?

Mr. BRATTON. Probably the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] can explain the situation. The fact is that there are about 1,500 cases pending on the dockets of the three district courts, brought by veterans to recover upon their insurance contracts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why does not a like condition exist in the State of New Mexico or in my State?

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina, who introduced the bill, can explain the facts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me if we get along very well in the more populous States, they ought to do very well in the State of South Carolina where, my recollection is, they have three Federal judges.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, we do have three Federal judges, but the condition down there was disclosed by a petition from the lawyers to the effect that on account of the congested condition of the courts it was impossible for them to reach these cases, so that there have accumulated 1,500 such cases. The ordinary processes of law, where these cases go before the court, entail an expense and delay that could be avoided and a great saving made to the Federal Government if such a provision as this were incorporated in the law.

The measure was introduced at the instance of the judges and of the members of the bar of my State. These cases are worthy and ought to be heard, but on account of the congestion arising from numerous causes, one of the most prolific being the prohibition question, it is impossible for them to reach these cases on the roster. This legislation was suggested on the ground that it would limit the expense and clear up the calendar so that after this congestion is over the courts might carry on without so great a loss of time and at very much less expense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is no answer whatever to the inquiry as to why this legislation should be enacted for the State of South Carolina where the conditions are apparently no different from what they are in every other State. If we pass this special legislation for South Carolina how can we escape doing the same thing for the State of Georgia or North Carolina or Montana or any other State? If this is a condition which exists in South Carolina without any peculiar conditions and circumstances there, we ought to have a provision covering the entire United States.

Mr. SMITH. It seems to me the representative of any State in the discharge of his duties here ought to want to expedite business in his State; he ought to want to reduce Federal expenditures, and he ought to want to have a speedy disposition of worthy cases that may arise in his State. I do not know what condition exists in other States. It is the duty of those representing those States to know.

I assure my colleagues that this is an urgent condition in my State. Of course I am not aware of just the condition in other States. It may be that the conditions in other States are not parallel. The congested condition exists in my State, as I have stated, and on account of that fact I introduced the bill, went before the committee, and voluminous evidence was furnished to indicate the urgent necessity for the proposed legislation for my State.

As a matter of fact, I would be very glad, as every other Senator would be, if relief could be gotten for other States. I would be glad to do what I could to bring relief to any State in a similar condition. I am not familiar with the conditions in other States, but if such conditions do exist in other States I should be only too glad to join in getting relief and saving the expense that is necessarily incurred in jury trials and regular court procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether any question arose during the consideration of the bill as to the power to confer what is apparently judicial authority on some one else than the courts.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; we gave consideration to that feature of the bill. We had it briefed at some length. The conclusion was reached that where the Congress authorizes the court to appoint a commissioner it is equivalent to Congress itself creating the tribunal, and that accordingly the constitutional provision which provides that all judicial power shall be vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may create is not impinged upon. The effect of this measure is that Congress creates the tribunal in the nature of a court, although the appointment is made by a Federal judge pursuant to authority granted by Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator from New Mexico has investigated the question, I should be disposed to rely on his conclusion; but the thought occurred to me that it might be questionable whether this is not violative of the Constitution, which provides that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may create.

Mr. BRATTON. That question occurred to me and to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], with whom I served on the subcommittee. We reached the conclusion, after investigation, that Congress may authorize the appointment of a commissioner in the manner here proposed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I remember offering a measure some years ago, with considerable trepidation, providing for the appointment of commissioners merely to receive pleas in the so-called bootleg cases involving violations of the prohibition law, and another bill authorizing them to receive testimony and make recommendations to the court. The Judiciary Committee held, and I thought quite properly, that any attempt to create a court of that character-and the bill now before us goes further than the bill to which I have referred-was beyond the constitutional authority of Congress. It seems to me that this is setting up a court which is not recognized and for which there is no constitutional warrant. I shall feel constrained to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, allow me to say that I regret that I could not have been present at the time this matter was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. I can not conceive of any reason why this should be applicable only to the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BRATTON. That is true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall feel obliged to object to the consideration of the bill while we are engaged in the consideration of unobjected bills. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that it would probably expedite the passage of the bill, if it is entitled to passage, if it were recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, where the matter might be further considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made, and the bill has gone over.

Mr. PITTMAN. Over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well.
Mr. COPELAND. I happened to be present during the hearings on this bill. As it is presented to the Senate it conforms to what is known as the model bill which has been adopted in many States in the Union. It is a form of legislation which is regarded of tremendous importance to the protection of society. I may say that sportsmen of the country, those who are interested in the legal and proper use of firearms, have given their support to the measure. I hope no member of the Senate will interfere with the passage of a bill which has to do with the protection of society. I am sure that is the sort of measure this is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada insist upon his objection?

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the bill be passed over. I have not had an opportunity to read it and consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, unless there is some agreement reached touching the resolution, it may require a long time for its consideration. I think an agreement may be reached, and suggest that it be passed over for the present.

I would like to make this additional statement. The resolution has been pending on the calendar for a prolonged period. It is desirable to secure action on it just as soon as possible. This is the resolution, I will say to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], which he and I were discussing personally a few moments ago.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas if anyone interposed an objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; and the Senator well knows that I shall not object to its consideration, but I think it would be necessary to offer an amendment. I would propose to relieve the Presiding Officer of the Senate from the embarrassment of selecting the committee, so I should move to strike out the words "appointed by the Vice President" and insert in lieu thereof "elected by the Senate."

Mr. McNARY. I would suggest that the resolution be passed over to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was the suggestion that I myself made, but the Senator seemed disposed to force the issue under the circumstances.

Mr. McNARY. Oh, no; I did not force it. I asked the Senator gently if anyone objected to it or wanted it passed

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am ready to have it taken up now.

Mr. McNARY. I am willing to pass it over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not asking that it go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

PALO VERDE VALLEY, CALIF.

The bill (S. 4443) for emergency relief of Palo Verde Valley, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Palo Verde Valley is a tributary really to the Colorado River. The Colorado River has caused it vast difficulties in the past. The people of Palo Verde Valley, unfortunately, are absolutely broke. Their farms have been sold for delinquent taxes. This bill has passed the other House, and the report of the House committee on the bill, Senators will find, accurately describes the situation. It is an emergent measure. It must be passed very quickly or it will be of no consequence at all. The Colorado is coming down now, and within the next couple of weeks something must be done. This is the endeavor of the department to afford some relief.

The difficulty arises not from the fault of the people of the Palo Verde Valley but from construction work of the United States at Yuma Dam. They have expended in that valley some $2,000,000 and are at the end of their resources. Now they ask that $70,000 be transferred to the reclamation fund, that an authorization be made therefor, and that aid be extended them. It is one of the most appealing cases of which I know. It is an emergent case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I inquire of the Senator from California if the injury is due to the Yuma Dam why is it not a proper charge against the Yuma project?

Mr. JOHNSON. I doubt very much if it is a proper charge against the Yuma project. It is due, undoubtedly, in part to the construction of the Yuma Dam, and that being a United States construction work, and that is one of the reasons I give for asking that aid be extended by the United States Government. Would the Senator from Montana do me the kindness to read the report of the House committee in respect to the matter? It is very brief and it shows conclusively the situation there existing. I quote from it as

The levees must be repaired, raised, and strengthened. No work has been done upon them for several years past, but fortunately those have been years of low flow in the river. This year records an unusually heavy snowfall in the headwaters of the Rocky represents the farmers, is bankrupt, its treasury is empty, its credit is gone, and it has defaulted upon its bonds. The people themselves are without means to do this necessary work. They, too, are without credit. Over 30,000 acres went delinquent and were sold for taxes last year.

I know the conditions that exist there and the necessity for relief. I do trust that the bill may be passed, because if delay shall be occasioned disaster, I think, is certain to

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to protect the Palo Verde Valley, Calif., from overflow and destruction by the Colorado River floods, to be transferred to the reclamation fund and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of repairing and reconstructing the levee system on the Colorado River in front of the said Palo Verde Valley, to be immediately available. available.

REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS BY WATER THROUGH PANAMA CANAL.

The bill (S. 4491) amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from California think in view of the importance of this measure that it should be taken up to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON. Unless the Senator from New York is anxious to have the bill taken up, I think it so very important that it might go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Commerce, and, after protracted hearings, was reshaped and as reported the objectionable features which had been found have been eliminated.

I think it is a very necessary bill, and that is the feeling of the shipping interests and also of the shippers on the Pacific coast. I hope the Senator will not interpose any objection.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] has any objection to this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I can not say as to that, as he is not a member of the committee. I do not see, however, how he could possibly have any objection. It is designed simply to fill in the gap which has been found in the shipping act; it has to do with the establishment of uniform rates so that no shipper will be imposed upon by secret rebates. It follows the usual policy of our country as regards the avoidance of rebates by transportation companies, and I hope the Senator from Utah will permit the bill to pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the passage of the bill will result in the creation of a monopoly and prevent legitimate and proper competition.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the very purpose of the bill is to avoid such a condition, I may say to my friend, and I am sure if he will study it he will realize that it has been worked out very carefully and that he can find no fault with it.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation as to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The purpose of the bill is well outlined. I am sure, in the report which the Senator will find accompanying the bill. It is intended, as I have said, to prevent secret rebates and to provide for the filing of actual rates to be charged to all shippers in place of the fictitious rates which are now established. The shipping line is required to file with the board what it purposes to charge in the way of rates on commodities transported from the coast. Those rate schedules are looked over by the board and publicly promulgated in order that every shipper may know exactly | what the rate is on oranges or apples, or whatever the commodity may be. There has been a cutthroat operation of shipping on the coast which it has been sought to overcome by various steamship conferences, but under this bill the board in Washington is given authority to receive the schedules of rates, to file them, and to give publicity to them so that every shipper may know that he is exactly on the same plane with every other shipper.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Suppose that some person in Boston desired to ship a few carloads of fish or any other commodity to New York or to Philadelphia, would be come within the provisions of this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. No. It refers merely to intercoastal traffic.

Mr. KING. To purely intercoastal traffic?

Mr. COPELAND. To purely intercoastal traffic: it has nothing to do with the coastwise trade.

Mr. KING. Nor with shipping on the Great Lakes?

Mr. COPELAND. Nor with shipping on the Great Lakes, but simply shipping through the Panama Canal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act-

Any schedule so rejected by the board shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

Any violation of any provision of this section by a common carrier by water in intercoastal commerce shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for each act of violation and/or for each day such violation continues, to be recovered by the United States in a civil action.

CHARLES C. BENNETT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1673) for the relief of Charles C. Bennett, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$7,174.60" and insert "$5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government"; and on page 2, line 3, after the name "North Carolina," to insert the following proviso:

Provided. That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles C. Bennett, of the city of Candor, N. C., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for bodily injuries sustained by him on December 16, 1927, when an automobile in which he was riding was in collision with a reconnaissance truck of the United States Army, the said truck being one of a fleet of trucks traveling toward Fort Bragg, N. C., driven by Pvt. Thomas C. Robertson, of Fort Bragg, N. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be diemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS

The bill (S. 4495) amending section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I should be glad if the Senator from Wyoming would explain the purpose of this bill

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, we have in Wyoming a number of oil fields where the production of oil is now very small. This bill would permit people to file stock-raising homesteads within these fields.

Mr. BRATTON. Is the bill limited to Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. No; it is not limited to Wyoming.

Mr. BRATTON. Is it a general bill?

Mr. CAREY. It is a general bill. I may say that it has the approval of the Interior Department and that it protects the Government in that the Secretary of the Interior will have to approve of any applications for homestead entries before they could be granted and also the permittee or the lessee would have to give his approval before filing could be approved.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to study the bill. I should like to examine it before we pass it. So I ask that it go over for to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BRATTON subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of Order of Business 653, Senate bill 4495, introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey]. Since then he has explained the measure to my entire satisfaction. I withdraw the objection and ask that we may revert to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not object to the bill if it applies only to the State of Wyoming, but I am not so sure that I would wish the bill to apply to the State in which I reside.

. Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why he objects?

Mr. KING. I might or might not object. I am not sure whether it would be desirable to the people of my State.

Mr. CAREY. The bill permits filing upon lands which are not now subject to entry. The State and the Government are amply protected. All these applications have to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill exempts naval oil reserves and also protects the permittee who may have a mineral lease on the land in providing that his consent must be obtained before the homestead application is approved by the Secretary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Do the mineral rights pass to the homesteader under the bill?

Mr. CAREY. The mineral rights are retained by the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. That is one objection I would have to the principle involved. I think, of course, where a man obtains title to land the minerals ought to go with it; but I shall not object. If, upon examination, I find that the bill ought not to be applicable to my State, or that the people do not desire it, I shall move to reconsider merely for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. CAREY. I think the Senator's people will approve of the provisions of this bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), be amended to read as follows:

amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), be amended to read as follows:

"From and after December 29, 1916, it shall be lawful for any person qualified to make entry under the homestead laws of the United States to make a stock-raising homestead entry for not exceeding 640 acres of unappropriated unreserved public lands in reasonable compact form: Provided, however, That the land so entered shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as 'stock-raising lands': Provided further, That for the purposes of this section lands withdrawn or reserved solely as valuable for oil or gas shall not be deemed to be appropriated or reserved: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to naval petroleum reserves and naval oil-shale reserves: And provided further, That should said lands be within the limits of the geological structure of a producing oil or gas field entry can only be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, in the absence of objection after due notice by the lessee or permittee, and any patent therefor shall contain a reservation to the United States of all minerals in said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same."

ALBERT GONZALES

The bill (S. 1594) for the relief of Albert Gonzales was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk may read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Albert Gonzales the sum of $75 per month, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of injuries suffered by him on July 28, 1929, while a student at the citizens' military training camp at Fort Bliss, Tex., said monthly payments to be paid through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission: Provided, That if, and when, Congress enacts general legislation providing compensation or damages to persons injured while attending citizens' training camps that the said Albert Gonzales, in lieu of compensation herein provided, will hereafter take only said benefits as shall have been provided in said act for similar cases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think there is a misapprehension upon the part of the Senator from New Mexico. I made no objection. I simply made an inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he does not regard this legislation as setting up a precedent that will commit the Government of the United States hereafter in all of the citizens' training camps and all organizations of the Guards to be liable for any misadventure, any accident that may occur?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Utah that this young man is totally blind. He has been so for almost three years. He is a young man, about 20 or 22 years old. He will spend the rest of his lifetime totally blind as the result of an injury suffered while attending a military training camp at Fort Bliss. The Secretary of War has recommended passage of the bill in the amended form.

It seems to me that we may well resolve every doubt in favor | of this young man who lost his eyesight and must go through

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was the injury received while the soldier was in the line of duty?

Mr. BRATTON. He was attending the training camp. They were enjoying recreation at a swimming pool at Fort Bliss. It was a part of the activities at Fort Bliss. Just how the accident occured or what the producing or contributing cause was may be somewhat doubtful; but the indisputable fact is that he suffered the accident while there. lost his eyesight as a result of it, and is totally blind. I appeal to the Senator to resolve every doubt in favor of this claimant, and let the boy have what little this bill accords him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the reason why my attention was challenged to the case is because in my own State only a few months ago, perhaps a year ago, a young man was killed while serving in the same capacity as this young man, and the father wrote me about the matter. The father was largely dependent upon the young man for support. I made inquiry of all the departments, and was advised that the Government was under no obligation, and that if the Government assumed the responsibility for all of the accidents and injuries that occur in the training camps, and so forth, it would be highly improper. So I communicated with the father, and told him that there was no liability whatever upon the part of the Government, and there was no compensation due him.

Mr. BRATTON. Probably there is no technical liability; but, in my judgment, a young man totally blind resulting from the accident I have outlined is entitled to, and I know he will have, the sympathy of the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABANDONED INDIAN-SCHOOL SITE, ZEBA, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 208) to authorize transfer of the abandoned Indian-school site and building at Zeba, Mich., to the L'Anse Band of Lake Superior Indians, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by deed, without cost, to the L'Anse Band of Lake Superior Indians, for community meetings and other like purposes, the abandoned Indian-school site and improvements thereon located at Zeba, Mich., embracing approximately three-fourths of an acre of land within the east half of couthest questions. southeast quarter of southwest quarter of northwest quarter of section 19, township 51 north, range 32 west, Michigan meridian:

Provided, That said conveyance shall be made to three members of the band duly elected by said Indians as trustees for the band and their successors in office.

JOHN E. CLICK

The bill (S. 4372) for the relief of John E. Click was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John E. Click, chief clerk of the administrative office of the Alaska division, Bureau of Indian Affairs, with headquarters now at Juneau, Alaska, is hereby relieved of reimbursing the United States for credit to the appropriation "Education of Natives of Alaska, 1930-31" the sum of $261.82 paid to the Alaska Steamship Co., of Seattle, Wash., from said appropriation for transporting his personal and household goods from Seattle, Wash., to Juneau, Alaska, upon permanent change of station, under an authorization issued by the Department of the Interior.

SHERBURNE MERCANTILE CO.

The bill (H. R. 4143) for the relief of the Sherburne Mercantile Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, why is the Government to pay this mercantile company?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, this bill covers supplies furnished by the Sherburne Mercantile Co. to the Indians at the request of the Government. I held up the claim before the Indian Affairs Committee for a while, and had it investigated; but the department recommends it and states that they ordered the supplies from the mercantile company at different times, and that the Government is

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Who acted for the Government?

Mr. WHEELER. The Indian agent out there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was he authorized by the department?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes. He is the Indian agent in charge.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He is not authorized to contract for supplies, is he?

Mr. WHEELER. These were all small supplies, ordered over quite a period of time, things that were necessary to be had for the Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has investigated the claim?

Mr. WHEELER. Very carefully, indeed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, why should not this be a charge against the Indian Bureau? That is, why should it not be paid from the appropriation made to the Indian Bureau?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, we do not pay claims out of the appropriation for the bureau. We pay them out of the General Treasury. We can not appropriate, for the payment of a claim of this kind, money that is already appropriated for running the department. We must appropriate it out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. The point I am making is that it ought to have been included in the Indian appropriation bill, for this reason: We are trying to determine just what the Indian Bureau is receiving from the Government and what it has collected from the Indians. If we pay claims upon the side the Indian Bureau will not be charged with this, and the expenses of the bureau will be apparently that much less than they really are.

Mr. WHEELER. It is possibly true that it should have been included in the Indian appropriation bill, but it would not make a particle of difference. I mean the claim is a just claim of the Sherburne Mercantile Co. for supplies ordered-as I recall the evidence before the committeeemergency supplies ordered for the Indians during the winter season. The company furnished them and they never were paid for them. They put in a claim and it was checked up carefully, both by the department and by the Committees on Indian Affairs both of the House and of the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if he has investigated to determine whether this will be a reimbursable charge or a charge upon the funds of the Indians?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think it is reimbursable at all against the Indians. As a matter of fact these Blackfeet Indians have very little money, if any at all. We are constantly appropriating money for them out of the general fund.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $725.80 to the Sherburne Mercantile Co., of Browning, Mont., in full settlement of their claim against the Government for supplies furnished Indians under the jurisdiction of the Blackfeet Agency during the fiscal year 1918 and 1919.

CROW INDIAN TRIBAL COUNCIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8031) to provide for expenses of the Crow Indian Tribal Council and authorized delegates of the tribe, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to expend $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds standing to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians in the Treasury of the United States for expenses of the Fort Peck Indian Tribal Council and authorized delegates of the tribe.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds standing to the credit of the Crow Indians in the Treasury of the United States for expenses of the Crow Indian Tribal Council and authorized delegates of the tribe.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to expend $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds standing to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians in the Treasury of the United States for expenses of the Fort Peck Indian Tribal Council and authorized delegates of the tribe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Montana, who is a member of the Indian Affairs Committee, whether $5,000 for the expenses of the delegates is not an unusually large sum?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that this is a general appropriation. It does not cover one specific trip down here, but is to cover several years, so that when the delegates do come down here they will have the necessary amount to enable them to come. They will not spend it in one year, or possibly two years; but it is appropriated so that they will have it available in case of necessity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for expenses of the Crow and Fort Peck Indian Tribal Councils and authorized delegates of such tribes."

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF DISTRICT TAXICABS OWNERS

The bill (S. 99) to amend section 8 of the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have the author of the bill, or the Senator reporting it, state what liability is imposed on taxicab owners in the District of Columbia by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, there is no liability fixed. It is left to the commissioners to try to protect the people of the District of Columbia. A great many accidents have been caused in the District by taxicabs running around. This year there were 1,750 accidents; and at the present time there is no financial responsibility for anybody in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill requires the operators of taxicabs to file bonds?

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In what amount? Is that left with the commissioners?

Mr. KEAN. That is to be decided by the District Commissioners, who are responsible. We can not very well decide here what bonds they ought to file. That is up to the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What security is required now—any?

Mr. KEAN. None.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, to strike out lines 9 and 10, and on page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive, in the following words:

Par. 2a. That the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to require any and all corporations, companies, associations, joint-stock companies or associations, partnerships, and persons, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by any court whatsoever, operating, controlling, or managing any motor cabs or other vehicles for the conveyance of persons within the District of Columbia for hire, except such common carriers as have been expressly exempted from the jurisdiction of the commission, to satisfy the commission of their ability to discharge any claims

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 974), be amended by adding a new paragraph, numbered 2a, to read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee, and is the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma objects, and the bill will be passed over.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the order under which we are proceeding with the calendar be suspended at 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, Mr. President, I should like to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 738, House Joint Resolution 341.

Let me remark that this is a joint resolution which is intended to exempt the locators of mining claims from the necessity of doing assessment work for the year ending June 30, 1932; and unless action is taken upon the matter immediately it will be of no avail whatever.

Mr. REED. What is the number of the joint resolution? Mr. WALSH of Montana. House Joint Resolution 341.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the joint resolution be read. The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, H. J. Res. 341, providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed, or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the fiscal year from July 1, 1931, to July 1, 1932.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, under the law $100 worth of work must be done on each claim each year. The year ends on June 30. By reason of the distressed condition many locators have found it impossible to do the work this year. If the legislation is not passed, they must do the work within the current month.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President. I received a letter just this morning, which I regret I did not bring into the Chamber with me, showing the urgent necessity of the passage of this measure. I trust it will be passed before the 1st of July.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was considered by the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill went over on objection. INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ARCHITECTS

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INVALIDATION OF INDICTMENTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 933) to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. How would that change existing law? It seems to be a measure of some importance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have just been reading the report. Apparently the only change is that it provides that an indictment shall not be invalidated if there were present in the grand-jury room a clerk or stenographer to assist the district attorney. That is the only change.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct, Mr. President. The matter had very careful consideration on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as

MOTHER'S DAY

The resolution (S. Res. 186) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I would like to inquire what is the occasion for passing a resolution calling for an expression on Mother's Day? I think we ought to assume that the American people have enough love and respect and reverence for mothers without a resolution being adopted. I would like to have an explanation. Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed

RILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 436) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, in respect to the definition of intoxicating liquor was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

CLAIMS OF SEMINOLE INDIANS

The bill (S. 4340) authorizing the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma to hear and determine certain claims of the Seminole Nation or Tribe of Indians, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection so that I may make a state-

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I withhold the objection. I notice there is an adverse report on the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will state the facts in this case. The Seminole Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma had at one time a very large tract of land that was allotted to them, save two small parcels reserved for school purposes. One was the Emahaka tract and the other was the Mekasukay tract.

Oil was discovered in that section of the country, and immediately the oil companies desired to get possession of those two school tracts. The Government, acting through the Indian Bureau, desired to lease the lands for oil purposes. The Seminole Tribe did not desire to have the land leased; they desired to keep the tracts for school purposes. At that time there were schools on both tracts.

Under the law and under the treaty the Seminole Tribe had the right to dispose of the lands as they saw proper, of course under the supervision of the Government. The Government had to be consulted, and approve transfers or conveyances.

When the Indian Bureau could not lease the lands because the Indians would not sign the conveyances, on two or three different occasions the Government appointed a special chief for the particular purpose of executing a lease. The chiefs would not serve, they would not execute the leases, so later on, the department desiring to lease the lands, and not being able to get a chief appointed who would serve and sign the leases, the Government took it upon itself to approve the leases. The leases were therefore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the oil companies went upon the lands and discovered oil.

Because of these lands being leased, and because oil was discovered, the schools have been closed. They are surrounded by oil wells and, of course, the pumping and the noise of drilling after oil was discovered and wells were opened made it practically impossible to continue the schools there. So the policy of the bureau, over the protest of the Indians, has resulted in the forced leasing of their lands and the closing of the schools.

The Indians have not accepted the money, and they will not accept the money, which has been tendered to them. They desire, of course, to go into court and present their claim to the court, to have the clouds upon these two tracts of land removed.

This bill would simply give them the right to go into the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma and to present their equitable claim based upon treaty rights with the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. I will take it up with the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST SINGING OF AMERICA

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing of America, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That this one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing of America be commended to all citizens for appropriate recognition in connection with the celebration of Independence Day on the 4th day of July, 1932.

Whereas the 4th day of July, 1932, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing in Park Street Church, Boston, Mass., by a chorus of children, of the great and thrilling patriotic hymn America, written by the Rev. Samuel Francis Smith; and

Smith; and
Whereas this significant event already is promised splendid recognition at Detroit, Mich., where the contributions of patriotic school children have provided a beautiful monument to the hymn and to its author, which will be appropriately dedicated upon Independence Day; and
Whereas it is the sense of the Congress that there should be general observance of this anniversary because of the incalculable inspiration which has touched the life of the Nation through the countless millions of voices, in peace and in war, which have sung "My country 'tis of thee" across the century.

MARY E. STERRINS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 361) for the relief of Mary E. Stebbins, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000 as compensation" and to insert in lieu thereof "$50 per month, in an amount not to exceed $1,500, in full settlement of all claims against the Government," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary E. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PIPE LINES

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 741. House bill 7305, to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I know something about this bill and that it would provide for about a half a million dollars' worth of work to be done immediately, most of which is going to be performed by common labor. It will be of immediate assistance in the work of finding employment for people now out of work here in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to grant permission to the Gulf Refining Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Texas and registered and existing under the laws of the State of Texas and registered and doing business in the District of Columbia, to lay down, construct, maintain, and use not more than 10 pipe lines for the carriage of petroleum and petroleum products from a point or points within square 662 in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, said square being bounded on the north by R Street, on the south by S Street, on the east by Water Street and South Capitol Street, and on the west by Half Street (west), in and through Water Street, South Capitol Street, in an easterly direction to lot 4 of square south of square 708, which lot is bounded on the north by lands of the Standard Oil Co., on the south by S Street, extended, on the east by Anacostia River, and on the west by South Capitol Street.

RAPID CITY INDIAN SCHOOL LAND

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, objection was made by the Senator from Montana to the consideration of House bill 9254, to authorize the exchange of a part of the Rapid City Indian School land for a part of the Pennington County Poor Farm, South Dakota.

The Interior Department has looked into this matter, the Secretary reports favorably on this bill, and states that the Government would get several times the advantage in the exchange. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up again. The Senator from Montana has no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, an irregular tract of 84.4 acres, more or less, of the Rapid City Indian School land, located in the northwest quarter section 3, township 1 north, range 7 east of the Black Hills meridian, South Dakota, for 38.09 acres, more or less, of the Pennington County Poor Farm, in the adjoining north half of the southwest quarter of the same section, including all improvements thereon; transfer of title to the Indian School reserve land to be accomplished by deed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator states that the Government would get the advantage of the trade. Is the Indian the man who will get the disadvantage?

Mr. NORBECK. Of course the Government represents the Indian in the matter. It is a Government school for the benefit of the Indians.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, KENTUCKY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are some bridge bills on the calendar which can not be reached in the ordinary course before 2 o'clock, and they are matters of such urgency that I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 765 and Calendar 766.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

BOARD OF ROAD COMMISSIONERS, ALASKA

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent. out of order, to take up Calendar No. 805, Senate bill 4525, providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the Board of Road Commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The reason why I make this request is that the select committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the Alaskan Railroad came to the conclusion that it was wise to transfer the trails in Alaska from the War Department to the Interior Department. It presented the matter to the War Department, the Interior Department, and the President, and the three are agreed that this transfer should be made. We are anxious to have it made, because the travel for the coming summer will soon begin.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the Board of Road Commissioners in the Territory of Alaska, and upon the Secretary of War, as provided for in the act of January 27, 1905 (ch. 277, sec. 2, 33 Stat. 616), as amended by the act of May 14, 1906 (ch. 2458, sec. 2, 34 Stat. 192), and acts supplemental thereto, and amendatory thereof, are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior, and shall hereafter be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, or under his direction, by such officer or officers, as may be designated by him.

Szc. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall execute or cause to be executed all laws pertaining to the construction and maintenance of roads and trails and other works in Alaska, heretofore administered by said board of road commissioners under the direction of the Secretary of War; and all appropriations heretofore made, and now available, or that hereafter may be made, for expenditure by said board for meeting the cost of such work in the Territory of Alaska, are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, to be thereafter administered in accordance with the provisions of this act; and the said board is directed to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior all equipment, materials, supplies, papers, maps, and documents, or other property utilized in the exercise of such powers, for the use of the said Secretary in the administration of the construction and maintenance of roads, tramways, ferries, bridges, and trails, and other works in the Territory of Alaska, heretofore administered by said board.

That with the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Interior shall have power, by order or regulation, to distribute the duties and authority hereby transferred, and appropriations pertaining thereto, as he may deem proper to accomplish a more economical and effective organization thereof, and to make rules and regulations governing the use of roads, trails, and other works, including the fixing and collection of tolls where deemed necessary and advisable in the public interest.

ESTATE OF ANTON W. FISCHER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2960) for the relief of the estate of Anton W. Fischer, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Anton W. Fischer, late of Owatonna, Minn., the sum of $275.98, under existing rules and regulations, said amount having been illegally collected from said estate, as stated by letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue dated February 7, 1923.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION OF NATIVES OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The bill (S. 4425) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an explanation of this bill.

INCREASE IN BANKING FACILITIES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 4412) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal reserve banks and of national banking associations to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, realizing the immediate importance of considering an appropriation bill which has already been reported and in the provisions of which we have provided for a reduction of governmental expenditures. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business, to give a place to the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill (H. R. 11267).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to inquire if the bill to which the Senator from Washington just referred is the bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government, including economies?

Mr. JONES. It is.

Mr. BLAINE. It is not my intention to object, but I suggest that there ought to be a quorum present, and so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill may be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will proceed to read the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me make just a brief statement with reference to the bill. The amount carried in the bill as it passed the House was $20,000,000. We have already by resolution provided for a reduction of $500,000 of that amount, so that there is really left in the bill $19 --714,869. Of this amount there are items which we consider as really House matters, with which the Senate never interferes at all, amounting to $8,178,924. That leaves $11,535,945 that we are really to consider.

We have not been ordered to reduce the total amount of the bill by 10 per cent, the practice we have followed heretofore; but 10 per cent of that sum would be $1,153,594.50. Reductions made by the Senate committee in reporting the bill amount to $1,205,044, or several thousand dollars over the 10 per cent reduction plan which we have been following. That is the first part of the bill. The bill is divided, I may say, into two parts. One relates to the regular appropriations ordinarily carried in the legislative appropriation bill. The other part is the economy program upon which we have entered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say that the statement just made by the chairman of the committee about there being more than a 10 per cent reduction in the bill is correct. That idea has been carried out just as he stated. It is entirely satisfactory so far as I am concerned. and I hope the amendments reported by the committee will he adopted

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think it will not be inappropriate for me to express the hope that we would like to pass the bill just as speedily as we possibly can. Every Senator, of course, knows the condition of affairs, and I am sure that everyone is just as anxious as I am to have the bill disposed of as rapidly as possible.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Senate-Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper," on page 8, line 19, before the word "at." to strike out "30" and insert "34," so as to read:

Laborers, 3 at $1,320 each, 34 at $1,260 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, at the end of line 21, to change the total appropriation for the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate from $247,064 to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses of the Senate," on page 9, at the end of line 17, to strike out "$13,000" and insert "$7,960," so as to read:

For maintaining, exchanging, and equipping motor vehicles for carrying the mails and for official use of the offices of the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, $7,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "labor," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$100,-000," so as to read:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, after the words "hundred words," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to read:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 16, to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That except in the case of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation no part of this appropriation shall be expended for services, personal, professional, or otherwise, in excess of the rate of $3,600 per annum: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the subsistence expense act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, at this point I desire to offer a committee amendment which was overlooked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 25, strike out "$60,-340" and insert "$54,306," so as to read:

For reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate, payable in equal monthly installments, $54,306.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 6, after the word "Senate," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to read:

For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "House of Representatives—Office of Doorkeeper," on page 17, line 16, after the figures "$2,760," to strike out "and $420 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent," so as to read:

Assistant superintendent of document room, $2,760.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this was an amendment put in by the committee. These items refer to the House work and the House proceedings. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] was especially interested in the amendment. I want to say that it is the general practice of the Senate not to interfere with matters in the House as the House does not interfere with matters connected with the operations of the Senate. However desirable the amendment might be, I really trust that the Senate will not agree to it. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that that is on account of the system of relations between the House and the Senate. I think it would be unwise for us to put in such an amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington feels that way about it, I shall not insist upon the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 11, after the designation "Chief Justice," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

For purchase of books and for periodicals for the law library, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $40,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to inquire what has been the appropriation in past years, under the direction of the Chief Justice of the United States, for the purchase of books for the library of the Supreme Court?

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the last bill provided an appropriation of $50,000. We thought they could slack up on the purchase of law books this year to the extent of $10,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Without any disposition to prolong the discussion, I desire to say that it seems to me improper to hamper the Supreme Court of the United States, a coordinate branch of the Government, which has no political ! influence and can not secure a dollar by its own efforts. To say the least, noblesse oblige has fled when we begin to hamper a coordinate branch, to wit, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the purchase of law books for its use.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee was informed that the price of law books had decreased materially and that the Supreme Court would be able to purchase about the same number of law books for $40,000 as they have formerly purchased for $50,000.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a good explanation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think in all probability that this appropriation could be cut to $25,000 instead of $45,000. It is probable that the Supreme Court can get along with a considerable less number of law books for their law library. I think if one goes through the library he would realize that to be so.

That item is to provide new publications, a majority of which are probably never looked at at all by the Justices of the Supreme Court. I would rather see a greater reduction in items of this character instead of taking 10 per cent off the salaries of employees who are only making $600, $800, or $1,200 a year. It would work less detrimentally to reduce items of this character than in such a heartless way to reduce the compensation of employees who are only earning salaries in many cases of a thousand or eleven hundred or twelve hundred dollars a year.

I have not had an opportunity to study the bill, but I understand it proposes a flat reduction in compensation of Federal employees of 10 per cent, regardless of the salary now received. If there is any such condition that necessitates or justifies such a radical and drastic action as that, then I think, in all justice, salaries should be decreased upon a graduated basis. The salary of an employee who is now receiving $1,200 a year should not be cut in equal percentage with the salary of the employee receiving $5,000 a year, or $10,000 a year, or $20,000 a year. So I think if we are going to cut by 10 per cent the salaries of employees now receiving such small salaries, we had better eliminate some of the items of the character now under consideration.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will yield in a moment. If the whole appropriation in this instance were eliminated, no one would be hurt, no one would be injured; but when we begin to cut the salaries of those who are earning the minimum to the extent of 10 per cent a year, we are going to inflict some hardships and some deprivations and very serious injury not only on the persons drwing such salaries but on others who are dependent more or less upon them.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator think that a graduated scale of reduction, commencing at 5 per cent and going as high as 15 per cent, would be preferable?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think it would be decidedly preferable. A majority of those who are receiving the larger salaries have been placed in the higher-salaried brackets by manipulation and by favoritism. One can go into many of the Government departments here and find employees sitting alongside of one another in a particular unit, doing a similar class of work, who are drawing salaries which vary greatly. One has been more fortunate than another and probably draws a salary of $4,000 when another employee is only drawing $1,800 a year. Such distinctions in salary classifications have arisen, and are, more or less, due to favoritism and discrimination. Yet it is proposed further to penalize the employees who have been so unfortunate as to receive only small salaries by reducing them 10 per cent.

We passed the reclassification act three or four years ago. The intention and purpose of Congress in passing that act was that the underpaid and those in the lower-salary brackets should receive a substantial increase. What was the consequence? Most of them received only $40 or $60 per annum increase, while the employees who were getting salaries of three or four or five or six thousand dollars, forsooth, received increases ranging up to eight or nine hundred dollars per annum under the reclassification act that was supposed to do justice to the underpaid employees and those in the lower-salary brackets. That has been the consequence. Under the flat 10 per cent reduction proposal there will be done to them further injustice.

I think there should be a decrease in salaries; I have expressed myself along that line repeatedly on the floor; but I am in favor of making the basis for the reduction start at the top with a larger percentage and reducing the percentage of reduction as the lower-salary brackets are reached.

Mr. JONES. I was just going to suggest that probably it will be more effective to discuss this question when we reach it. I do not, however, want to cut the Senator off.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I was merely making some observa-

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. About the tender consideration manifested on the part of the committee for inanimate property, such as law books, in only reducing the appropriation for their purchase $10,000 in an item of $50,000, when, in all probability, there is no necessity and no particular use for making the appropriation at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is not a question of what we would like to do; it is a question of what we are going to have to do. Certainly I would be one of the last persons to object to liberal appropriations for the purchase of law books for the Supreme Court, but we are going to have to cut down on many things; and the more we cut down on items of this kind the less we shall have to cut down on the salaries of employees who, in the city of Washington, at least, can now hardly live on their salaries. I realize that. No Senator who is not on the Appropriations Committee and who has not followed this bill through can suggest proper cuts on various items of this kind; but, Mr. President, the Supreme Court would live, the country would live and get along pretty well, if for a year or two we did not buy any law books for the Supreme Court. I had rather cut out the item entirely than to cut the salaries of men and women who at present, especially in this city under existing living conditions, are not getting enough to support a family.

I myself think it is very appropriate for the Senator from Florida or for any other Senator to do what the Senator has done. If we let such items as this go through, when we come to the place in the bill where salaries are provided for, then it may be said, "We have been appropriating so much money that there has got to be this cut on the small salaries." There will be a good many instances, it seems to me, where there even should be an increase in an appropriation in order to keep things going, but we shall not be able to get it; and perhaps in other places there should be no decrease, where it will be necessary to keep the appropriation as it is at present.

However, Mr. President, I do not believe we are subject to just criticism if we say to the Supreme Court and to the other courts, "We are not going to appropriate the amount which we have heretofore been appropriating for the purchase of law books." We have been appropriating a great deal of money for law books, commencing with the Supreme Court and running down through all our courts. The Supreme Court has been getting about $50,000 a year for law books. I admit that. I should like to have them continue to get it; but I had rather reduce that appropriation than to take the food out of the mouths of hungry people; I had rather reduce that appropriation and use the money to give employment to somebody who is anxious to have work in order to support himself and family and can not get it. It seems to me we are going to confront the proposition that we must cut out some of these appropriations or we shall not be able to do what we have been admonished it is necessary for us to do in order to obtain a balanced Budget.

I have not been one of the Senators who have believed that the balancing of the Budget was necessary to save the life of the Nation; but from the President down, a majority of all our officials seemed to think that is true. Everybody will admit that it is very desirable; that we ought to do it ! if we can; that eventually we must do it; that we can not permanently continue as a Government with an unbalanced Budget; otherwise in time we would eat ourselves up; but here is an opportunity, it seems to me, to cut out a part of an appropriation at least without doing any great injury to anybody. The committee has reduced the appropriation as it came from the House by $10,000; but it seems to me, Mr. President, that, under existing circumstances, we ought to cut it lower than the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Connecticut IMr. BINGHAM] recently advised the Senate that this appropriation of $40,000, owing to the recent decrease in the price of law books, would purchase the same number of law books as has been heretofore purchased; so I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator from Nebraska does not desire to make a motion to reduce the appropriation, I desire to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to make a motion to that effect before I sit down.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I beg pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desired to make this explanation, because I did not want to be misunderstood, and I do not think the Senate will misunderstand me. When we are face to face with the proposition that somewhere we have got to cut down the expenses of the Government to the extent of $300,000,000, we ought to cut them down where such action will do as little injury as possible, and we ought to let it be known that we are doing it because of the necessity of the situation.

Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out $40,000 and inserting $25,000.

THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO THE SENATE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hesitate to detain the Senate even for a few minutes while it is trying to pass these appropriation bills. My only reason for occupying just a few moments of the Senate's time now is because of what I believe to be a misrepresentation to the American people as reported this morning with reference to what happened yesterday and during the last few days in the passage of the tax bill.

Of course, there can be no glory for any party in passing a revenue bill that imposes additional taxes of more than a billion dollars directly upon the American people; but one reading the newspapers of this morning-not all, but some of them-would gather the impression that the United States Senate has been frittering away precious time, denying the necessities for Government revenue, and refusing to balance the Budget and thereby sustain the credit of the Government. Some of the press go so far as to give the impression that the Paul Revere ride of the President yesterday to this Chamber bludgeoned the Senate into the passage of the revenue bill, and that if it had not been for that sensational and historic ride perhaps we would still be here considering the revenue bill.

I know that no one will take issue with what I am going to say, and if I misstate the facts I want to be corrected. because facts are a part of the history of this Government. I say that the President's visit to the Senate yesterday did not hasten in the slightest the consideration and completion of the revenue bill.

Of course, no one should find fault with the President, and certainly I do not. If he wanted to come here and confer with the Senate, express his views, and have his name carried on the front page of many papers as having browbeaten the Senate into action, he had a right to do so; but I say that the revenue bill would have been completed yesterday whether or not the President had come to the Senate.

I doubt if in all the history of this Government any im-passed in a manner so free from the slightest tinge of partisanship as this revenue measure. It has not crept in a single time. Senators on this side of the aisle as well as on the other side have differed, both upon the floor of the Senate and in the committee, but there has been a unanimity unexcelled in parliamentary history in a desire to meet the demands of the Government and preserve its credit by providing revenue to balance the Budget. The Congress of the United States is not to be blamed in the slightest, and can not be by anyone who wants to be fair for any unreasonable delay in the consideration of this bill.

Why some editorial penmen, either in order to curry favor with the White House or to distort the facts, should try to arouse the American people against the Senate of the United States because of what it has done in the consideration of this bill is inconceivable to me. It plays no part in orderly government; and whatever function a journalist performs, the highest conception should be-and that applies to everyone else-that the facts be made known and the truth be told Whatever delay there was in the last few days was occasioned by differences of opinion with reference to the amount required to balance the Budget. It will be recalled that in the beginning of this session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury went before the Ways and Means Committee and said that a certain amount was required in order to balance the Budget. The Ways and Means Committee acted upon that suggestion and upon that authority. They prepared a bill that would have balanced the Budget upon those estimates. Then the Secretary of the Treasury again came before them and said he needed an additional sum of $200,000,000 in order to balance it. Immediately it was given, and the bill was written according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury by the House of Representatives.

The bill came here. The Secretary of the Treasury came before the Finance Committee in April, when we had our first meeting, I think about the next day after the bill had passed the House, because under the leadership of the distinguished chairman of the committee we wanted to expedite its consideration in every possible way. Immediately the Secretary of the Treasury came before us and told us how much money was needed to balance the Budget. We went to work on that theory: and from that time until May 8, when we had concluded the consideration of the bill and were ready to report it, only some three weeks ago, we asked that the Secretary of the Treasury come before the committee, or he got into communication with the chairman or others and came before the committee, and the question was then put to him, "How much do you need to balance the Budget?" He then submitted his estimate. That was three weeks ago, and the committee then got together and we brought out a bill that complied with his every request, so far as meeting his estimate.

We proceeded along that line with very much difficulty. Finally the bill was about to be completed, no longer than a day more being required, because the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson] will recall that last week the request was made that we stay here even on Saturday, and it was the opinion of many of us that we could have passed it then, but it was in the air that there was some difference about this estimate: that the Treasury perhaps was wrong in its estimate. The Treasury had not come before the Finance Committee or before the Senate and suggested a revision of its estimates. Indeed, up until Monday of this week it had stood upon the estimate that it had presented to the Finance Committee of the Senate on May 8.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask when the Secretary of the Treasury first appeared before the committee with reference to the last estimate?

Mr. HARRISON. The Secretary of the Treasury first apportant piece of legislation has ever been considered and peared before the committee, I think, April 13 or 18. The last time, when we had finished the bill and were ready to report it, was May 8, three weeks ago. This last week in the Senate we had practically balanced the Budget. We had finished the job. There were only two or three immaterial amendments left that the committee had reported; but enough of us who had voted against the Connally amendment upon the floor of the Senate had made up our minds in order to meet this situation and balance the Budget and give us a surplus over it, to reverse our action, get a reconsideration of the amendment, and vote for the Connally amendment. That would have given a surplus over the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

On Monday we received an invitation to go to the White House. We went there Monday night, and for the first time officially it was represented, at least to the minority members of the Finance Committee, by the Secretary of the Treasury that more money was needed in order to balance the Budget.

Mr. BORAH. That was Monday night?

Mr. HARRISON. That was Monday night, this week—day before yesterday—in the presence of the President of the United States. In that conference, may I say—and I am violating none of the proprieties of that dignified occasion when I say this—it was not hinted, it was not suggested, that the President was going to come down here on a moment's notice the next day, nor did anyone inquire whether it would be necessary for him to come.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact that there was a disposition on the part of a large number of Senators to pass the bill on Monday night; and is it not the judgment of the Senator that the bill would have been passed Monday, except for the speech made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], who is generally considered on this floor to be particularly close to the Treasury Department, in which he announced that $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 more would be required; and did not the Senate stop in its process of passing the bill in order to let the minority members of the Finance Committee go to the White House that night?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has stated the facts correctly, because there were several requests made on Monday that we should abolish the 7.30 adjournment time in order to pass the bill that night. The first intimation to the contrary from an official source came from the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania-and I am not criticizing him about it; he just had more information; he was closer to the powers that be than we were-when he burst upon the country with the startling news that had been given in roundabout ways to some of us in whispers, under the pledge of secrecy, for fear that if we repeated it to anyone it might startle business. It might destroy every particle of confidence left. It would be terrible. Yet after it had come to us in such a way as that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania gives it here upon this great sounding board to the Nation.

So they held up the bill, and they would not let us balance the Budget on Monday according to the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury upon which we relied; and, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] knows, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] knows, some of us, a majority of us on this side, went through without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." We took them item by item.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. In order to get this record as I should like to have it, the Secretary of the Treasury gave his first official notice of the necessity of revamping his estimates yesterday morning, when the committee met?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and the first official intimation was given in the White House conference, in the presence of the President and the Democratic members of the Finance Committee and some others, on Monday night of this week; and when the Secretary of the Treasury that night was asked to tell us the exact amount that was needed to balance the Budget, he said it would be impossible for him to do it at that time, but his experts were working on it and the amount would be furnished.

May I say that the experts who were working upon it were the very experts who were with the Finance Committee every moment of the time it considered the bill. The Under Secretary of the Treasury, a very efficient and able member of the President's official family, was in the committee room practically all the time; and not until Monday night of this week, at the White House conference, did we receive an official intimation that more money was required. Then the request was, "Give the estimate to us. Let us know what it is." And on Tuesday morning—

Mr. NORRIS. That is, yesterday morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Yesterday morning the distinguished Senator from Utah, the chairman of the committee, called the Finance Committee to meet at 9.30 o'clock, and we met. The Secretary of the Treasury came before us, a little delayed, but we waited patiently, because we wanted the information; he got there something before 10. We went immediately to work, because we appreciated the gravity of the situation. We wanted to cooperate, we wanted the Budget balanced. We wanted the world to know that this great Government here, foremost among the nations of the world in wealth, in resources, and in finance, was able to balance its Budget, and would do it speedily, without any partisanship.

So it was that within two hours, aye, less than that, within less than an hour and a half, after the Secretary came before the committee and told us that we needed $285,000,000 more in order to balance the Budget, we were ready to make our report to the Senate. In the $285,000,000 the Secretary was including the amount he estimated would be raised under the Connally amendment. At that time the Connally amendment had not been adopted, but the plans were made, there was not a doubt in the mind of a single man but that the required votes would be cast as soon as the Senate convened in order to adopt the Connally amendment. It had been agreed by unanimous consent the day before that it would be voted on at not later than 10.30 o'clock on yesterday morning.

We left the committee room, came back to the Senate, and voted on the Connally amendment. It was carried by a vote of 86 to 3. Of course, the sentiment was for it, because, as I have said, Democrats and Republicans—all Senators—wanted to balance the Budget.

So it was put through. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recommendation for $285,000,000, included not only the Connally amendment, acceptance of which was a foregone conclusion, but he suggested the manufacturers' sales tax.

We told him then what the world knew—because there was no secrecy about it; there was no hesitancy about it—that 55 Members of the Senate had signed a statement that they would not vote for a sales tax, because they were against it or believed it inopportune to add it to the revenue bill, knowing it would cause delay and add confusion to the consideration of the bill and might prolong the discussion, in view of the action of the House and other circumstances.

So when the Secretary of the Treasury suggested the manufacturers' sales tax we said, "That is out of the question. Give us an alternative." Then he said, "Put on a gasoline tax, which will raise $150,000,000, and put a tax upon electricity and gas, which will raise $50,000,000 or $60,000,000."

That was about 11.20 o'clock yesterday morning, before the President came, and we were ready to vote. The votes were there. We had counted noses. We had a majority.

We pleaded that a vote be taken immediately in the Finance Committee. I went over to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, who had made the motion to adopt the gasoline tax and the electricity proposal, and I said, "Let us have a vote. We have the votes to put the amendments on the bill." I spoke to the chairman of the committee. I spoke to the leader on the Republican side. I said, "Let us | finish the job."

Then we heard that the President of the United States was coming to the Senate, that he was going to deliver a message. I was fearful that his coming might confuse the issue. I was afraid that the message might be couched in such language that it would prolong the debate, and we were anxious to get the matter out of the committee, in order that we could come before the Senate, even before the President came here, and say, "Here is our recommendation. Let us put it over and the Budget will be balanced." Why, the Senate had even recessed yesterday morning to give the Finance Committee time to consider means of providing for the increased revenue.

There was not a single vote influenced, either in the committee or upon the floor of the Senate, in my opinion, by the President's coming here yesterday. The bill would have been passed last night if he had not come, because we wanted to preserve the credit of this Government.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield,

Mr. COUZENS. May I remind the Senator that on Monday afternoon about 4 o'clock, prior to any notice of a deficiency in the tax bill, there was a meeting with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] in the room of the Committee on Foreign Relations of a group of us who were opposed to the general sales tax, and it was agreed at that time by Members from both sides of the Chamber to accept the Connally amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. COUZENS. So that the Treasury Department had nothing to do with recommending that, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is absolutely right, and may I state while the Senator is on his feet that there is no member of the committee who has acted in a finer way and more patriotically and has put his shoulder to the wheel with more vigor in order to balance the Budget than has the senior Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the Senator from Mississippi, what he says is that the Committee on Finance was in the act of voting on the amendments that were afterwards adopted, to finish the balancing of the Budget, and postponed the casting of the vote to hear what the President had to say, and immediately returned to the committee room and did what it had intended to do all the time.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and the adjournment was over the protest of those who were going to vote for the proposal and wanted to report it out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has just made the point I wanted to make. The majority of the committee wanted to act on these recommendations before 11.30, and the Senator from Connecticut went so far to prevent any action prior to 12 o'clock as to withdraw his motion, and refused to let it be considered until after 12 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. That is absolutely right. I am sure there is no statement I have made which would be contradicted by either the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether or not the White House and the Secretary of the Treasury were given assurance on Monday night that the committee was ready to balance the Budget and to pass the bill the next day?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely. We have been ready all the time. I have not made this statement with the idea of precipitating any further discussion here. I am glad the bill is on its way. I hope the conferees will expedite its consideration and report it back to the House and the Senate just as quickly as possible.

I have made this statement in the interest of fairness: there is no reason for criminations or recriminations either against the White House or the Congress of the United States. All of us want to balance the Budget; we want the economic situation saved; we want the credit of our Government preserved, and that is what we have tried to do in this crisis in our country's history.

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I have finished, unless the Senator from Indiana wants to ask me a question.

Mr. WATSON. I just want to make an observation, Mr. President, to which the Senator may or may not want to

I know of nobody who is disputing what the Senator says. This recital of events, from the beginning up to this time, is entirely correct. In my experience in public life, in committees, I have never known of anybody more heartily and more sympathetically cooperating in the consideration and passage of a measure than did the Senator from Mississippi in connection with the tax bill. I do not know what the fuss is about.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator may not have been in the Chamber when I started my remarks. I prefaced what I had to say, which may have been unnecessary, by the statement that some of the press of the country was still taking it out on the Senate in an attempt to misrepresent the facts, in order to extol the President of the United States on his historic ride to the Senate yesterday.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator is going to pick up something in a newspaper and make a speech about it, of course, I can not help that. There is nobody here, as far as I know, who is disputing one link in the chain of events the Senator has recited.

Mr. HARRISON. I knew that, and I am glad the Senator states it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I just want to take this occasion to express my deepest appreciation for the splendid cooperation we have received in the Finance Committee from the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I might name the others, but there is no need for it.

I have been in the Senate nearly 30 years; I have been on the Finance Committee since 1909, cooperating in the passing of every tariff bill and all the legislation that goes to that committee during those years, and I never have experienced or witnessed such unity of purpose as there has been in the passage of the revenue bill which was passed in the Senate last night.

During the hearings and in the meetings there has not been an intimation of partisanship from the moment we began the consideration of the bill until the time it was passed in the Senate. I thank every member of the committee with all my heart. If there had not been the cooperation, I am sure we could not have passed the bill, at least for months to come. I not only want the members of the committee and every Member of the Senate, but I want the country as a whole to understand the situation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I assume that no one would cast any reflection on the President of the United States, and I do not conceive that the Senator from Mississippi meant anything of that kind. Undoubtedly the President had a right to come to the Senate and address us. He chose a time when undoubtedly he felt it was absolutely essential he should come. He could not have come at any other time, if he expected to address the Senate in the midst of what he supposed was the confusion in which we were laboring at that time.

Undoubtedly the President of the United States has been as much worried and disturbed and distressed over the condition of the country, in fact, over the condition of the whole world resulting from the conditions in this country, as anybody could be in all the broad realm of the world, and he believed it to be his duty to come and address the Senate.

I did not know the President of the United States contemplated coming to the Senate. Nobody had told me anything about it. I was not asked about it or consulted about it. I do not know who consulted the President about it. I do not knew whom he asked about it. He did not consult the Senator from Utah. He did not have to consult any of us. The first I heard of his coming was during the meeting of the Finance Committee, when I stepped out into an anteroom to consult with the Secretary of the Treasury about a matter, and he told me the President was coming. Previous to that I had had a conference with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], and I turned and told him that the President was coming to speak to the Senate.

Of course, the President had the right to come. I assume that if he believed it proper, it was his duty to come. I do not believe he is subject to any criticism for having come, and I have no doubt that every man who has labored to get the revenue bill in shape and to pass it, from the day we started on it until we passed it last night at midnight, is willing to give the President credit for patriotic motives and for honest purposes in coming here, even at the time he did.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to propound a question to himself and to the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee: Is it not true, I ask these eminent gentlemen, the leaders in the relative places they occupy, that it can be certified with complete truth that the President of the United States, after he had come and expressed such views as were and might be necessary and appropriate, received on both sides of the Chamber the same immediate cooperation and warm support, to the best of the conscientious ability of Members of the Senate, that has ever been accorded to a President of our country?

Mr. WATSON. I have never known anything finer in my political experience.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that, of course, I said nothing that would reflect upon the President?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly not.

Mr. HARRISON. I said that the President had a perfect right to come; but let me read to the Senator an expression from the chairman of the Republican National Committee. a distinguished Senator in this body, which adds confusion to the situation, and I think that the pages of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD ought to show the true facts. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] said, according to the article in the Herald Tribune of this morning:

The Finance Committee was so strongly impressed with the message of the President and the serious situation disclosed that the proposals for balancing the Budget were recommended in an hour after the President spoke.

As I have shown, the Finance Committee had agreed to report the measures recommended a half hour before we heard the President was coming.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, line 12, after the words "Chief Justice," in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the idea expressed by the Senator from Nebraska; at least I know that these books may not be absolutely necessary at this time, and very likely the business of the court will go along just as well with $25,000 as with the larger amount. I hardly think we ought to cut it lower than that, but I am perfectly satisfied with the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had addressed the Chair, but I will not delay action on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, at the end of line 20, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$90,000," so as to read:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 2, sec. 135a),

Mr. BORAH. What is that amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The Chief Clerk again stated the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is an economy bill.
Mr. JONES. Yes.
Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, as it is an economy bill presenting an entire program covering the subject of economy, that before we begin, in order that we may have a proper conception of the entire program with which we are dealing, some one ought to explain the program and tell of what the economies consist.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the portion of the bill up to page 44 is the regular legislative appropriation bill and we have not reached the provisions embodied in the economy program as yet. When we get to them, I am sure the chairman of the committee will make a full explanation.

Mr. BORAH. The point with me is that this portion of the bill seems to be important in connection with the economy program.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator what I said when we began the consideration of this bill, that the estimates came from the Bureau of the Budget, the bill passed the House with the reductions, and the Senate has made a still further reduction along the line that it has adopted with reference to other appropriation bills, namely, a reduction of 10 per cent even below the House appropriations. Then there is a general provision at the close of the bill covering the economy legislative features. which takes care of any changes that we may make along

Mr. BORAH. Why should we not now have a discussion of that portion of the bill? This bill has just come into the Senate this morning; nobody has had any chance to read the bill or read the report except in the most casual way. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's program, but it is an exceedingly important measure.

Mr. JONES. I assume that when we get through with the committee amendments in the regular appropriating part of the bill, then, of course, the other part will be fully explained and fully discussed. I thought that was the appropriate procedure.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee something about the subject matter commencing in line 1, page 35, and ending in line 11. It contains no appropriation, but it extends an appropriation heretofore made. Can the chairman of the committee give us any information as to how much money is involved there and what the unexpended portion of the appropriation is?

Mr. JONES. There is comparatively little. There are four volumes of the Journals of the Continental Congress that are supposed to be printed. The text of the bill ac-curately explains what the item is. We have started the publication of the Journals of the Continental Congress, and now we are going to publish volumes 30, 31, 32, and 33. They are to be completed and paid for. The fourth volume of the Records of the Virginia Company, work on which has been started heretofore, will be the final one.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice the bill provides for "the rebinding, in full morocco, of the papers of George Washington, 302 volumes." Did George write that many books?

Mr. JONES. They have gotten the writings of George Washington together and apparently they comprise that many books. It is in connection with the work of the Bicentennial Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know how much the bicentennial celebration that has been going on for three or four months, and is going on right now, and which nobody notices, has cost the Government of the United States?

Mr. JONES. I do not know exactly the aggregate; but, taking all the appropriations, I should say the cost has been about $1,200,000 or $1,300,000. I want to say to the Senator | that I have attempted to frame a provision, with a reduced appropriation, which will complete the work instead of having it continue indefinitely.

Mr. NORRIS. This will complete it? Mr. JONES. That is what I expect to be done from the appropriations made in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. How much does it cost the Government to print these 302 volumes "in full morocco," and how many copies are going to be thus bound, and what is going to be done with them?

Mr. JONES. I really can not give the Senator that information, but it will not cost any large sum. The work is done under the Bicentennial Commission, and the money, as I understand from them, will be paid largely from that source.

Mr. NORRIS. What is this item of $50,000 that the Senate has put in place of $58,000, in lines 12 and 13, "for the publication of the Catalogue of the Title Entries"?

Mr. JONES. That is under the Copyright Office.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The wording expresses exactly what the item is for.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not quite understand what it is.

Mr. JONES. We provided for a reduction in the speed with which this catalogue would be printed; that is all.

Mr. NORRIS. It is an annual publication, is it not?

Mr. JONES. It may be.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there not a catalogue printed every year? Mr. JONES. That may be.

Mr. NORRIS. Will it cost $50,000 to print the catalogue? Mr. JONES. The estimate is $58,000, and that is what the House provided. I do not remember now whether the estimate of the Budget is above that or not, but I know that the House committee went into the matter very carefully. After going into it they recommended an appropriation of $58,000, and the estimate, I am informed by the clerk of the committee, is $54,000.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the use of this catalogue, who uses it, and what is it for?

Mr. JONES. I suppose that those interested in such matters consult those catalogues and use them very largely in the office, and probably the catalogues also are on sale, so that those who are interested in copyrighting their articles may be able to see whether the copyright has been duplicated or not.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am familiar with the Copyright Office, and if the Senator will stop to think for a minute he will recognize the tremendous number of new articles being copyrighted all the time. Every one of them pays a copyright fee, and that money goes into the Treasury. These catalogues bring up to date the list of copyrighted articles.

Mr. NORRIS. What are the catalogue cards that seem to cost $138,000?

Mr. DILL. I take it that they are the cards to which reference is made in the library as to the location of these many new articles. Why the appropriation should be so large, I do not know, but I remind the Senator of the fact that there are a tremendous number of new things, new music, new books, new publications, and every kind of thing being copyrighted all the time; they pay a fee, and the Government makes a profit out of this work all the time.

Mr. JONES. It more than pays expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall the testimony-I have it not before me-but as I recall it, the profit is greater than the appropriation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to anticipate what is coming up, but if the Senator from Washington will answer a question or two about a section over in the economy part of the bill, even though he normally would not want to go into that now, it will save a lot of time later on. So I am going to take the liberty of directing the Senator's attention to section 210, on page 56, and I wish to point out this situation to him.

As I understand, there are certain men who work regularly every night, and because they work at night they receive a slightly higher pay than do the men who perform the same work in the daytime. As I understand, it is proposed, first of all, to take that extra pay away from them, and then, in addition to that, to cut 10 per cent off their remaining pay. If that is true, this particular group would suffer a 20 per cent reduction in salary, while all other groups would suffer only a 10 per cent reduction. Perhaps that is not so; I can not just make out from a hasty reading of the bill; but if I could get the actual picture of that I could intelligently answer a great volume of mail that I have, and prepare an amendment if one is necessary.

Mr. JONES. I do not understand that there will be any double reductions in pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator, in order to make it clear, that the section provides that there shall not be paid a higher rate of compensation for those who work at night than is paid to those who work in the daytime.

Under existing law those who work at night-I am not talking about substitutes, but I am talking about regular night employees—now receive a slightly higher pay than those who work in the daytime. If it is proposed to cut the compensation of these men only 10 per cent along with all other Government employees, I do not want to protest; but if it is proposed to take their extra pay away and then cut them 10 per cent besides, obviously they would suffer a 15 or 20 per cent reduction in their pay, while other Government employees would suffer only a 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. JONES. It is certainly not the intention to make a double reduction.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not think so. I think the purpose of it, if I may transgress on the time of the Senator a moment further-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us to what page he is referring?

Mr. TYDINGS. Page 56, section 210. I think the purpose of this provision was to discourage those who worked in the daytime from making extra hours at night, so that that work might be given to a night man.

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. But I think the way it is worded it will serve not only to take away the regular night man's extra compensation but, under the general cut, further reduce his salary, thereby giving to that class of employees two cuts instead of one. I wanted to bring that to the attention of the committee, so that those who have it in charge might correct the situation if that is the case.

Mr. JONES. The committee will look into it carefully.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Superintendent of Documents," on page 42, line 8, after the word "bibliographies," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$89,200," so as to read:

For furniture and fixtures, typewriters, carpets, labor-saving machines and accessories, time stamps, adding and numbering machines, awnings, curtains, books of reference; directories, books, miscellaneous office and desk supplies, paper, twine, glue, envelopes, postage, car fares, soap, towels, disinfectants, and ice; drayage, express, freight, telephone and telegraph service; traveling expenses (not to exceed $200); repairs to buildings, elevators, and machinery; preserving sanitary condition of building; light, heat, and power; stationery and office printing, including blanks, price lists, and bibliographies, $89,200.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 9, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$34,800," so as to read:

For catalogues and indexes, not exceeding $34,800.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 10, after the word "libraries," to strike out "$85,000; in all, $224,000," and insert "$76,000; in all, $200,000," so as to read:

for supplying books to depository libraries, $76,000; in all $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Part II—Title I—Compensation reduction of Federal employees, compensation defined," on page 44, line 15, after the word "allowance," to strike out "(except allowances for subsistence, quarters, heat, light, and travel)," and in line 19, after the word "enlistment," to strike out "and includes the retired pay of judges," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 101. As used in this title, the term "compensation" means any salary, pay wage, allowance, or other emolument paid for services rendered in any civilian or noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment; and the retired pay of all commissioned, warrant, enlisted, and other personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Lighthouse Service, and the Public Health Service; but does not include payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Schedule of Temporary Reductions," on page 45, line 6, after the word "reduced." to strike out "as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $2,500 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $2,500" and insert "by 10 per cent of the amount thereof," so as to read:

SEC. 102. (a) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced by 10 per cent of the amount thereof.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this is one of the vital points in the second part of the bill. I want to say that our committee gave this matter study for days and days. It is a very difficult matter to deal with. We had different ideas as to what should be done in regard to economies as relating to Government employees. Some contended that no cut should be made at all. Others contended for a different method of procedure. Some of us would have liked to begin at a certain rate of pay and apply the reduction in salaries above that rate.

It was a very difficult matter. There are objections, of course, made to every suggestion. It looks to be a little hard on Government employees and Government clerks, who are not overpaid in any event, to further reduce their salaries during these times. But we all appreciate the situation. We all appreciate what has been done in private business generally. Reductions have been made, sometimes twice, and in some cases more than twice. I think there is a pretty general feeling throughout the country that the Government employees should bear some part of the reduction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator has mentioned the fact that, while there is a uniform reduction of 10 per cent, it applies solely and alone to the fiscal year 1933 and at the end of that year the former salaries automatically come into force and effect again.

Mr. JONES. That is correct. I was just going to say that when we finally came to the conclusion that it might be the wisest course to pursue, we decided to make it apply only to one year, hoping, of course, that before that year is over conditions will get better.

I want to say that I felt that there ought to be some difference made between what we term the higher paid clerks and the lower paid clerks. It seemed to me that those who are getting $3,000 a year and under might be fixed at a certain rate of reduction, while those who are getting over $3,000 a year, including ourselves, ought to bear a heavier reduction.

There are many inequities, however, with reference to reductions, especially with reference to the point of division. I felt that we might be perfectly willing to have a cut of 20 per cent in our own salaries. It costs just as much for the average man, no matter what his position may be. to get his food and to get reasonably good clothing and the absolutely necessary things that one has to have, as it costs the higher-paid man. In other words, expenses of that nature are substantially the same to both classes of

There are many things in the way of determining just how this reduction should be handled. After we had canvassed the situation carefully, we felt that the fairest way, the most equitable way, was to put everybody on the same basis-the low-salaried man to get the same rate of reduction as the high-salaried man, 10 per cent from the bottom to the top and from the top to the bottom. came to the conclusion that that was the most equitable, the fairest, and the most just way to fix the compensation so that every employee of the National Government should be affected proportionately alike. As I said, there are inequities in it, but there are inequities in any other method of procedure.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the amount of economy which it is assumed will be accomplished under section 102?

Mr. JONES. We finally came to the conclusion that the private soldier, the private sailor-

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not speaking of exceptions. Mr. JONES. I understand, but after taking them out then the 10 per cent reduction would amount to $121,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can the Senator tell me what will be the amount presumably saved by taking 10 per cent of salaries of $2,500 and less?

Mr. JONES. If we should exempt salaries of $2,500 and less, we would save about $9,000,000 as against $121,000,000. I have a table showing the general savings. On all salaries by a reduction of 10 per cent we would save $133,900,000. On salaries of $1,999 and under there would be a saving of $28,100,000, and on salaries over $2,000 there would be a saving of $75,000,000, or $103,000,000 all together. On salaries from $1,999 to $2,999 there would be a saving of $57,500,000. and on salaries above $3,000 there would be a saving of $18,100,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is $59,000,000, or about three times as much as on salaries above would be saved by the 10 per cent economy plan by taxing the salaries of $3,000 and less?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. JONES. That is the estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON. In reality, in the economies that are accomplished, the greatest accomplishment is in the cutting of low salaries?

Mr. JONES. Yes; because there are so many of those employees. If we fixed it at from $1,000 up to $4,999, that would be a saving of $56,709,000. Above $5,000 it would only be $4,600,000 because of the small number that would be affected. Adding the two together would give $61,300,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was it the consensus of opinion of the committee that the cutting of small salaries would be conducive to prosperity?

Mr. JONES. We did not consider especially that phase of the matter, I believe.

Mr. JOHNSON. That did not enter into the considera-

Mr. JONES. We were directed to investigate matters of economy and to save some money for the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not had an opportunity to study the bill. It has only come to me at noontime to-day. Perhaps others have had it before.

Mr. JONES. I do not think others did have it. We did not get the bill to the printer until 12 or 1 o'clock last night.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to indulge just this observation to the Senator from Washington, that it seems to me it will be about as conducive to prosperity and happiness in this land to cut the small salaries in the fashion that has been done, of those who have little, as it would be conducive to the health of a human being to let all the blood from his body.

Mr. JONES. I hardly think that is a correct comparison. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Washington would take a recess and give us some time to look into this measure? We will make more progress in that way than we will by stumbling along and trying to familiarize ourselves with it, because no one has had an opportunity to examine the bill except those who are members of the committee.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, right in line with the suggestion made by the Senator frem Idaho, as a member of the Appropriations Committee I would appeal to the Senator from Washington to have this matter referred back to the committee for an hour at least, so that we could give a little more consideration than has been given to the 10 per cent cut.

I should like to point out that of the $121,050,000 economy effected by the 10 per cent cut, those employees of the Government who are drawing salaries of $500 a year or less will contribute to that sum total of economy $25,457,000.

Those Government employees who are drawing salaries between $500 and $1,000 per year will contribute to the economy program $34,409,000.

Those employees drawing salaries between $1,000 and $1,500 will contribute to the economy program $25,493,000. Those employees drawing salaries between $1,500 and $2,000 will contribute to the economy program $19,036,000.

So that all Government employees drawing salaries under $2,000 a year will contribute, in the matter of savings, $104,-395,000 of the total of $121,000,000 economy that is effected by the bill.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the Senator where his figures come from? I have seen no such figures.

Mr. NYE. I obtained these figures from a table in the House report on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Who furnished those figures?

Mr. NYE. I do not know. I find them in the report which accompanied the bill as it passed the House. At the top of page 4 is a table showing the amount of exemptions that would prevail as I have stated them.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The figures which the Senator from North Dakota has just given illustrate very vividly the actual situation which confronted the Economy Committee. According to the figures just read by the Senator from North

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will yield, the Senator from North Dakota wants to make a correction of the figures which he just read from the table to which he referred.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Iowa has called to my attention the fact, which I had not previously observed, that in the House report the table showing the exemptions of $500. $1,000, $1,500, and $2,000 is based on the proposition of exempting from all salaries first $500, and in the next instance $1,000; so that my compilation would not be as correct as I had thought it was. However, so large a part of this burden is borne by those drawing the smaller salaries that I think we ought to reconsider the matter in committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, Mr. President, if I may go on-Mr. JONES. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM. What the Senator from North Dakota said is quite true, that the figures on which he based his statement were the House estimate of what would happen if we exempted $500 from each salary, or $1,000 from each salary, or $1,500 from each salary, which of course would cut out all those receiving $1,500. The number of persons receiving $500 a year is infinitesimal. The amount mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota means what would happen if we exempted that amount from any reduction. The truth is that there are such a tremendous number of Government employees receiving small salaries that if we exempt them, we find ourselves in the position of being unable to effect any real large amount of saving. By exempting, for instance, as the Senator has said, the first $2,000, we would lose from the bill over $100,000,000.

The committee felt that a person who received a salary of $1,000 two years ago, and was getting along on that salary, and who, under this bill, would receive only $900, could buy just as much if not more to-day, due to the increased purchasing power of the dollar, as he could two years ago with the larger amount of salary.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question there? Pardon me; I did not want to interrupt

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say just one more thing? The committee also felt that if there was any justice in the salary rates as determined upon by the Congress in return for work done in relation to the job performed and the amount paid in the outside world, it was the fairest thing that could be done, in addition to being the one which would yield the greatest amount of economy; and I may say that I should be glad to be shown any other way in which we could save $100,000,000 than by doing this. In view of the fact that it saves such a large amount, and that it bears equally on all salaries in accordance with the laws passed by Congress, it did seem the fairest thing to do.

I may say, parenthetically, that the committee went through the salaries paid in the Government service; and wherever they saw a head, so to speak, hit at it. In other words, all salaries over $10,000 that could be reduced under the Constitution were reduced to $10,000, and a further cut was taken on that.

I have in mind a lawyer serving on one of the commissions—I think it may be the Shipping Board—who receives now $18,000, whose salary will be cut from $18,000 to $10,000, and then he will get a still further cut of 10 per cent; so that his salary will be cut in two, from $18,000 to $9,000.

Another case with which many people are familiar is the case of General Hines, the very able Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau, who to-day, under the law, receives a salary of $12,000. Under this bill he loses the difference between $12,000 and $10,000, or $2,000, and then he gets a cut of 10 per cent on his $10,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. A temporary cut? Mr. BINGHAM. A temporary cut, for one year; which brings him down to $9,000 from the present $12,000 that he is receiving.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask these questions because the opportunity has not been mine thus far to investigate, and only now the bill comes before us. I think it is a most unfortunate thing that it comes without the ability on the part of any of us save the committee-and they have guarded their work, I think, very carefully—to know exactly what is in the bill; but, as I understood the Senator, out of the amount that is saved, as it is termed, under this bill, more than $100,-000,000 will come from salaries of $2,000 and less. Is that Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; that is not quite correct. As the Senator from North Dakota first gave the figures, that would be true.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I am not speaking of his figures. I am speaking of what are the actual figures.

Mr. BINGHAM. The way that the House proposed was what seemed to them a fair method of exempting the first $2.500; in other words, that the person who received a salary of $3,000 would not be reduced 10 per cent or 11 per cent on $3,000, but only the difference between $3,000 and $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. Now, your bill makes it a straight 10 per cent?

Mr. BINGHAM. By exempting the first $2,000 we lose about $104,000,000 from the economy program.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am speaking of your bill. How much do you get on salaries of $2,000 and less? What do you make out of that?

Mr. JONES. We make $16,665,000; or, rather, that is what we would lose with the exemption of $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I assume that that is the economy you would make in a 10 per cent cut on salaries of $2,000 or less.

Mr. JONES. That is not correct, I know.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. If an exemption of $2,000 were placed in the law, the amount of revenue that would be realized would be $16,665,000, and that is what the chairman has given the Senator. I do not think that answers his question, however,

Mr. JOHNSON. No; that is not what I am seeking to

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know that there are any figures in the report which would give the Senator exactly that information.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator ask his question again? I think I have the figures before me now.

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. First, I want to ascertain how much is the economy effected by taking 10 per cent of salaries of $2,000 and less.

Mr. BINGHAM. The saving, if the plan called in the House report plan No. 2 is adopted, under which salaries of $2,000 and over were subjected to a reduction of 10 per cent. is $75.100.000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, do I understand that $75,000,000 represents the amount that will be saved to the Government by deducting 10 per cent from salaries of $2,000 and less?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am trying to get at that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, who has the floor? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Could not that be accomplished by subtracting the $16,665,000 from the $121,000,000, so that we get $104,335,000 that comes out of the employees with salaries of $2,000 or under?

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. Then, we get $104,000,000 out of employees who are paid $2,000 or less?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no, Mr. President. The Senator is quite incorrect in that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am trying to inquire; that is all. It shows the confusion that exists.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will be patient with me for a moment, I have given him the figure of what the saving would be if 10 per cent were levied on salaries of $2,000 and over, namely, $75,000,000. The difference between $75,000,-000 and the $121,000,000, which is $46,000,000, is the amount paid on salaries of $2,000 and under.

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. Now, if the Senator will be patient with me, we will take that figure, then, that we derive from salaries of $2,000 and less-$46,000,000, in round num-

Now, let us jump the figure to $3,000. On salaries of $3.000 and less, what is the amount that will accrue to the United States Government by cutting them 10 per cent?

Mr. BINGHAM. If we were to deduct 10 per cent on salaries of $3,000 and over, the saving would be $18,100,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would you go through the same process of deducting the $18,000,000, then, from the sum total?

Mr. BINGHAM. Deducting that from $121,000,000, we get $103,000,000, which is the saving on the great number of salaries that are $3,000 and under.

Mr. JOHNSON. All right. We are getting, then, at our figures. We save, then, $103,000,000 by taking 10 per cent off salaries of $3,000 and less. That is correct; is it not?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought the committee would know.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator asked his question in such a way that I was not certain. Will the Senator please repeat

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. According to the computations that have just been stated, we receive for the United States Government $103,000,000, in round numbers, by taking 10 per cent off salaries of $3,000 and less.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.
Mr. JOHNSON. How much is the total saving in this economy bill-I mean, in the entire economy bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. The total saving is $231,000,000.
Mr. JOHNSON. Two hundred and thirty-one million dollars. So that practically-not exactly at all, but for the purpose of using round numbers—we are taking one-half of the economies for this Government, in this stress, off of people who receive salaries of $3,000 and less.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, Mr. President, will the Senator look at this matter in another way? The way he has presented it appeals to all of us, and appealed to me. Here is the other aspect of the situation:

The total bill of the United States Government for the pending year is something over $4,000,000,000. Of that amount about one-fourth, or $1,000,000,000, is for payment to veterans, pensions, compensation, disability allowances, and so forth. About one-third is salaries, the actual amount of salaries being $1,339,000,000. Of the balance, about $640,000,000 is interest on the public debt; about $350,000,000 is for public works, and the balance, which roughly is somewhere around seven or eight hundred million dollars, is for general expenses. That is a little too large, because there should be deducted from that personal services. But will the Senator tell us where we are going to make a saying when we are honestly seeking for a saving of somewhere around $250,000,000, when $1,339,000,000 goes for salaries, of which by far the larger part goes in small salaries to little people, and we can not save on the public debt, and the savings on veterans which the committee has adopted and recommended are less than $50,000,000? Where will the Senator suggest that we save it?

The committee, I may say to him, after three weeks of hard work, day and night, receiving and considering suggestions for economy from all sources within the Government and out of it, did not succeed in finding any great amount of saving except in the pay of employees.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not wish the Senator from Connecticut or any other member of the committee to think that I am critical of their work. That is not the point. I do not know, I say to him with frankness, because I have not studied the problem as he has studied it, where economies will come from; but there is something that is so repugnant to me at this time in taking from the charwomen who work in this Capitol and about this town, and from those who have salaries of $1,000, $1,500, $2,000, and $3,000 the money that we ought to save at this particular period that I will go any length with the Senator or with my fellows here in taking from any departments or in any other fashion that may be accorded us, if there be such, what is necessary to effect the economies desired.

I want to get away, if I can, from taking this money, the amount we have taken, at least, from those who have little and those who are supporting themselves, supporting, perhaps, members of their families, living God knows how in these times; taking from them half of the money the Government says by an economy bill it must save under these circumstances.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, one-half of our expense goes to the veterans. Would the Senator care to vote to take 10 per cent of all the money to be given to the veterans?

Mr. JOHNSON. I would not take 10 per cent as a yard measure in any case. If I had the ability, and the time, and the opportunity, and the knowledge I would go through all the items of the particular bureau and see whether or not anything could be taken legitimately from the bureau.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what the committee has done.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not question that; but the Senator must remember, let me say to him again, that the Senate has not had an opportunity to investigate, and my queries have been for the purpose of eliciting information wholly. We have had no opportunity to see the measure, to know what the committee has done. We recognize the ability, the perspicacity, the perspicuity, the shrewdness, and all of those attributes which go with a United States Senator on this committee, and we know that the committee did its utmost. Do not, I beg you, think I am critical of it in the slightest degree. I am asking for information, and to see whether it is not possible that there may be some other way of effecting economies in this Government besides taking from those who have not anything to-day, and who. God knows, have difficulty enough in living in these times.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington be good enough to make a brief statement as to why the furlough plan was discarded in favor of the straight salary cut?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, some of us were in favor of the furlough plan, and we considered it, but the general sentiment in the committee seemed to be that it would be extremely difficult to carry out such a plan. Take the rural carriers and the free-delivery carriers, for instance. It would be almost impossible to apply the furlough plan to them. So, after considering all the difficulties, as I said a while ago, and especially things like that, where we could not possibly arrange with the employees to give them a definite furlough without disarranging the entire service, we were forced to come around practically to the straight cut.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] was very much inclined to favor the furlough plan, but I think he saw the difficulties and recognized them, and felt that we had to give that up and take up this other system.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the questions asked by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] are important in considering the policy which the Senate and the House are to adopt concerning this effort at economy.

I am not at all sure that I have taken the right method to ascertain what part of the cut in salaries is to fall on the various salary groups. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Washington, and if I have not taken the right method of arriving at a general basis of approximate calculation I wish he would correct me.

As I understand it, the committee reports that if a 10 per cent salary reduction is applied to all salaries there will be a saving of approximately $121,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is, taking out the enlisted per-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want to confuse it with that. What the committee reports—and what we are talking about—is the 10 per cent reduction in all salaries, as the committee has reported it.

In the House report, on page 4, there is a table entitled "Savings Under Various Percentages and Exemptions." Various percentages from 5 to 15 per cent are tabulated, and then, under the title "Exemption," there is a column of $500, $1,000, $1,500, and $2,000.

As I understand that table, what it purports to show is that if a 10 per cent reduction on salaries of $2,000 and above is made, there will be a saving to the Government, as the result of that reduction, of $16,665,000.

It seems to me that the way to find out how much of this reduction is coming from the group receiving $2,000 or less is to take the total amount of savings reported by the committee, with the flat 10 per cent reduction on all salaries, and from that to subtract the savings which would be achieved if there were an exemption of $2,000 and below.

Therefore, is it not correct to say that the group receiving $2,000 and less will contribute to this $121,000,000 of savings the amount of $104,400,000, which is arrived at by subtracting from the total savings reported by the committee on a 10 per cent reduction basis, without exemption, the savings which would be achieved if there were an exemption of $2,000 and below in the bill, namely, $16,665,000?

Mr. BINGHAM. The trouble with the Senator's arithmetic, and the table which he is using, is that it contemplates exempting $2,000 from the Senator's own salary, and all salaries, not charging any reduction whatever on the first $2,000 of anybody's salary. It is not simply exempting salaries of $2,000; it is an exemption of $2,000 on all salaries.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator is correct about that, of course, I am wrong in my method. I assumed that this table was drawn up to show the effect of placing the various exemptions in the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true; but the exemption applies to all salaries. If it is $2,000, it exempts entirely the $2,000 salary, and all except $5 on the $2,005 salary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator refer me to any information contained either in the House or the Senate committee report which shows the effect of starting the reduction at a certain salary, not taking any of that salary, but taking 10 per cent on those above?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what I tried to do; and if the Senator will turn to page 2 he will see plan 2, for instance, which proposes to place a 10 per cent cut on salaries of $2,000 and over, which is estimated to raise $75,000,000.

If the Senator will deduct that from the $133,000,000 at the head of that column, which is what would be saved by placing a 10 per cent cut on all salaries, he will see that the difference between the two is the amount chargeable to salaries under $2,000. But since the committee exempted all enlisted personnel, it is necessary to take the figure $121,-000,000 instead of the figure $133,000,000, as given at the head of that column.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for making that perfectly clear.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are taking a very difficult way to find the results of a very simple calculation. I have seen published time after time a statement of the aggregate salaries of those receiving $500, $1,000, $1,500, and $2,000, and so on. If we had that table, any of us could tell exactly how much the 10 per cent would amount to on any group, and I know I have seen that table published. It probably has been placed in the Record. I simply desire to ask whether the committee had taken that into consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. That table is in the RECORD.

Mr. LOGAN. If that table is in the Record, why should we have any confusion about the reduction of the salaries below $2,000?

Mr. BINGHAM. The confusion arises from the fact that the House committee proposed two different plans, one that of exempting a certain number of salaries, namely, all those drawing $1,000 and under, and other plan was exempting $1,000 or $2,000 or more from all salaries, as stated on page 4.

Mr. LOGAN. This table is not what I am talking about. A table has been published, which has appeared many times in the newspapers, I suppose prepared by the Civil Service Commission, showing the aggregate salaries of those being paid $1,000, so many millions, the aggregate paid those getting $1,500, so many millions, and so on. If we had that table, we would know exactly how much we would take from each group if we should adopt this particular plan.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will look on page 2, he will see, by multiplying by 10, that in plan 1, where all salaries are cut 10 per cent, the saving is estimated to be $133,990.000. Hence the total amount paid for all salaries is $1,399,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That still does not show the aggregate salaries as to the different groups at all. That shows the aggregate of the total salaries, but it does not show it as to the different groups. If we had that information, we would not be confused about how much the reduction would amount to on the salaries below $2,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I simply want to state that the clerk of the committee has asked for a mathematical answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky, and I think he will have that information in a few moments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How much money is carried in the entire list of appropriation bills for repair work, extensions, and new construction? Approximately how much money is covered by those three items in all the bills?

Mr. JONES. About $300,000,000, the Secretary says. I do not know myself. He has kept track of that closely, and he says about $300,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The second question is this: Does not the Senator think that Congress will provide some plan of unemployment relief in the way of public-works construction?

Mr. JONES. The Senator knows just as much about that as I do. There is considerable talk about it, and, as I understand, that is really on the program we expect to complete before the session is over. Personally, I think we should do something along those lines.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Here is a suggestion I want to make to the committee and to the Senate.

Personally, I am very much opposed to reducing these lower salaries. Government workers who are getting, say, $1,800 and less, or even $2,000 and less, have their budgets so made that every dollar of their salaries is allocated in advance. Many of them are making payments upon homes, and if their salaries are cut I can foresee serious consequences to great numbers of them. Personally, I am not in favor of peducing the salaries of the poorer-paid employees.

If some plan could be devised whereby the poorer-paid employees would not have their salaries cut, whereby the salary cuts could start at salaries of $1,800 or $2,000 or $2,400 or $2,500, to be decided upon, and then the salaries above that cut on a graduated scale, cutting the first bracket, say, $500, or a certain percentage, and as the salary increased increasing the cut, that to me would sound reasonable

We should go through the bills and eliminate from the bills the items for repairs, extensions, and new construction, lift them out bodily, and set them over into the unemployment-relief program, and finance that part of the expenditure by a bond issue. Proceeding in that way we could solve the present situation by postponing the new construction and repairs and extensions over a period of years. There is no occasion now for raising taxes to pay for construction that is to be used in the years to come. It occurs to me that if some such simple program could be decided upon we could well protect the great bulk of the Government workers and they would not be injured. receiving the higher salaries can stand a cut. We could make eliminations. The committee could take the War Department bill, for instance, and eliminate such items as river and harbor improvements, lift those out of the bill and put them into the unemployment-relief program, and finance them by a bond issue over a period of years.

It occurs to me that that is the way to solve this matter so as to avoid doing anybody substantial injustice, and, at the same time, transacting the business as it should be handled.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington how long he expects to continue the session to-night. Is there any well-defined plan about the hours that are going to be devoted to legislation?

Mr. JONES. I wanted to proceed until about half past 5 if possible.

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to find out whether those in charge of the proceedings here are going to crowd these bills through with the idea of adjourning before the national conventions.

Mr. JONES. The Senator need not ask me that question, although I do not hesitate to say I do not think there is any possibility of it. I do not think we ought to try to do it. I think that we ought to accord proper consideration to the measures before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad to hear the Senator express himself in that way.

Mr. JONES. However, that is only my personal view.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I extract some information from the chairman of the committee?

Mr. NORRIS. I will try to extract some from the Senator from New Hampshire. What does he say about the program? Are we going to try to adjourn before the conventions?

Mr. MOSES. I do not know about the program, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Can not the Senator give me any information?

Mr. MOSES. I do know that there are some things in this bill which have not been attended to, and I myself want to offer two amendments, one of which means a very considerable amount of revenue to the Government, and the other corrects a most glaring oversight. If this bill is going to be jammed down our throats this afternoon, I want to know it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope, Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I hope Senators will remember that I have the floor; I have not yielded it; I am not half through.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one further observation?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. REED. The quarrel effect is excellent, but it is impossible to understand any Senator so long as so many are talking at once.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a good point, but it has been a daily occurrence.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I will try to enlighten the Senator so far as I may. I have these two amendments; I should like to have them printed so that the Senate may know what they are and may give some thought to them, and I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if time is going to be permitted for that sort of method of dealing with this bill?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator? Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the Senator from Washington has ever tried to cram any bill down any Senator's throat and he does not expect to do so in this instance. All I expect to do is to progress as rapidly as we possibly can with the bill. If we can not get through with it to-day, using proper methods and going along in a proper way, of course, the bill will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. Then if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me I will offer these amendments, to be printed and lie on the table, and I serve notice on the Senator from Washington that the bill will not be passed to-day, because I intend to have these amendments known to the Senate and discussed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is the purpose of anyone to try to force this bill through to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to learn that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope it will not be done, and I am quite sure it will not be.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to find out, if I could, whether we were going to keep going here with the idea of adjourning on account of the national conventions. There is a great deal of talk about it, and if that is going to be attempted, I wanted to interpose my objection and my weak voice to try to prevent it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I take the daring liberty of asking the eminent Senator from Nebraska what interest he has in a Republican national convention? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we have all read with a great deal of delight in the newspapers of the Senator's interest in the Democratic convention, but I will venture the assertion that, when the Democratic convention shall have concluded its deliberations, the Senator from Illinois will not have any more interest in a Democratic convention than I have now in a Republican convention. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what it seems to me we ought to do is to get out of our minds that we are going to hurry through these appropriation bills and particularly the pending one. We have now reached in this bill the economy plan, and probably the most important of all its features is the amendment that is now pending. We ought to decide with deliberation the question involved. We are not in condition really to deliberate, as everybody knows. Furthermore, this billand our attention has been called to the fact by other Senators-has not been before us until to-day, and then after 12 o'clock. We have had no opportunity to read it, and the committee-and I say it without criticism of the committee, because I understand they pursued the course as a matter of self-preservation-could not tell anybody what they were doing or what they were going to bring out. I understand they were afraid to do that; they were afraid that they might not be able to bring anything out if they ever told anybody anything they were going to bring out.

Mr. JONES. That is about right.

Mr. NORRIS. So I say that without criticism. Now, we are confronted with the proposition as to where we are going to make the most important reduction of all. We are faced with it without any opportunity of considering it or comparing it with any other propositon that has ever been laid before us or that any of us has thought about; and we approach it after a strenuous effort during 15 days, working almost day and night, to pass the tax bill and balance the Budget. So it seems to me we ought to hesitate a little bit; we ought to follow the suggestion that has been made;

we ought to adjourn and let Senators have an opportunity to examine this bill and to study this most important question of all. We would all be in a little better state of mind to take it up in a deliberate and logical way if we would go home and go to bed.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator is right, and if the Senator from Oregon is ready to move an executive session, I shall not object.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I have about concluded, but I want Senators again to observe that I still have the floor. So do not let them ask the Senator from Washington whether or not they can get it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I send to the desk a proposed amendment to the pending bill, the amendment being, on page 56, in line 24, to strike out the words "for night work." that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. BYRNES. If I may have the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], I should like to say, in response to the question he asked as to the amount of saving which would be effected by the proposed reduction in salaries of less than $2,000, that the clerk of the committee, making the computation with the Director of the Bureau of Efficiency, states that the amount is $43,300,000. Mr. Rea has handed me those figures.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield, but I hope the Senate will be in

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understood the Senator from South Carolina, the Bureau of Efficiency and the clerk of the Appropriations Committee have estimated the sum mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina as relating to salaries of $2,000 and under?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; that is what the clerk says.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I only have a word or two to say, and then I will conclude.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. A little earlier in the afternoon the Senator from Kentucky asked for a table which would state the annual rate of pay of Government employees, how many there were in each group, and cumulative cost of each group. These figures are in the RECORD of February 8, but since that is not before us, I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD in connection with this debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Nors.—This is simply a restatement of the statement released by the Bureau of the Budget Jan. 20, 1932, the only difference being in the arrangement of the cumulative totals. In the statement of Jan. 30, 1932, the cumulative totals commence with the lowest salary rate. In this statement the cumulative totals commence with the highest salary rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, just a word.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I will wait until the Senator has finished.

Mr. NORRIS. There will be time after I get through, and if Senators will not interrupt me I will be through in a very short time. I want to say just a word more about our work.

I believe, Mr. President, that we ought to proceed in a deliberate way, performing our work in a deliberate, logical way, without reference to any stipulated or imaginary date upon which the Congress is to adjourn. That will mean that we will not be able to finish before the national conventions; but, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing when we reach the time when the Republican National Convention is to be held, if any reasonable number of Senators want to attend the show, that we should take a recess. I will make the same statement as to the Democratic convention. Personally I do not see any reason why we should take a recess on account of the Republican convention, because we have our machinery so well organized, and all the cogs and different parts of it working in such complete harmony, that we know now what the outcome is going to be, that it will be automatic in its operation, and it will not need the attendance of any of the great statesmen who are honoring me with their presence. [Laughter.] Yet, Mr. President, I realize that unforeseen things happen sometimes, and I tell you that I would never forgive myself if I stayed away from that convention and something happened to Mr. Hoover's machine.

On the Democratic side, however, they have a fight, as they usually do [laughter]; they will have to take some time, and we ought to give it to them, because I have no doubt they will put on a show that will be worth seeing. It will take place before the new revenue law shall go into effect, so that there will be no tax on admissions.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announces that there must be no demonstrations in the galleries. He is not going to announce it again; he means it; if there are any more themonstrations in the galleries, the Chair will order the galleries cleared.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I did not address my eminent friend, the Senator from Nebraska, Brother Norris, but, observing that he had adverted to the coming Republican National Convention with something of a mournful attitude, an attitude becoming to one preparing to be a pall-bearer, and then he turned to me with a gleefulness in his countenance, as if entertaining the thought that only at the Democratic convention would there be hope and refuge, I want to say that I was a little at a loss to discover why. in turning to me, he found in my presence as a proposed candidate the first sad presages of failure and of a possible unsatisfactory result from the Democratic convention. He translated this thought by saying we always fight, therefore there will be disorder and confusion. While I think as to his prophecy, when the proceedings shall have been concluded, there may be revealed some sort of disappointment to some of us equal to that which he will feel as to his own convention, I desire to let my eminent friend know that, as for myself, I will be quite free to say that the perfect candidate for my convention can be seen by me only in the lookingglass. [Laughter.] I really can conceive very little of hardship or of affliction in that selection as could befall us so severely as that crash and crush of the Hoover machine to which our eminent friend from Nebraska intimates. The Senator has kindly intimated something as to aspirations of myself or the hopes of those who venture for a moment to think that I could be an adornment to that convention if I reap no profitable result from its deliberations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Out of order, I desire to offer an amendment, which I will ask to have read, printed, and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

At the proper place in the bill add a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 409. The President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend during any part or all of the next fiscal year the operation of independent offices, bureaus, and commissions, and to discontinue personnel, services, costs, expenses, and salaries in any of the executive and independent departments and agencies and offices of the Government. This authority and power is temporarily vested in the President so that he may prevent the expenses of the Government exceeding its income for the next fiscal year."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, recently prepared a statement which I assume has been addressed to all Members of the Senate with reference to the economy bill. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1932.

Because of the deep interest which the American Federation of Labor takes in the economic welfare of the Government employees, we are deeply concerned over the provisions in the economy For this reason I am taking the liberty of communicating with you to officially advise you of the position of the American Federation of Labor and of labor generally throughout the Nation so far as the American Federation of Labor can speak for it.

the American Federation of Labor can speak for it.

It is the opinion of the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor that a reduction in the salaries and wages of the Government employees would be economically wrong. Through such action a great injustice would be imposed upon thousands of Government workers without a corresponding benefit to the Government. Wage cutting on the part of the Government would aggravate the disturbed state of mind which already exists, would intensify a paralysis of buying power, which at the present moment is having such a disastrous economic effect and would increase the social unrest and economic discontent which is so noticeable in all sections of the land. Private employers have ment is having such a disastrous economic elect and would increase the social unrest and economic discontent which is so noticeable in all sections of the land. Private employers have followed an unwise policy of wage cutting and have aroused feeling and passion in the minds of the masses of the people everywhere. They believe that wage cutting on the part of the Government will be the signal for further reductions in private industry.

In my judgment, a great service can be rendered the people by the Congress of the United States if it will officially declare itself in opposition to the lowering of living standards and in favor of the preservation of the wages and conditions which Federal employees have gained through years of struggle and effort. Such action would strengthen and encourage employers in private industry who are endeavoring with all the power they possess to maintain wages, to prevent reductions in salaries, and to encourage buying power, so that the Nation may early regain its normal course. We can not bring back prosperity to the Nation if we continue to destroy buying power through the imposition of wage cuts amounting to millions of dollars.

When the masses of the people are compelled to accept less in wages they are compelled by sheer force of circumstances to buy

When the masses of the people are compelled to accept less in wages they are compelled by sheer force of circumstances to buy less. Industry can not produce when workers are unable to buy. There is every reason why the Government should set an example to private industry. At least it should maintain an American standard of living commensurate with the requirements of American citizenship. Congress should be self-possessed even though the managers of private industry are influenced by a wage-cutting hysteria which obviously is having disastrous effects upon the economic life of the Nation. Sane men ought to see that the need of the hour is to build up and increase buying power. We can not, I assure you, bring about economic recovery by weakening and destroying the purchasing power of the masses of the people.

I sincerely hope Congress will find ways and means to economize and reduce Government expenses without reducing wages, without lowering the living standard, and without striking a blow at those intangible human values which after all are the most lasting and abiding of all. May I appeal to you in the name and in behalf of the working people of the Nation, the men and women employed both in public and private enterprises, to oppose pay cuts for Government employees and to boldly announce that so far as the Federal Government is concerned wage cutting must cease, so that the standard of American life and living may be permanently established and securely maintained?

Very streetely yours established and securely maintained?

Very sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN President American Federation of Labor.

THE ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, this morning I received a communication, addressed to the Congress of the United States and signed by 62 members of the faculty of the Johns Hopkins University, many of them figures of national and international prominence.

The communication is divided into four short sections, dealing with separate phases of congressional activity and strongly urging prompt action in balancing the Budget, putting into effect economies in Government expenditures. thus demonstrating to the country the capacity and resolution of Congress to meet the situation now confronting it.

In a few brief sentences, this communication sets forth in a forceful manner a cross section of the thought of the American public. Its context is illuminating, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned citizens of Maryland, members of both the major political parties, beg to submit to the Congress the following representations:

First. When the Congress assembled in December, the country faced one of the gravest crises in its history. The processes of industry and trade upon which the well-being of the whole people depends had become obstructed and disorganized upon a larger scale and in a more disastrous degree than at any previous time. It was evident that without prompt and wise congressional action these conditions were likely not only to continue but to grow worse. Every day's delay in taking such action meant an increase in the distress from which the people were suffering; it meant also that the needed remedies would be less efficacious and more difficult to apply. A reasonable time for the discussion and formudifficult to apply. A reasonable time for the discussion and formulation of the course to be taken must, indeed, be allowed. But half a year has now elapsed, and no decision upon the major questions confronting the National Legislature has been reached. The Congress, as a collective body, still presents to the country the spectacle of vacillating policies, divided counsels, factional bickerings, and partisan recriminations, and individual obstructionists are permitted to delay action by interminable speech making while the state of the Nation becomes steadily worse. Some useful but inadequate measures have, indeed, been enacted, but the two essential duties laid upon the Congress by the national emergency remain unperformed. We beg leave, therefore, to point out to remain unperformed. We beg leave, therefore, to point out to Members of both branches of the Congress that time is of the essence of the remedy, and that the patience of the people is becoming, if it has not already become, exhausted. Whatever is to be done ought to be done now.

Second. The two primary and essential measures called for by the present situation are evident. The first is the prompt adoption of a Budget balanced both by vigorous retrenchment in the expenditures of all Federal departments and by adequate emergency taxation. A budget is not balanced unless the estimates of revenue upon which it is based are the most recent available and are highly conservative; and nothing is gained if, after such a balance of income and expenditures is established, it is speedily unset by vast appropriations for unproductive expenditures for upset by vast appropriations for unproductive expenditures for which the Budget does not provide or which can be provided only by further taxation so excessive and ill adjusted as to increase the grave derangement of our economic mechanism, and thus to grave derangement of our economic mechanism, and thus to diminish the very sources from which governmental revenue and industrial credits can be obtained. The reason why a balanced Budget is necessary can hardly need to be stated. It is that the first essential for the reestablishment of confidence and the renewal of enterprise is that the credit of the National Government, and therefore of our general financial system, shall be placed beyond question by any intelligent person, either at home or abroad. The second measure indispensable in the present crisis is that provision be made, under proper safeguards, for the extension of Federal credit to productive and self-liquidating enterprises, both public and private, so that the wheels of industry shall be again set in motion with the least possible delay and also without danger of future impairment of the security of governmental obligations.

shall be again set in motion with the least possible delay and also without danger of future impairment of the security of governmental obligations.

Third. Millions of our citizens, able and willing to work, are unemployed. Adequate and timely provision for their needs must be made. The raising and administering of public funds for local relief is primarily the clear duty of State and municipal governments; but if any States are unable to obtain such funds in sufficient amount, it will become necessary that they be assisted through loans from the Federal Treasury. Imperative and urgent though unemployment relief is, it is manifestly only a palliative and in itself an evil. The chief concern of the National Government should be the speedy restoration of normal conditions which will bring the present widespread unemployment to an end. We hope and believe that the government and people of Maryland will do all that is requisite to provide for all citizens of the State who are in need; but the causes which have made them so it is not within the power of this or any State to remove or materially affect by legislative action.

Fourth. A situation such as the present one offers temptation to selfish interests to seek to extract private or local advantage, or seeming advantage, out of the urgency of the general need. Attempts to do this have been apparent in the present congressional session. They are exemplified in proposals to incorporate in pending bills for emergency taxation protective tariffs upon particular commodities—tariffs not determined by their revenue-producing value but solely by the purpose of affording special favors to certain industries, regardless of the effect upon our national economy as a whole. The only consequences of the inclusion of such clauses in these bills will be to convert what should be a common effort to avert national disaster into a shameful struggle for advantage between special or sectional interests; to intensify the existing economic disorders; to increase the burdens of agricul A similar attempt is to be seen in proposals to appropriate, under the guise of unemployment relief, large specific sums for unneeded public buildings in particular localities. Such proposals are essentially appeals to local cupidities rather than considered plans for dealing with the fundamentals of the problem, either of relief or of economic reconstruction as a whole. We desire, as we confidently expect, that the representatives of Maryland, in either House, will, in the present critical situation of the whole country, act with a view solely to the national interest, and that they will seek no special advantage for any industry any locality or any seek no special advantage for any industry, any locality, or any group in this State or in their several constituencies. Any other attitude would not only be disloyalty to the Nation but would be contrary to the real interests of every individual. Only remedies directed to the correction of the general disorder of our economic life can be of substantial advantage to any of us. Only national-minded, farseeing, unflinching, and above all prompt action by those into whose hands the conduct of our common affairs has been intrusted, can save the people of the United States from even graver evils than those from which they now suffer.

Respectfully submitted.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORT FROM POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of T. V. O'Connor, of New York, to be member United States Shipping Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nomination go over for this afternoon. I am not able to take it up now.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I do not want to object to the request of the Senator from Tennessee, but I want to call his attention to the fact that the term expires on the 7th day of June and action should be had one way or the other before that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The moment that I am able to discuss it I shall be very glad to have it taken up and I will confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Senator will confer with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know the intention of the Senator from New York is to respect the wishes of the Senator from Tennessee, but necessity exists for action before the 7th of June.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am quite sure that there will be no reason why it could not be done before that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of B. B. Montgomery to be United States marshal, northern district of Mississippi.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I ask that that may go over until the next executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Anthony Savage to be United States attorney, western district of Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of G. Fred Flanders to be United States marshal, southern district of Georgia.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] opposed the confirmation of this nomination when it was up before. I do not see him in the Chamber; and I suggest, therefore, that it go over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I did not understand what the Senator had to say, and I should like to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Senate be in order so that Senators may be heard.

Mr. HEBERT. When this nomination was submitted at the previous executive session the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] opposed confirmation. He is absent from the Chamber at this moment, and I do not know what his attitude would be; but in his absence I suggested that it might go over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the nomination going over; but the Senator from Delaware reported the nomination.

Mr. HEBERT. I am quite aware of that, and yet I make the statement that he opposed confirmation of the nomination when it was before the Senate previously.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Delaware? I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks perhaps the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator must be mistaken, because the Senator from Delaware made the report; but I shall not object to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error; but I am not advised as to whether the Senator from Delaware is opposing this nomination. I suggest that it go over, however, so that there may be no doubt about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

Mr. WATSON. I will say, however, that the one he is objecting to is Mr. B. B. Montgomery, nominated for United States marshal, northern district of Mississippi.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That has gone over.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the case of G. Fred Flanders.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

Mr. HEBERT subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I made the statement that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] had objected to the confirmation of the nomination of G. Fred Flanders as United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia. I am informed now, and I think correctly, that I was in error. The Senator from Delaware objected to the nomination of a marshal for a district of Mississippi, and not in the State of Georgia.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator was in error, but still I did not want to have any mistake occur. I think, now, that we ought to ask that that nomination be confirmed.

Mr. HEBERT. Personally I have no objection, Mr. President, and have had none.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of G. Fred Flanders to be United States marshal, southern district of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John C. Tulloch to be collector of customs, customs collection district No. 7, Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George D. Hubbard to be collector of customs, customs collection district No. 30. Seattle, Wash.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Mason M. Patrick to be member, Public Utilities Commission, District of Columbia, for a term of three years, from July 1, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Leo W. Tucker to be surgeon, Public Health Service, to rank as such from June 15, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST GUARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry G. Hamlet to be commandant, with the rank of rear admiral, for term of four years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT-REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Arthur Wellington Doland to be register, Spokane, Wash.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc, with the exception of the nomination of Harry Aitken, to be postmaster at Clearfield, Iowa; and in that case I ask that the nomination be rereferred to the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator if he would have any objection to making the same request with regard to Calendar No. 4615. The matter has been called to my attention recently; and I should like to have the nomination taken back to the committee, and then I will confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. ODDIE. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will ask that that course be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, those two nominations will be excepted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if the nominations of the postmasters I was conferring with him about are on the calendar?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are not on the calendar, and I have not yet had an opportunity to confer about them.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar will be confirmed en bloc except the two referred to by the Senator from Nevada.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc; and in view of the fact that these boys graduate to-morrow from the academy, and should receive their commissions at that time, I ask unanimous consent that the President be at once notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

IN THE NAVY

Mr. HALE. I have also the nomination of Midshipman Halford A. Knoertzer to be an ensign in the Navy. For some reason this name did not appear with that of the other midshipmen a few days ago when their nominations came before the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that that nomination be confirmed, and the President notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read to the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Midshipman Halford A. Knoertzer to be an ensign in the Navy, revocable for two years, from the 2d day of June, 1932.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed and the President notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed and the President will be notified.

Mr. HALE. I report from the Naval Affairs Committee sundry nominations for the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The other nominations will go to the calendar.

The nominations referred to are as follows:

Lieut. Commander Morton L. Deyo to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of December, 1931.

Surg. Charles S. Stephenson to be a medical inspector in the Navy, with the rank of commander, from the 1st day of November. 1931.

Passed Asst. Surg. Howell C. Johnston to be a surgeon in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant commander, from the 1st day of February, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar. The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 26 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 2, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Hulbert A. Woolfall, rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art Heroic Love keep alive in our hearts that adventurous spirit that makes men scorn the way of safety that Thy will may be done. Give us understanding to love widely, power to build bravely, the spirit to witness humbly, and the mind to think fairly. Through Jesus Christ our

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10236. An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to said bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. Smoot, Mr. Watson, Mr. REED, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. King to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONGRESSIONAL WORK

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on congressional work. There was no objection.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, expenses of government, locally and nationally, are too high and must be reduced, and this can be done without impairing its efficiency. Instead of increasing taxes, appropriations should be decreased. In attempting to reduce these expenses many obstacles are confronted. When a reduction is recommended in any appropriation bill in Congress the department affected at once begins a campaign against such reductions. If these departments and the administration would assist us, great reductions could be made. When the War Department appropriation bill was considered in the House, it made reductions below the recommendations of the President in the sum of

The Secretary of War, Chief of Staff, and the administration opposed these reductions. The appropriation bills that have passed the House this session have made appropriations below the recommendations of the President in the sum of $161,455,101.56, and the total amount saved under the appropriations for 1932 is the sum of $563,601,-223.35. Some of the big papers criticized the House for not meeting the President's demands on reductions, but the facts are that the House has greatly reduced the amounts recommended by the President.

The administration opposed the economy bill by trying to substitute the President's plan, and the President opposed a consolidation of the War and Navy Departments which would have saved another $100,000,000 per year. Savings made in the economy bill, with the reductions made in the appropriation bills below the amounts recommended by the President, amount to more than $200,000,000. The President did not say anything about expenses and taxes when he wanted his $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and his moratorium on foreign debts passed. I opposed these two measures because I was convinced that they were not in the interest of the American people. These foreign countries should pay us what they owe us and not saddle their debts upon the American taxpayers.

I voted for the economy bill and voted to reduce my own salary and office expenses along with the other salaries. Millions of dollars could be saved by abolishing certain bureaus and commissions and consolidating others and thus preventing duplications. I have always supported such legislation.

All the money to run the Government of the United States, with the exception of the amount collected through the customhouses and in fines, is derived from the income tax. Under the present law a man and wife without children must have an income of more than $3,500 per year before they pay any direct tax into the Treasury of the United States. Then there is an exemption of $400 for each child. Therefore if a man and his wife have four children they pay no income tax unless their income is in excess of $5,100 per year. I favor an income tax, and taxes should be borne largely by those most able to pay.

These international bankers, with their big incomes, tried to impose a sales tax upon the people and, if they had been successful, they could have had their own income taxes reduced. I opposed the sales tax and assisted in striking that provision from the tax bill. When this tax bill was considered in the House an amendment was adopted providing a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on sales on the stock exchanges. These sales for last year amounted to the enormous sum of $32,000,000,000 and the tax proposed would amount to the sum of $80,000,000. Several of us tried to have that rate increased to 1 per cent, and this would have increased our income from this source alone to the sum of $320,000,000. No assistance was given us by the administration. You remember how these operators fleeced this country out of millions of dollars and they should be taxed.

Agriculture is our leading industry and prosperity must begin on the farm. I introduced farm bill H. R. 7797, which bill provides a plan for the farmers to get at least cost of producing that part of their crops consumed in this country. The bill abolishes the Farm Board and its excessive salaries and will greatly reduce Government expenses. It will prevent the salary of $75,000 per year paid the vice president and general manager of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. With cotton at 5 cents per pound, as last fall, it would take 3,000 bales to pay that one salary.

The president and general manager of the Grain Stabilization Corporation receives $50,000 per year salary, and, with wheat at 30 cents per bushel, which the farmers received last fall, it would take 166,6663 bushels to pay that salary. The bill also prevents speculation in farm products on the stock exchanges. If this bill had been in effect last year, the farmers would have received $1.09 per bushel for their wheat, 89 cents per bushel for their corn, 54 cents per bushel for their oats, and 16 cents per pound for their cotton. That is what the Department of Agriculture said it cost on an average to produce these crops. No additional appropriation or expense would be necessary, as the Department of Agriculture makes these estimates each year and has the machinery for administering the bill. On the 12th day of April, 1932, I delivered an address in this House and urged the speedy enactment of this bill, as I did before the Committee on Agriculture. It is indorsed by the entire Oklahoma delegation, by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, and by numerous farm organizations in Oklahoma and throughout the country. That part of the bill to secure the cost of production is also indorsed by the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau Federation. I am glad to say that the Senate Committee on Agriculture recently reported a bill favorably with that provision. I shall continue the fight for the passage of this bill or some similar bill to save agriculture from ruin.

I introduced a bill to give an extension of two years on Federal farm loans and providing for withholding foreclosures. If Congress would enact this bill, similar laws would follow in the different States, and this would give farmers an opportunity to save their homes.

Many of our leading economists agree that one of the greatest needs at this time is more money in circulation. Several bills for that purpose are pending in Congress, and if legislation of that kind were enacted and an effective bill on agriculture passed, then we would see a return to prosperity. The issuance and control of money must be taken out of the hands of the international bankers and the Government administered in behalf of our people.

I supported the bill to have 40,000,000 bushels of wheat ground into flour and given to the hungry. We will not let people starve in America in times when they can not find any work. I have always supported legislation for the benefit of our women and children. The security and sanctity of the home and family must be preserved. On the 18th day of February, 1932, I addressed the House on the peace resolution or "taking the profits out of war and draft capital in the event of another war." The manufacturers of death-dealing war material and the profiteers should know that if we have another war, they will not make any profits out of that war. This will do much to minimize the cause of war.

When the French debt to the United States was funded in the sum of $4,025,000,000 more than one-half of that debt was canceled, which amounted to more than $2,000,000,000. The Italian debt was likewise funded in the sum of $2,042,-000,000, and 75 per cent, or about $1,500,000,000 of that debt was canceled. These cancellations would much more than pay our veterans their adjusted-service certificates or would greatly reduce the expenses of our Government. I opposed these foreign-debt settlements and oppose a cancellation of the debts due us from foreign countries amounting to $11,777,316,710.38. American investments of all kinds in foreign countries amount to $45,000,000,000, and this value would be increased if the international bankers succeeded in canceling our foreign debt.

I always opposed high tariff laws which compel our farmers to pay twice as much for farm machinery as they did in 1914 and greatly increase the cost of living. I have succeeded in having 36 bills pass Congress and reported favorably by the committees, in addition to other benefits to the district. Most of my office work consists in handling claims for soldiers and their dependents, and I have been successful in putting thousands of them through the bureau. I like to help those who need assistance. Experience and knowing how to do it get results in Congress as it does in other lines of business. No matter how good a man's intentions are, he can not succeed here unless he knows how to do the work. I have worked my best to get our Indian affairs settled and what there is left paid to the members of the tribes. I was reared in the old Indian Territory part of Oklahoma and moved from what is now Garvin County to Cleveland County, where I now reside. The needs and desires of the people whom I have the honor to represent in Congress are therefore familiar to me. I have done my best, the record will show the results, and have always supported legislation for our disabled soldiers, working people, and business interests.

INDIANA LIMESTONE AS BUILDING MATERIAL

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on limestone building material, and to incorporate therein a letter from the Treasury Department, and certain parts of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress, in their official capacity, are often called upon to make decisions which are subject to misinterpretation. There are always those who, for political purposes, seek to capitalize some action of a Representative and to alienate a group of voters because of some official procedure which the public does not understand. It is for this reason that I am reciting the facts concerning my services to the limestone industry of Monroe and Owen Counties of Indiana.

The Federal Government's program of construction of buildings has been inaugurated since I became your Representative and Indiana limestone has led all types of building stone, used by Uncle Sam. Most of the credit for this fact must go to former Representative Richard N. Elliot, of Connersville, Ind., who was chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, but he was persistently supported by Representative Wood and myself. So zealous were we in our efforts that we became known as the Indiana limestone bloc. Members of Congress from other States voiced heavy protests against the Indiana group in the House of Representatives where this building program originated.

May I quote from my own remarks, "Indiana limestone. material for public buildings," found in the Congressional RECORD of February, 1926:

Mr. Greenwood. Mr. Speaker, while we have under consideration the expenditure of millions of dollars for the construction of public buildings in the District of Columbia and throughout the public buildings in the District of Columbia and throughout the United States, it seems to me most appropriate to call my colleague's attention to the building qualities of Indiana limestone. This natural stone has been used quite extensively, and because of its great merit for durability, artistic elegance, and economy will be used more in the erection of public buildings. Oolitic of finest quality is one of the great natural resources of Indiana, found in Lawrence, Monroe, and Owen counties. It is known as Indiana limestone—sometimes called Bedford stone.

Builders of all time have discovered that oolitic limestone meets the requirements for durability. St. Paul's Cathedral, of London, built of English limestone, is historic, but English limestone is but a poor second in quality to the deposits found in Indiana.

Here in our Capital City are public buildings and beautiful residences that are testimonials of the value and beauty of this residences that are testimonials of the value and beauty of this stone. Among the latter are the Wilkins residence, now occupied by Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and the beautiful home offered to Congress by Mrs. Henderson for the use of the Vice President. The interior walls of the House and Senate Office Buildings, the Chamber of Commerce, Veterans' Bureau, and many banks are built of limestone.

In the business world are many specimens of commercial buildings that have put Indiana limestone at the top of the list as a material for construction. New York City has favored this product in the erection of the Grand Central Terminal Station, Cunard Building, Standard Oil Building, New York Cotton Exchange, while Chicago has showed her preference in the Tribune Building, the Straus Building, and the University Club.

There are five State capitols constructed of Indiana limestone. Among these is the one at Indianapolis, in the State where Mother Nature bestowed the material resource of this deposit of stone.

Think of a building stone that is thirty-five times as strong as is necessary to bear the load. Indiana limestone has a strength of 7,000 pounds per square inch on 2-inch cubes and more on larger stone and this is twice the strength of the best quality of Oolitic comes in three colors—buff, gray, and variegated. It has fire-resisting qualities. It can be heated to 1,000° F. and then drenched with water without any appreciable bad effect.

Mr. Speaker, Indiana hopes to share in this great Government project and wants to contribute of her natural resources to help enrich the Nation. We can not believe that this is an unholy desire.

If these public buildings are constructed by virtue of the socalled Elliott bill, which I supported, then they should be built of a material of strength, durability, and beauty. To have all the elements of successful construction, to meet the requirements of elements of successful construction, to meet the requirements of not only this age but the future generations, to obtain the satisfaction of having buildings of which we can always be proud as to looks and permanence, and to do this at a reasonable cost, in which value is received for the expenditure, I would recommend that these Government buildings be constructed of Indiana limestone, the Nation's building stone.

Time has disclosed that the Treasury Department has accepted the advice given by Representative Elliott, myself, and others in the construction of the post offices, Federal buildings built pursuant to the Elliott bill. In further evidence of this conclusion I here incorporate a letter of S. Lowman, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. In percentage of cost in the public-building program, limestone obtains from 55 to 65 per cent.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 26, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR H. GREENWOOD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: Reference is made to your letter of May 14 and also to telephone communication of May 24 concerning the relative cost of Indiana limestone and other materials used in relative cost of Indiana limestone and other materials used in facing Government buildings.

As was explained to you over the telephone, this department does not have the information that you requested. The contracts awarded by this department are on a lump-sum basis and do not contain unit prices for any of the materials. However, it is believed that the following information will give you what you requested over the telephone:

requested over the telephone:

The buildings constructed by this department may be, for the purposes of this information, divided into five classes, as follows:

1. Brick faced, with stone trim: The majority of the smaller buildings are brick faced, with a varying amount of stone trim. The trim is usually limestone, but in some few cases is sandstone, marble, or granite. This type of building constitutes approximately 62 per cent of the total number of buildings.

2. Limestone faced: In some cases, where local conditions demand, the smaller buildings are faced with limestone. The majority of the larger buildings are also faced with this material. The average building in this class will have granite curb, steps, base course, and water table; that is, everything up to the first floor will be of granite and all above that will be of limestone. This class constitutes approximately 30 per cent of the total number of buildings.

3. Sandstone faced: In some cases where there is a local sandstone this material has been used as facing. The average building in this class would be the same as the average building in the second class except that sandstone is used in place of limestone. This class constitutes approximately 5 per cent of the total number

4. Marble faced: In some of the more elaborate buildings and in places where marble is quarried, this material has been used in places where marble is quarried, this material has been used in facing buildings. The average building in this class would have granite below the first floor and marble above. This class constitutes approximately 1 per cent of the total number of buildings.

5. Granite faced: The same description would apply to this class as is given to the fourth class except that granite is used throughout. This class constitutes approximately 2 per cent of the total number of buildings.

The above percentages have been based on the total number of buildings constructed without regard to the cost of those build-buildings constructed without regard to the cost of those buildings.

The following percentages are on a basis of cost and are only for stone used in the facing of the buildings:

Granite, from 5 to 10 per cent.

Marble, from 15 to 20 per cent.

Sandstone, from 15 to 20 per cent.

Limestone, from 55 to 65 per cent.

It is believed that this information is what you desired; but if not, we will be glad to help you further.

Very truly yours,

S. LOWMAN. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

As a further evidence of the services and support I rendered in helping to promote the passage of the bill for the construction of public buildings, I here incorporate a letter from former Representative Elliott, of Indiana, who was chairman of the committee:

ASSISTANT COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES Washington, May 21, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR H. GREENWOOD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: In reply to your communication received to-day in regard to your attitude toward the public building program of which I had charge as chairman of the Committee on Public which I had charge as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, I wish to say that I appreciated your valuable assistance in the passage of all of the bills which were necessary in order to establish the great building program in the city of Washington, as well as throughout the country. You were one of the many members that I had to depend upon at all times to get this program through. I remember very well the "scrap" that we had in the House of Representatives over the question of whether limestone or granite should be used in the construction of the Boston post office. You took the side of the limestone along with Congressman Will Wood and myself, and we were able at that time to swing the House of Representatives in favor of limestone. Unfortunately, however, we were later defeated.

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am,

With kindest regards and best wishes, I am, Yours very truly,

RICHARD N. ELLIOTT.

You will keep in mind that the buildings covered by this Federal construction program are all of a utilitarian character. The life of these buildings is on the average about 100 years. I have always contended that for Government office buildings there is no building material so reasonable in price, considering adaptibility, appearance, and value, that can excel Indiana limestone. Also keep in mind that the George Rogers Clark Memorial at Vincennes is not this kind of a building. It is in the nature of a memorial which has no utilitarian purposes. If it is to have the superartistic features proposed and designed by its creator, the advice of the designing architect's recommendations should be accepted and followed. This is what the commission did in building the Clark Memorial at Vincennes with exterior of granite and interior of limestone.

Again let me call your attention to another special effort, which I-as your Representative-made to have Indiana limestone used in Government buildings. In the year 1930 the Government was planning to build a post-office building in down-town Boston, replacing one constructed of granite. The bill in Congress provided $6,000,000, but the House Members from New England were pleading for an appropriation of $6,750,000. Their reasons for such a demand were plainly set forth in the Congressional Record (March 19, 1930). I quote Mr. Luce, Representative from Massachusetts:

Mr. Luce. Mr. Speaker, it is planned to build in the heart of Boston a Federal building. Should the figures stay at $6,000,000, the building, which is to be 21 stories in height, will have a granite facing up to about 50 feet, leaving more than 300 feet to be faced with Indiana limestone. We ask that the whole structure be built of granite for these reasons:

First. The business depression is affecting New England more than any other section of the accurate.

First. The business depression is affecting New England more than any other section of the country.

Second. The economic reason, in that the expenditure of money for public buildings stimulates business in every direction.

Third. A sentimental reason. We of New England want our monumental edifices erected by the Nation to be built of that material which has been the pride of New England from its captient days grantice.

Fourth, We want the material that endures, and that is granite.

There is next what I call the artistic or esthetic reason. Trained architects threw up their hands in abhorrence at the idea of putting two kinds of stone in the main walls of such a building as this is to be.

Mr. Speaker, we want this building a thing of beauty, a thing of massive grandeur, a thing which shall impress the people with the dignity of the American Government. We ask that you grant the plea of those who must live with this building.

I wish that space permitted my printing excerpts from all speeches made on this subject, but, since this instrument deals chiefly with my efforts in behalf of Indiana limestone, I quote from the Congressional Record of the same date my own remarks:

Mr. Wood. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indi-

Mr. Wood. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Greenwood].

Mr. Greenwood. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, we have a building program that was adopted at the last Congress. I supported the program, together with my colleague from Indiana [Mr. Elliott]. Certain authorizations have been made to build public buildings throughout all parts of the United States. To increase the authorization or appropriation on any one project now means to cut down the prospect of building public buildings in many States under that former authorization.

To increase this appropriation by $750,000 will mean to take $75,000 each from 10 public buildings in other parts of the United States.

States

Of course the unemployment situation is bad everywhere, but it does not relieve that situation generally to furnish more employment in New England. We have unemployment in Indiana, and at these 10 places where these public buildings will be built there is unemployment to be taken care of.

Of course granite is a great building material, but it is very ex-Of course granite is a great building material, but it is very expensive, and it is an expense that is not needed. The engineers and chemists of our Government have determined that Indiana limestone is the premier building material. So confident are they of the permanent qualities of this stone that they have accepted it and adopted it for the public-building program in the Capital City in the triangle. That should be sufficient recommendation to this House to this House

Something has been said about the quality of Indiana limestone. Indiana limestone is 97 per cent pure carbonate of lime with a small proportion of silica, magnesia, and oxide of iron. It is a perfect resistant to corrosive gases and acids contained in city smoke-laden air. It is a most valuable quality for permanence.

The pyramids of Egypt, the temples of Karnak, St. Paul's Cathedral in England, were built of limestone, but the English limestone is a poor second to Indiana limestone. The great cathedral of Mount St. Albans, which the specifications say is to stand 10,000 years, is built of Indiana limestone.

On North Sixteenth Street the great Scottish Rite Temple being built of Indiana limestone. The Grand Central Teris being built of Indiana limestone. The Grand Central Terminal Station in New York City is built of Indiana limestone. The engineers report that it is thirty-five times as strong as necessary to bear the load. [Applause.]

As you now know something of my Indiana-limestone activities in the Congress, I will further record a few explanatory notes relative to my vote on the kind of material to be used in the construction of the George Rogers Clark Memorial, at Vincennes, Ind. Please understand that these remarks are in no sense an apology. When I have finished, the thoughtful reader will decide, I trust, that I cast the vote of a statesman, rather than the vote of a politician.

As a member of the George Rogers Clark Memorial Commission, appointed by the Speaker of the House, I, together with 14 other men, was charged with the expending of $1,500,000 of Federal money for the construction of a memorial to Clark and his copatriots, who, during the Revolutionary War, saved the Northwest Territory for the United States. Our histories remind us that this was an event of national importance.

The Clark Memorial is the finest monument built by Federal money to be found west of the Allegheny Mountains and is comparable to the Lincoln Memorial on the beautiful Potomac at Washington.

merits of granite and limestone. As building material for public buildings, Indiana limestone holds undisputed place; no one is prouder of this Hoosier product than I. The Government engineers recognize the merits of Indiana limestone for buildings to be used for offices and business purposes and Indiana has received a lion's share of orders for this material to be used in the construction of these buildings.

The Lincoln Memorial at Washington, D. C., is of granite and marble exterior and limestone interior; the recently dedicated Masonic memorial to George Washington at Alexandria, Va., is also constructed of light-colored granite similar to the stone being used in the memorial at Vincennes.

The memorial at Vincennes is in no sense a building for utilitarian purposes. The design was selected in competition with more than 50 other designs. The decision was made by a jury of architects and men of artistic tastes because of the great beauty and artistic appearance of the proposed memorial. It is being built for the centuries to commemorate a great historical episode, important in the life of our Nation.

The designing architect is a man of outstanding national reputation in this class of work. It was his recommendation that his design would be best executed in granite. The supervising architect, Mr. Hubert Parsons, a man of wide experience and employed in the Capital to supervise many of the Nation's most recent Government projects, also recommended the Clark Memorial as designed be built of granite. The commission appointed a special committee of six of its members to investigate and report. They reported that the memorial should be erected of white granite. These recommendations were also approved by the Federal Fine Arts Commission at Washington, D. C.

The decision to be made by me was not as a Representative of the second district but rather as a member of the commission selected by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to expend Federal money on a Federal project and best carry out the mandate of Congress. This mandate was to build the best, most permanent, beautiful, and acceptable memorial for the appropriation provided.

The interior of the Clark Memorial is being constructed of Indiana limestone quarried and milled in Monroe County, Ind.

There has been much political comment in newspapers about the proposed granite being from Canada. never was any truth in that statement. Mr. Heath, the contractor, of Greencastle, Ind., fully understood the specifications called for domestically produced stone. Before bidding he asked for proposals upon granite quarried and milled in Vermont of the quality shown by the sample. The stone accepted and used is being provided from the quarries at Woodbury, Vt. Everyone connected with the commission knew this when the newspaper comment was criticizing the commission about Canadian stone. This stone is being quarried and milled by American workmen at the usual prices paid for such work.

At the time of the action by the commission no independent stone company expressed dissatisfaction with its decision. Many independents expressed entire satisfaction with the commission's decision. One company attempted, through political and newspaper channels, to force the commission to disregard the architect, the committee, and the supervising architect's recommendation and give the contract to this company for economic or business reasons. They hired an attorney, who used the Indianapolis newspapers for publicity purposes. This attorney extended remarks in the newspapers about the illegality of the contract, but so far has tried his case only in the newspapers and not in the courts.

Your Representative has been faithful to every duty and every trust to his constituents in the limestone business and will, as in the past, continue to serve them faithfully in every legitimate way. We feel that time will vindicate our action in this matter. If any citizens of my district feel aggrieved at my action, I will be more than glad to confer with them and give complete details. Anyone interested session for about six months, and has so far failed to take Speeches quoted in this article plainly state the relative | is invited to go to Vincennes, where the memorial is now completed to the roof line, and see the character of the structure, the material being used, and give me his or her reaction to correctness of the commission's decision as it is demonstrated in the memorial itself.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two addresses, one by Fred Breckman, representative of the National Grange, and the other by W. Jett Lauck, who addressed a meeting at the caucus room in the House Office Building on Thursday, May 26, attended only by Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I object.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS WHICH HAVE BEEN SUBMITTED BUT NEVER APPROVED BY THREE-FOURTHS OF THE STATE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of State in reply to an inquiry submitted to the Secretary of State as to the number of outstanding constitutional amendments since the beginning of Congress, which amendments have not been acted upon by three-fourths of the States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, that information has been published heretofore, and can be found in the Congressional Record.

Mr. MICHENER. But everyone is not as familiar with all parts of the Congressional Record as is the gentleman from Wisconsin. This codifies them and puts them all on one page.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter from the Secretary of State written in answer to an inquiry by me as to the number of proposals to amend the Constitution, which proposals have been submitted to the States, but on which three-fourths of the States have never acted favorably. The Secretary of State's letter contains information on this subject which is authentic. The substance of the letter is as follows:

The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of February 18, 1932,

The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of February 18, 1932, in which you inquire whether constitutional amendments were submitted to the States in 1789, 1810, 1861, and 1924 which were never ratified by the requisite three-fourths of the States.

You are informed that Congress did in the years mentioned propose amendments to the Constitution of the United States which were not ratified by the requisite number of States. Congress, by a resolution of March 4, 1789 (1 Stat. 97 f.), proposed an amendment concerning the apportionment of Representatives and an amendment concerning the compensation of Members which were never ratified by the States, as well as 10 other amendments which were subsequently ratified. A resolution of November 27, 1810 (2 Stat. 613), proposed an amendment concerning titles of nobility. The abolition of slavery was the subject of a similar resolution (12 Stat. 251) approved March 2, 1861, and a resolution passed on June 3, 1924, which is undated as it appears in the statutes (43 Stat. 670), and which was deposited in the Department of State June 4, 1924, proposed an amendment concerning child labor.

It is suggested that further information concerning proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States may be found in the following documents:

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, Congress has now been in any fundamental steps to solve the two most important problems facing the country to-day—unemployment and relief for agriculture. Some palliative legislation has been enacted.

Congress has authorized the distribution of 40,000,000 bushels of the Federal Farm Board wheat in the shape of flour, and feed for livestock in the drought areas, and 23,000,000 bushels has been used to relieve distress among the needy.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as far as it goes, does assist business and, in the way of crop-production loans, farmers. But lending money, either to business men or farmers, is not going to restore buying power to the unemployed and their families or give cost of production to agriculture. Neither will "balancing the Budget," about which we hear so much these days, nor "cutting Government expenses to the bone" do this. Both of these are worthy of our best attention, but while we have been concentrating our efforts on these endeavors in the past months we have done practically nothing to put an end to the existing depression or to prevent a recurrence of it.

WHAT CAUSED DEPRESSION

Farmers and workers are not responsible for the distressing conditions to-day. Primarily, the depression has been brought about by taking out of this country since the war some $30,000,000,000. This huge sum has been diverted to foreign channels, both as loans to governments and in socalled investments, practically all of which are now worthless. It is obvious that this amount of money can not be removed from circulation here without resulting in deflation all along the line. The blame for this rests squarely on the shoulders of our financial leaders, who, more than any others, have had control of our finances ever since the World War. It must be obvious to all that they have made a sorry failure. Having come now to the end of their rope, they are, on the one hand, begging Congress for relief, while on the other we still find them trying to dictate to us as to the kind of legislation we shall enact. I think it is about time to face the facts and do something for the rank and file of our people instead of for this "invisible government" which has been at the helm far too long for the welfare of our Nation.

Through the passage of the Esch-Cummins railroad bill in 1920, freight rates were increased 60 per cent on farm products. In the same year, the Federal Reserve Board secretly and arbitrarily adopted the deflation policy, which was the beginning of the decline of agriculture. This act alone was responsible for a loss to farmers of over $30,000,000,000 and to country merchants of another estimated eighteen billion. This loss in capital investment of farmers, with the increased freight rates, has made recovery impossible. Added to these two causes of agricultural distress, we now have the acute depression which has thrown 8,000,000 men out of work so that they can not buy the farmer's products. The machinery of business distribution and trade has broken down. Farmers and workers are willing and able to produce, but consumers have no money with which to buy, and they will have none unless the Government itself comes to their aid. Private enterprise having fallen down on the job, the Government must act.

LESSENED BUYING POWER OF LABOR

In 1930 the aggregate pay roll of all persons engaged in gainful occupation was $9,000,000,000 less than in 1929. In 1931 this same pay roll was about $12,000,000,000 less than in 1929, and it is estimated that the total earnings for all workers in 1932, the present year, will fall at least $15,000,000,000 under the peak year of employment, 1929. This means that the purchasing power of the country by reason of unemployment has been reduced from 20 per cent to 30 per cent a year. It is not surprising, therefore, that farmers can not get a price for their products, or that merchants are unable to sell their goods. It is not overproduction but underconsumption from which we are suffering. The loss in wages of unemployed workers amounts to more money each year of the depression than the total market value of all crops raised.

PRICE OF FARM PRODUCTS MUST BE STABILIZED

It is becoming increasingly evident that something must be done to stabilize the price of farm products. It is now just about 12 years since I introduced in Congress the first bill for this purpose. I have not changed my views as to the need for that legislation, and had it been enacted I am confident that agriculture would have escaped many of the ills from which it has suffered. During the last 10 years, even though prices have at times been higher than before the World War, agriculture has not been prosperous. The better prices have been more than offset by increases in the costs of planting, machinery, taxes, interest on investment, and so forth. Farm mortgages have grown, farmers have had to draw on their capital investment for operating expenses, and at a time when, for the most part, money could be had only at high rates of interest. From 1922 to 1931, inclusive, farmers lost heavily, as will be seen from the following table compiled from data furnished by Crops and Markets of the Department of Agriculture. The figures give the cost of production for the average wheat farmer of the United States during the past 10 years. These cost prices are obtained from reports of thousands of farmers all over the United States, and include number of acres cultivated, yield per acre, cost of planting, cultivation, harvesting, marketing, fertilizers if any, seed, land rent, labor, and all other miscellaneous expenses. The estimated average price per bushel received by producers is taken from the reported cash sales of all wheat sold on the six leading terminal markets of the United States. Of course, the actual price received by the farmer is well below this average price, as the cost of freight to the terminal market must be deducted. The table is as 1922 cost of wheat production, $1.23 per bushel; price sold for, 98 cents; loss, 25 cents per bushel.

1924 cost of wheat production, $1.22 per bushel; price sold for, $1.28; gain, 6 cents per bushel.

1925 cost of wheat production, $1.32 per bushel; price sold for, $1.46; gain, 14 cents per bushel.

1926 cost of wheat production, $1.12 per bushel; price sold for, $1.24; gain, 12 cents per bushel.

1927 cost of wheat production, $1.18 per bushel; price sold for, $1.21; gain, 3 cents per bushel.

1928 cost of wheat production, $1.24 per bushel; price sold for, $1.01; loss, 23 cents per bushel.

1929 cost of wheat production, $1.24 per bushel; price sold for, $1.05; loss, 19 cents per bushel.

1930 cost of wheat production, $1.09 per bushel; price sold for, 67 cents; loss, 42 cents per bushel.

1931 cost of wheat production, $1.04 per bushel; price sold for 64 cents; loss, 40 cents per bushel.

It is apparent from a cursory study of this table why farm mortgages have been greatly increased in recent years. Wheat raisers on the average throughout the country have been losing money, though producing the most necessary article of diet. In certain marginal sections the loss per bushel is even greater than the tables disclose. This is especially true of my own State, North Dakota. The same general results of production and loss are similarly true in the case of other basic crops, such as corn, cotton, fruits, and livestock.

It is a self-evident fact that farmers can not go on indefinitely producing crops at a loss. There must come a time when they can not proceed any farther. That time has about arrived. This spring the farmers of the country from necessity have been forced to borrow nearly $100,000,000 from the Federal Government for planting the present year's crop. Such conditions will continue from year to year unless some means is found that will give them a price equal to the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. What a striking indictment this is for a great industry, although producing sufficient to supply the needs of the Nation yet unable to save enough to provide for the next year's seeding.

COOPERATION AMONG FARMERS

For nearly 30 years a sincere effort has been made to organize farmers in order that marketing conditions might be improved. It has been thought that farmers through cooperative groups could control their own products, put them upon the markets in an orderly fashion and thus receive an increased price. Much work has been done and some limited success has been had along special lines and with a few commodities. But it has been fairly well demonstrated that farmers can not organize themselves to a sufficient extent to control the sale of the great basic crops. Some of us believed that the Farm Board act would solve this problem of cooperative organization. The board, however, almost wholly ignored this feature of the law and devoted its energies in an effort to stabilize wheat and cotton prices. To-day we are seemingly in a more hopeless condition than ever. So much so, that many of the great farm leaders, after devoting a lifetime to cooperative organization work, now say that farmers will not organize. The marketing problems of farmers can not be solved by cooperation without tremendous waste of energy and effort. The one other alternative is for the Government to get for farmers a price that will meet the cost of production, if the great industry of farming is to be saved from destruction.

HIGH COST OF DISTRIBUTION

Consumers generally are opposed to any increase in prices, feeling that the cost of living is high enough. This is quite true. If the farmer could only get the price that the consumer pays he would generally have cost of production. The cost of distribution is too high. It takes $2 on the average to distribute one dollar's worth of farm products. What we must have is regulated distribution. Too often the central terminal markets are places of speculation rather than purely distributing centers.

During the World War we had a fixed price for wheat and many other products, under the direction and supervision of the Food Administrator. That was real cooperation on a large scale. The price of bread was very little higher with wheat at $2 per bushel than it is now with wheat selling for less than 70 cents a bushel. When the present marketing act was passed many farmers expected to see similar results. even though the funds at the disposal of the Farm Board were known to be far from adequate. What should have been done was to give the board $1,000,000,000 more than was appropriated. It should have been directed to buy the entire exportable surplus of all agricultural products at a cost-of-production price, put an embargo on all imports of like products, and raise all farm prices generally. That would have met the depression and would have prevented us from going any deeper into it. It is not too late to do this yet.

FARMERS SHOULD BE REFINANCED

The Frazier farm relief bill introduced in the Senate and now on the calendar, having been favorably reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, provides for the refinancing of existing farm indebtedness by the Federal Government at the rate of 11/2 per cent interest and 11/2 per cent on principal, payable on the amortization plan. money to do this shall be provided by the issuing of Federal reserve notes secured by first mortgages on farms, in contrast to the present farm-loan plan of getting money by issuing and selling bonds. There is sufficient precedent for the Government to do this. During the World War it was necessary to increase the money in circulation due to the great emergency then existing. This was done by issuing Federal reserve notes secured by agricultural and commercial paper discounted through local reserve member banks. The total amount of money in circulation was thus more than doubled. A greater emergency than the Great War now faces the farmers and all other interests of our country to-day.

A further precedent may be found in the issuance of Treasury notes put into circulation following the Civil War. Some $346,000,000 of these notes were issued then and have been doing service as money to the present day. Our Government is much better able to issue several billion dollars of Treasury notes to-day than it was to issue the amount it did following the Civil War, when many of the State governments had broken down and little coin was on deposit for redemption purposes. At present Treasury experts have estimated that there is enough free gold on hand to maintain an increased currency issue of nearly $4,000,000,000 without any impairment of the gold standard. It would not require more than $2,000,000,000 of new issue to refund the entire farm-mortgage indebtedness. The work of refinancing could extend over a period of five years, the average life term of farm-mortgage loans, one-fifth being taken up annually. In fact, experience shows that in actual practice $1 of currency can do the work of $10 working as bank credit.

The mild inflation resulting from the operation of this law would stimulate prices and start the whole country, as well as agriculture, on the road to recovery. I have introduced in the House H. R. 7524, a companion bill to that offered by Senator Frazier. It awaits favorable action by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I believe that the passage of this legislation which will increase the money in circulation and place it in the hands of agriculture, representing as it does over one-half of our buying power, will revive the business life of the Nation, increase employment, and start the factory wheels moving.

THE REMEDY

In addition to enacting the legislation I have mentioned, to refinance farmers at low rates of interest, and strengthen the Federal marketing act, Congress should authorize a program of public works so that the idle can be given jobs at once. With this threefold program in operation, there is no doubt in my mind but that we shall soon be on the way to that prosperity which for so long has been "just around the corner"—a corner which we have been unable to reach because we have failed to take steps in the right direction.

Hand in hand with a program of constructive legislation should be coupled economy in Government. Congress is making a very earnest effort along this line, and although little mention of it has been made, the fact is that the House of Representatives has already cut approximately $160,000,000 from the supply bills under the estimates submitted to us by the President and Budget Bureau. There is, unfortunately, much misrepresentation of the facts on Government expenditures, emanating, for the most part, from a powerful and selfish minority which, having grown enormously wealthy at the expense of the majority of our citizens, is now trying to escape bearing its proportionate share of the cost of Government by shifting it to the backs of the people.

No Government worthy of the name can be run without cost, and it is unavoidable that some mistakes will be made, but the fact is that aside from the increased costs due and incident to the war and which can not be escaped, the expense of the Federal Government has not grown out of proportion to the increase in our population. It is not so much the high cost of running the Government as the lack of revenue from inability of our people to pay that is troubling us.

TAXES

Taxpayers' associations in North Dakota and elsewhere are doing constructive work in the reduction of unnecessary expenditures, and lightening the burden for taxpayers. About 70 per cent of the taxes of the Nation goes for the running of State, county, and local governments. In North Dakota over 95 per cent is for these purposes. While our State contributes through its products vastly to the wealth of the Nation, and large incomes are made outside the State from handling and processing those products, yet our people pay directly a comparatively small amount in taxes to the Federal Government. Whereas the total tax in North Dakota for State, county, local government, and so forth, is about $30,000,000 annually, the most recent report of the Treasury Department shows the total of Federal taxes collected to be $365,232.84, or about 50 cents per person. It is not within the power of Congress to give any relief on State and local taxes. A grave responsibility does rest upon Congress and the administration, however, to adopt such policies as will make for the general welfare of the people, and to exercise wisdom and economy in spending public funds.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the Senate passed last night the tax bill. In my judgment, there is nothing as important for the country as the speedy enactment of the tax bill to balance the Budget. [Applause.] There can be, in my judgment, no economic recovery or increased employment until the country and the world knows that the United States is going to collect as much revenue as it spends, and that it is on a sound economical basis and that the American dollar will be maintained. [Applause.]

This Congress, in my judgment, can do nothing more important than to expedite in every possible way the enactment of this tax bill into law.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the tax bill, disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, which the Clerk will report, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

H.R. 10236. An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Following the passage by the Senate of the tax bill last night, the gentleman has noted that the New York Stock Market began to climb upward this morning.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; and I was delighted.

Mr. BLANTON. In spite of some provisions in it which New York gamblers have been condemning.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Regardless of the market, which does not put men to work, may I ask if the House will have an opportunity to pass on the provisions in the House bill which provides for a stock-transfer tax?

Mr. CRISP. I will say to my friend from New York that I much prefer to go to conference unhampered. Of course, the conferees will be charged with the duty of trying to compose the differences existing between the two Houses. We can not inject new matter. The conferees must compromise; that is, give and take.

It is my hope that the conferees as speedily as possible can reach a complete agreement on everything and come in with a complete report. [Applause.] Therefore I can not promise that I am going to bring back to the House any amendment in that bill, because I hope the conferees may be able to adjust all matters, and I hope that we can get unanimous consent to place the bill in conference without any strings tied to the conferees to bring back any amendment. I may say to my friend that if this request is not agreed to, the Committee on Rules is coming in with a rule to put the bill into conference. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The House by a decisive vote put a tax on stock transfers, and the gentleman knows that. For one, I shall vote against any conference report that does not restore the House tax against transfers of stock on exchanges.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope that the gentleman will let the House have a vote on the House tax on stock transfers before he agrees to the Senate amendment which has eliminated such tax.

Mr. CRISP. I am not going to make any agreement myself to bring back any amendment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. Collier, Mr. Crisp, Mr. Rainey, Mr. Hawley, and Mr. Treadway.

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have 98 names signed to the petition to discharge the Committee on Rules on the Patman bill for the payment of the soldiers' bonus. Two other Members have just signified their intention of signing, which brings it up to 100. Under the rules, in order to get a vote on June 13, we have to have 145 names signed to the petition by Friday of this week. Of course, every Member is entitled to his opinion either one way or the other on the matter of the soldiers' bonus, but that is not the particular aspect to which I refer at this time.

Since we have had a vote on the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment and on the beer bill, as well as the drainage bill—in fact, on every petition this session except this petition—it seems to me that the soldiers of the United States are going to look on those Members of Congress who are not in favor of giving them a vote on the Patman bill as being unfriendly to the soldiers of the country. [Cries of "Oh, no."]

Mr. BLANTON. Why not? If they will not sign up for the soldiers, why are they not unfriendly? Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has always consistently favored the soldiers in their fight for the payment of the bonus.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is a proposition now on the Clerk's desk, which is the only thing that will help the soldiers. If 145 Members sign it, we will get a vote on paying the adjusted-service certificates. If you are friendly to them, go up and sign the petition. That only will give them a vote on it. You went up and signed for the beer bill.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman did not.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not, because I was not for beer saloons, and I am not for nullifying the eighteenth amendment, or violating the law, but I am for this proposition. I went and signed it promptly, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] signing it first, our colleague from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] being the second signer, and I being next, being No. 3 on the petition.

Mr. CONNERY. I am giving you my opinion. I think you will find, when you get back to your districts, that the service men will feel that the Members of Congress who would not sign the petition, whether they are for or against the bill, in order to give the soldiers a vote, are unfriendly to the soldiers of the Republic.

EXEMPTING FROM THE QUOTA FATHERS AND MOTHERS OVER 60 YEARS OF AGE OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill, H. R. 8174, to exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon the first amendment submitted by Mr. Jenkins, as reported to the House, which struck out all of lines 3 to 11, inclusive, on page 1. It is all of the section of the bill after the enacting clause, as the bill was reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dickstein) there were—ayes, 76, noes, 27.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. This is an automatic call. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 240, nays 85, not voting 106, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKSTEIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. By special order of the House heretofore agreed to, bills on the Private Calendar will be considered to-day. The Chair believes he expresses the sentiment of the entire membership of the House when he expresses the hope that every bill on the Private Calendar may be called before the end of the session, and those unobjected to passed and sent to the Senate. In order to do that there must be some cooperation among the membership themselves. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] called attention to a proceeding that might facilitate the calling of these bills. If gentlemen know that they intend to object to a bill, it is unnecessary to reserve the objection in order for some Member to make a speech showing the necessity of it when the other Member is certain to object. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman could extend his remarks in the RECORD to show his constituent why he could not get the bill passed. With that sort of an arrangement, if the membership would cooperate, the Chair thinks we might call 125 bills on the Private Calendar this afternoon.

The Chair makes that statement in the interest of the progress of this particular calendar.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors be permitted to sit during the session of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

GEORGE E. CASEY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4868) for the relief of George E. Casey, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "Postmaster General" and insert Comptroller General of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

BASTI, N. HENRY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1029) for the relief of Basil N. Henry, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out "pension, bounty, back pay, or allowances" and insert "compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

JEANIE G. LYLES

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar. H. R. 1414, for the relief of Jeanie G. Lyles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is in conflict with the ruling of the department and the President's financial program, and I object. It is so seldom that either the President or any of his departments recommend against taking money out of the Treasury that when they do report against a bill it behooves us to back them up and not let the bill pass. The Treasury now has a deficit all together of over $3,000,000,000 since Mr. Hoover has been President, simply because he has been bringing an annual Budget to us every year asking that we appropriate for him and his departments the stupendous sum of $4,000,000,000, when with sane economy he and his departments could have gotten along with less than $3,000,-000,000 annually during the first three years of his administration. For the coming fiscal year he has asked us in his December Budget to appropriate approximately $4,000,000,-000, and our committee has already cut him down $161,-000,000 below the amounts he requested on the supply bills this House has already passed, and we are still cutting to the bone. We must cut governmental expenses and balance the Budget if we keep this Government out of bankruptcy, and we must do it even if we make some of our good colleagues mad at us for blocking their bills. Ultimately they will forgive us, for they will realize that we have merely performed our duty. I object to this bill.

JOHANA ARMSTRONG

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1553, for the relief of Johana Armstrong.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, from my examination of the report there was no fault on the part of the Government in causing this accident. The floor happened to be slippery by reason of the slush conditions resulting from snowfall in mild weather.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am reserving the right to object in order to give the author of the bill his inning.

Mr. KETCHAM. In response to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin, if the gentleman will look at the record he will find that Mrs. Armstrong, in whose behalf the claim is filed, was an old lady 76 years of age. In attempting to pass through the revolving doors of the post office at Niles, Mich., on December 23, 1929, in the rush of the Christmas mailing-the floor, as the gentleman said, being wet and slippery-she fell by reason of being struck by the door as it revolved. She suffered a broken hip and suffered greatly for some weeks. The bill is for reimbursement of her hospital expenses. Neither she nor her family are able to care for them.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KETCHAM. I yield. Mr. BLANTON. This was a very feeble old lady.

Mr. KETCHAM. Extremely so.
Mr. BLANTON. And it was the passing crowd that pushed her down. It was not the fault of the Government. It was the fault of the crowd pushing through the doors. The Government should not pay this sum of money when it is not at fault.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

DANIEL COAKLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1813, for the relief of Daniel Coakley.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

THOMAS J. ALLEN. JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2064, for the relief of Thomas J. Allen, jr.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will have to object, if we can not have an explanation of the bill. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2084, for the relief of Col. Richard M. Cutts, United States Marine Corps.

Mr. MOUSER. I object, Mr. Speaker. Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLTON. Under the rules under which we are operating is a Member going to have an opportunity to explain a bill?

The SPEAKER. None whatever, when the regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What happened to Calendar No. 280?

The SPEAKER. That was objected to by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Regular order was demanded and the gentleman from Utah was not given an opportunity to explain his bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the Speaker permit the objection to be reserved to the bill (H. R. 2084)?

The SPEAKER. Not when the regular order is demanded. The regular order was demanded by the gentleman from New York. The Chair does not control the regular order. However, the Chair will state that the Speaker has the right, as a Member of the House, to demand the regular order if the Speaker wants to, but in this instance he did not.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I appreciate that.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black]. The Clerk will call the next bill.

CHARLES W. DWORACK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2296, for the relief of Charles W. Dworack.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is against the department's recommendation and I am forced to object.

It would cause money to be taken out of the depleted Treasury, and I am working hard to help balance the Budget. I object.

WILLIAM K. LOVETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3029, for the relief of William K. Lovett.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CAUGHMAN-KAMINER CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3460, for the relief of Caughman-Kaminer Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Caughman-Kaminer Co., of Lexington, S. C., the sum of $198.87 for merchandise lost

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6 strike out the sign and figures "$198.87" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$130.87."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

In line 7, after the word "transit," add the words "in full set-tlement of all claims against the Government of the United

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mousea: On page 1, line 7, at the end of the bill, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, will the author of this bill kindly give us the date when this property was lost in transit so that the date may be inserted in the bill in order to identify the transaction and thus prevent any further claim against the Government? The date showing when the goods were lost in transit should be included in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is better secured now than to put some specific date in the bill unless you are sure of its being correct.

Mr. MOUSER. Unless we are sure of the date, of course, it should not be included in the bill. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BERYL ELLIOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3551, for the relief of Beryl Elliott.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state that I was absent this morning when the roll call was taken. I was in conference at the White House. I did not know that a vote was being taken. Had I been present I would have voted for the Jenkins amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SOPHIA A. BEERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3561, for the relief of Sophia A. Beers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the amount carried in this bill will be reduced from $13,720 which the gentleman from Oregon asked for in his bill to $5,100 and that the usual attorneys' fee clause be included in the bill, I shall not object.

But the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN] must agree for his bill to be reduced from $13,720 to $5,100, and he must be willing that the usual attorneys' fee clause be added to the bill.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

EULA K. LEE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3775, for the relief of Eula K. Lee.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOUGLAS R. ESPY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3791, for the relief of Douglas B. Espy.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROSAMOND B. M'MANUS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4059, for the relief of Rosamond B. McManus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not propose to object, I want to suggest that we are not making any headway with this Private Calendar. Let us go along and do business. We have three days in which to consider the calendar, and we should not become snarled because some Member jumps up and objects.

Mr. BLANTON. Our friend from Oregon [Mr. Martin] ought not to get mad just because some Member objected to his bill. That was the prerogative of our colleague to object, when he thought the bill should not pass. Some of these bills on this calendar are meritorious and ought to be passed, and to-day, to-morrow, and Friday will probably be the only days upon which they have any chance to pass. The gentleman from Oregon must not get sore, and make objections merely because he is peeved. That will not get him anywhere.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, if this is a sample of the justice of this House, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that this bill be reduced to $5,000 and the usual attorney fee amendment included in the bill, I shall not object. This bill as introduced seeks to take $25,000 out of the Treasury. Before it passes the objection stage, I want it distinctly understood that it must be reduced to $5,000. With that understanding, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Woodrum). The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York and Mr. MARTIN of Oregon objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is futile for us to try to go on with this calendar if the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin] is going to object to every bill just because he is mad. He ought to calm himself down and not get peeved just because some Member exercised his inalienable right to object to his bill. He ought to be a good sport and take his medicine, and go along with us and help to pass the good bills on this calendar; and some are good.

The regular order was demanded. Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, painful as it is to object to a request of my beloved colleague, I object.

CHARLES HELLYER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4274, for the relief of Charles Hellyer.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. MARTIN of Oregon objected.

JOSE O. ENSLEW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4405, for the relief of Jose O. Enslew.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask a question. I wonder if the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin] is going to object to this bill just because some one objected to his bill? If the gentleman will curb his temper and get back to normalcy, we will pass a lot of good bills to-day. There are some good bills on this calendar, but it is necessary for those of us who watch the calendar to object to the bad bills. I did not object to the gentleman's bill, and the gentleman ought to calm himself. He will accomplish more by it.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BUSCH-SULZER BROS. DIESEL ENGINE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5429, for the relief of Busch-Sulzer Bros. Diesel Engine Co.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries $15,000, and I object. Such a bill appropriating $15,000 should not be passed here by unanimous consent in a half minute of time. I object.

MILES THOMAS BARRETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5682, for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL] state the reason the Government should pay this small amount?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is compensation due to this soldier for service rendered from May 3, 1918, to August 19, 1918, when he did not draw any pay although serving in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. We can not transact any business, and what is the use of wasting the time of the House?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dyer) there were—ayes none, noes 125.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present, as evidenced by the vote just taken. We can not consider meritorious bills, so why waste the time of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he is out of order. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order. Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I am anxious that the House accomplish something on the calendar to-day. The committee has worked hard on these bills. I asked for the regular order when a reservation of objection was made on the theory that we would proceed faster if an objection were made instead of a reservation of objection.

However, noting the temper of the House, I do not think I will further insist on the regular order in reservations, having in mind only the getting of an explanation, and that they do not intend at the end of the explanation, whatever it is, to object. With that understanding, I will no longer insist on the regular order.

Mr. COLTON. In view of the gentleman's statement, will the gentleman ask unanimous consent to return to the gentleman's bill?

Mr. COLLINS. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin] knows what the bill is he has objected to merely because he is peeved. I do not believe that the gentleman can give the name of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. MOUSER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MOUSER. As I understand it, this bill, H. R. 293, was passed without objection, and the RECORD so shows.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from Oregon objected to the bill when it was called, and then afterwards withdrew his objection. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay Miles Thomas Barrett, of Bridgeville, Pa., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for his service in the United States Army as a sergeant in the Corps of Engineers for the period of May 3, 1918, to August 19, 1918, both dates inclusive, the sum of $175: Provided, That his service in the United States Army during the period in question is hereby made honorable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen, if you want to get along with this calendar, we had better get down to business. There have been three days set aside for the Private Calendar—to-day, Thursday, and Friday. We have over 600 bills remaining on the Private Calendar for consideration. Most of you are interested in many of these claims.

The trouble started this afternoon when the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, immediately asked for the regular order and refused to permit Members to discuss some of the bills that were apparently objectionable. The committee checking the Private Calendar on both sides of the House devote a lot of time every night in preparation and going over these bills on the calendar. They are not seeking to object to meritorious bills which are on the calendar but to properly consider them and do the right and proper thing. The gentleman from New York began by asking for the regular order, which prevented Members from discussing bills in which they were interested. If Members may not reserve an objection in order to have an explanation, we will not get very far with this calendar. We must understand that these men on both sides of the Chamber who are charged with the duty of checking these bills do not have all the information which the committee has, and many times they want to be informed on some of the facts when these bills are called. Many bills are passed after a reservation of objection has been withdrawn.

What ought to be done here to-day is to turn back to the first bill considered, No. 277, and give all of these Members a fair chance. Give them their day in court. Let us go back to the first bill called up to-day so that we can finish this calendar before adjournment of this session. That is the only way to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. That ought to be done.

Mr. McKEOWN. In view of the gentleman's statement we can go back to where we first started.

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes. I am making no criticism of anybody. As soon as this bill is completed, I shall make that request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 1, line 8, after the figures "$175," insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, last session of Congress I introduced a resolution to appoint a special committee to draft a bill to be introduced designating a Government agency to consider private claim bills. No parliamentary body fritters away their time on private claims except the Congress of the United States. A board or a quasi-judicial body considers these bills in other countries and has the right to make payment out of funds appropriated for that purpose after a proper adjudication or decision has been made.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Excuse me for a moment, and then I shall yield. Some agency like the Comptroller General ought to have the right to settle outright claims up to $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. One thousand dollars.

Mr. COLLINS. One thousand dollars would suit me. Then if the claim amounts to over $1,000, the board or the Comptroller General should submit the findings to the Congress, and the Claims Committee should consider the bill, together with the findings, and make report to the Congress. The Claims Committee would have ample time to consider bills of consequence then. As it is now, it is impossible for the Claims Committee to pass on approximately 7,000 claim bills, the number introduced at this session of Congress. I have endeavored since I have been an objector to select for objection only those bills wholly without merit. I have tried to follow certain rules and have objected to bills that I thought ought not to be passed, but this position of objector is a position that ought not to be put on any Member of Congress. We ought not to expect a Member of this House to have to do this onerous and very unpopular work.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Does the gentleman not think it should be the duty of the man who is on the committee on either side of the aisle in charge of the bills to urge those that he finds to be meritorious the same as to object to those that are not meritorious?

Mr. COLLINS. I do. We, however, should pass a resolution this session of Congress appointing a special committee to bring in a bill placing the duty of adjudication of private bills upon the Comptroller General, or some other body, and relieve ourselves of this task which at best is imperfectly done because of the large number of claim bills that must be considered.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In order to show the exact situation on claims against the Government, it should be added that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction over all matters based on contracts and upon strictly legal grounds.

Mr. COLLINS. I have no choice as to any agency to do the work, but I do think we ought to provide an agency.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. And I shall reintroduce the resolution introduced by me during the last Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I agree perfectly with the gentleman, but it should be said that these claims are all in the nature of claims against the Government which could not be allowed except as matters of grace.

Mr. COLLINS. No; that is not quite the case.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They are not based on any legal grounds to be considered by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLANTON. Until we do work out a proper plan, every bad bill that passes here by unanimous consent throws the responsibility of passing that bad bill on the shoulders of every Member in Congress. As a Member of this House, that responsibility rests upon my shoulders, and I am responsible when I allow a bad bill to pass here by unanimous consent. For that reason I carefully investigate this Private Calendar so that I can be prepared to stop the bad bills. And when my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. Collins] objects to a bill, it is because he has investigated it and found it to be without merit.

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of the pending amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am certainly surprised to observe the spectacle in the House to-day. Before I proceed I want to absolve the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] from any improper motive in calling for the regular order. I believe that in the orderly consideration of the Private Calendar, since several days have been set aside for the consideration of private claims bills, we should have a gentlemen's agreement to go through that calendar entirely without reservation of objection, and pass the bills to which there is no objection or reservation of objection. We can then commence the next day at the beginning of the calendar and reserve objections in the cases of bills which might need further explanation on the floor.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin] apparently did not show the proper spirit, I am sorry to say. He is a fine gentleman and a good legislator. Of course, he is a new Member, but it is manifestly unfair for any Member of the Congress to arbitrarily object to the consideration of good bills where there is not a valid objection, just because some other Member of Congress has objected to his own bill. [Applause.]

Where would we get if every Member took that attitude?
Mr. MANLOVE. I will tell the gentleman where we would get. We would get some reasonable, sensible rule for the consideration of these bills that have been considered by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCHAFER. I did not yield to the gentleman, but when the gentleman speaks of a reasonable, sensible rule, the gentleman must have a private claims bill on the calendar to-day.

Mr. MANLOVE. Yes; and that bill has been considered by such men as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hooper] and others, as fine jurists as ever were in this House.

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, I understand that, but we must face the facts as we find them to-day. I have served on the Claims Committee for some time, and have worked until 1 o'clock in the morning on many occasions considering these claims bills, as chairman of a subcommittee. Some of them were contained in folders 6 inches thick. Under the operation of a rule, where one Member can object to the consideration of a bill, I think it is a ridiculous position for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Manlovel to defend the position that the House found itself in to-day.

Mr. MANLOVE. I do not defend any such position as that; but I do state that after the committee has considered these bills and has studied them and has looked into the evidence it is a ridiculous position for any one Member to have the power to come here and thwart the purpose of that committee—1 Member out of 435.

Mr. SCHAFER. I did not yield; but I hope the gentleman will assist me to get two more minutes so that I can finish what I wanted to say. The Record will show that I have consistently fought to liberalize the rule under which private claims bills are considered.

I agree with the gentleman; but it is a more ridiculous position to bring up a bill for consideration and let some Member use the rules of the House and his right in order to filibuster and take up the entire day in the House and prevent the consideration of any bills on the Private Calendar. Any one Member of this House, opposed to one of these bills, can filibuster and defeat any of these private claim bills when he desires to do so. When we are operating under this rule would it be fair to prevent the consideration of any of these bills because there might be a few bad bills on the calendar? I admit there are a few bad bills which have been reported by the Committee on Claims. I voted against them in committee. I intend to take care of them when we reach them on the calendar. When members of a standing committee with the press of business that we have in our office and on other committees and on the floor of the House have met and studied these bills as the members of the Claims Committee have, working late into the night, and at every regular meeting day, and then find that because some Member's bill was objected to on the floor of the House he objects to all bills on the calendar. I say that it is a sorry spectacle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we are just stopping the consideration of bills by a lot of talk.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object to the gentleman from Wisconsin asking for two additional minutes, and I shall not object to the gentleman from Oregon, whose name has been mentioned, asking for time, but after that I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] seems to be fearful that we are wasting time. His position, asking for an adjournment and the wasting of an entire legislative day, is just as ridiculous and perhaps more ridiculous than the position taken by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I was surprised to find some of the Members who have bills on the calendar rising and voting to adjourn a few moments ago. I could call off some names of those who have private claim bills on the calendar from the Claims Committee reported out by me as a subcommittee. Some of those gentlemen are authors of bills which have caused me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims to spend four or five hours late at night studying their merits so I could make a recommendation to the full committee and the full committee recommend the bill and place it on the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not intend to have some of the Members who are badgering the members of the Claims Committee in the corridor and on the floor day in and day out, asking them to report their bills so they can come up on the floor of the House, act like demagogues and facetiously object to bills or move to adjourn because their own bills are objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 1, line 8, strike out the proviso.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, the proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That his service in the United States Army during the period in question is hereby made honorable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. He was rendering honorable service at the time he was discharged.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know whether he was or not.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. The record shows that fact, if the gentleman will examine the record.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then this proviso is not needed.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. But the man has not

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. But the man has not an honorable discharge now from one of the services.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that no legislation by Congress can or should affect the action of an administrative department, and particularly of the administration of the Army with reference to a discharge.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman understand the circumstances of this case?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say I understand them perfectly, and if the gentleman will allow me to proceed for a moment I think I will make it perfectly clear.

I refuse to yield further.

not honorably discharged this is the kind of proviso we usually include:

Provided that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers such ex-service man shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the

But we never by legislative enactment declare a man's service to be made honorable by virtue of the passage of the

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; not now.

Whether a man's service in the Army has been honorable or not is determined by his record in the Army, and the Congress of the United States can not determine that his service was honorable, or that he was or should have been honorably discharged.

If the gentleman believes the proviso in the bill in some way may affect the payment awarded by the bill, then I suggest that instead of the proviso which is in the bill he substitute the proviso I have suggested.

Mr. BLANTON. Offer it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And I will ask leave to offer it as a substitute.

Mr. BLANTON. Good; do that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This is the substitute I offer:

That in the administration of any law conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers the aforesaid Miles Thomas Barrett shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. He is not asking for a benefit; he is asking for wages earned during his service overseas. He is not asking for a pension.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman apparently misapprehends my purpose. The first part of the bill provides for payment. I am not attacking that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. He has an honorable discharge from one of the services given to him at the time he was discharged. The gentleman does not understand the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think I do, but the proviso is not proper and does not improve the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I do; and I offer a substitute for the proviso now in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the former amendment will be withdrawn and the gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Strike out the proviso beginning in line 8, down to and including line 11, on page 1, and insert in lieu thereof "Provided, That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, the said Miles Thomas Barrett shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. Mr. MOUSER. In this instance I think the gentleman's

In legislation which we pass granting pensions to persons | record is concerned, but has this Congress up to this time corrected dishonorable discharges of World War veterans, and are we not setting a precedent in this case which will be followed in many thousand cases to come hereafter?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that my first amendment was to strike out the proviso in the bill, and I think that would be the best action to take. I do not think the proviso is necessary. The first part of the bill gives this man the amount of money which he claims for his services, but I repeat that the Congress of the United States can not declare by an enactment or by a law that the service of any soldier has been honorable during any particular period. The Congress of the United States knows nothing about that. That is a matter of record in the War Department and we can not declare it here simply by dictum. I am perfectly willing to stand by my original amendment to strike out the proviso. That is not going to hurt the case, because the man gets his full amount. However, since the soldier rendered full and honorable service in the Navy, from which he did receive an honorable discharge, I do not believe this case need establish a dangerous precedent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Speaker, this is a peculiar bill. It is very objectionable if the proviso is going to remain in the bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIND-BLOM] is entirely correct, that we can not and do not legislate as to the military record of any soldier or officer. We merely provide in all this legislation that so far as pensions are concerned so-and-so shall be considered to have been honorably discharged. We can not by legislative enactment change the military record of any soldier as carried in the War Department. All this bill seeks to do is to pay this soldier some back pay. It is rather passing strange that the Committee on Claims did not ask for a report on this bill from the War Department. It is one of the few bills on which there is no report, and if a report had been called for we would not have gotten into the impasse we are now in. The sensible thing to do is to either adopt the proposed substitute, which is harmless, or else strike out the proviso. I will raise the question of no quorum if this proviso is included in this bill, because never in the history of Congress have we legislated as to the record of any soldier.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I am not disposed to refuse to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, but I do not think the gentleman understands the circumstances surrounding the case. This veteran is not asking that his military record be made honorable. He is asking for pay for honorable service. He was in the Spanish-American War forces and received an honorable discharge in 1910. When we entered the World War he enlisted in the Marines August 27, 1917, for the duration of the war, with the understanding that he would be sent to France with the first detachment going across. He waited for seven months and when the opportunity was not forthcoming he asked for and was granted three days' leave of absence from his post. He went to San Antonio, Tex., in civilian clothes and enlisted in the Army, with the understanding that he would be sent overseas. That was in May, 1918, and in June, 1918, he was overseas. Soon after his arrival overseas he wrote a letter through channels notifying the Marine Corps of his whereabouts. The Marine Corps claimed jurisdiction over him on August 4, 1918. He was then on the front lines. After proper investigation he was restored to duty and given an honorable discharge from the Marine Corps August 13, 1919. He received the croix de guerre and a citation by General Pershing. He did not receive any pay from May, 1918, until August, 1918, while in the Army. He is not seeking to have his military record corrected. His record speaks for itself. However, he did not receive any pay during the time I have mentioned and he was not paid by the War Department because they did not recognize his service, and amendment is correct so far as clearing this man's military being considered absent without leave from the marines he did not receive any compensation for the period referred to.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Why does the gentleman provide in the bill then that he shall be considered as having been honorably discharged? 'It seems to me that is not necessary.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Because he did not get any pay or his discharge at the time he left his post with the marines and the marines took charge of him in August, 1918.

Mr. DYER. This is not the way to grant an honorable discharge to a soldier.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. He has an honorable discharge from the Marine Corps. The general gave him an honorable discharge after he found out the circumstances and gave him a letter of commendation. However, his record is not clear in the War Department, although he rendered meritorious service while in the Army, and it is sought to make this service honorable and not to correct or change a record already established.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My amendment makes it clear in the matter of receiving pay and allowances.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. He does not object to an honorable discharge; however, he does not need an honorable discharge from the Army to accomplish the purpose of the bill and entitle him to pay for services rendered to the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This will protect him so far as his Army service is concerned, and the gentleman has said that he never was properly discharged from the Army.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. No; but he got a proper discharge from the Marine Corps.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This provision will protect him and also protect the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. In this case I am more solicitous about the individual than the Government, for the soldier, prompted by patriotic motives and a desire to do some real fighting, transferred himself from one branch of the service to another without the usual formalities.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is a proper one. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Campbell] inadvertently referred to this man's first service as in the Spanish-American War. The gentleman undoubtedly will correct that when he reviews

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I did not get the gentleman's statement about the Spanish-American War.

Mr. MOUSER. The gentleman inadvertently stated in his remarks that this man's first enlistment, concerning which the dishonorable discharge related, was during the Spanish-American War.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman misunderstood me. I said he was a Spanish-American War veteran and then enlisted during the World War.

Mr. MOUSER. The first enlistment to which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois refers relates to the World War.

This man enlisted during the World War with the understanding he was going to get overseas within a short period of time. He was disappointed in this and obtained a 73-hour furlough and enlisted elsewhere and did get overseas, where his service was not only honorable but distinguished and meritorious. There now comes a question as to whether or not, inasmuch as his name was dropped from the pay roll because of his being absent without leave or deserting, his name should be restored to the pay roll for the interim referred to, in order that he may receive $175. Unless his discharge is made honorable, he can not legally draw $175 from the Treasury of the United States, and therefore the gentleman from Illinois, in a spirit of helpfulness, offers an amendment to clarify the record so that this man can legally draw this $175.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman

Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I had a somewhat similar case where an American enlisted in the Canadian Army, after deserting our Army, and when he came back he was given promotion and General McCain wrote a letter to the commanding officer at Camp Meade and told him that this soldier would return there and that there would be an honorable discharge waiting there for him.

Mr. MOUSER. I am trying to help the gentleman-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I do not need any help. This case will stand on its own merits.

Mr. BLANTON. With the Chindblom amendment adopted, this man gets his pay and gets his status fixed properly.

Mr. MOUSER. Not only that, but it removes a blot from

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I am not opposing the amendment. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDELOM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the confusion that happened earlier in the afternoon, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 277 and call the bills following in order that every Member may have a fair and honest chance and so that we may handle the calendar in the proper way.

Mr. PARKS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

LAWRENCE A. JETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5793, for the relief of Lawrence A. Jett.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, for reasons previously stated in reference to similar bills I object.

A. L. MARSHALL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6003, for the relief of A. L. Marshall.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500 to A. L. Marshall, of Ruleville, Miss., which said sum was paid by him on May 12, 1930, to the United States marshal, and which sum was covered into the United States Treasury on June 26, 1930, by reason of the forfeiture of the appearance bond of Ben Davis, alias Jack Avent, charged with the violation of the national prohibition act, on which appearance bond the said A. L. Marshall was a surety, and the said A. L. Marshall having subsequently, on the 9th day of February, 1931, brought the said Ben Davis, alias Jack Avent, into open court, whereupon he, the said Ben Davis, alias Jack Avent, entered a plea of guilty and was sentenced to serve a term of six months in the jail of Coahoma County, Miss., by the Delta Division of the Northern District of the United States District Court of the State of Mississippi. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 277.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Reserving the right to object, I made the same request, and then to follow right through the calendar, but some Member objected.

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

SAM ECHOLS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6855, for the relief of Sam Echols.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to pay Sam Echols, the father of George W. Echols, deceased, the sum of $7.14 due and unpaid the said George W. Echols for services rendered by him as postal clerk in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the figures "$7.14," insert "in full payment of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I suggest to the gentleman from Nevada that his amendment would more properly come after the word Echols" in line 5.

Mr. ARENTZ. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin and modify my amendment in that respect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM R. NOLAN

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 7656, for the relief of William R. Nolan.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Reserving the right to object, I would like an explanation of this proposition.

Mr. MOUSER. Let me say to the gentleman that the War Department recommends the passage of this bill. The man was injured in an airplane accident, and the payment was disallowed simply because of a technical construction of the

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I withdraw the reservation. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury Be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement of all claims against the Government, the sum of $613.75 to William R. Nolan for pay and allowance for the period from January 29, 1926, to April 14, 1926, the same being the pay and allowance of his rank during the period that he was receiving treatment from a specialist as a result of an accident in line of duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 8, after the figures "1926," strike out the remainder of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And also for any disbursements and expenses incurred by reason of an injury incurred in the line of

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

THOMAS J. ALLEN. JR.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 280.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I objected to that bill, and the regular order was demanded without giving the gentleman any chance to explain the bill. I hope the request of the gentleman from Arkansas will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas J. Allen, jr., the sum of $2,183.50 for the total damage of his personal effects by vandals while superintendent of the Hawaii National Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, when I was interrupted by a demand for the regular order to obtain some information, as I had examined the report rather carefully, this money is to reimburse this officer of the Government by reason of damage to personal property, caused, it is assumed, by bandits or vandals while he was away from home. I would like to inquire whether the Government has ever recognized similar obligations?

Mr. COLTON. I can not cite the gentleman to a precedent, but the department writes such a favorable report in regard to this measure that I feel sure it is not new in principle. I may say that a man was indicted for this offense, but was not convicted. There is no doubt that this deed was done to take revenge against the Government, or at least the administration of national parks. Mr. Allen is a very high-grade gentleman and would not ask an unreasonable thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. It seems to me that this man suffered injury by reason of the office that he held.

Mr. COLTON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Therefore, the Government should bear the burden attached, just as if a prohibition officer were injured in the performance of his duty. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GRISWOLD. I object.

CHARLES W. DWORACK

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 282, H. R. 2296, for the relief of Charles W. Dworack.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If it is clearly understood that this bill is to be reduced by an amendment from $10,000 to $2,500 and some other safeguarding amendments are added, I shall not object.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I must object unless the gentleman amends his request by asking to return to Calendar No. 277, and the consideration of all bills from that point on down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JEANIE G. LYLES

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 277 and those cases that in the turmoil had no opportunity given for hearing, and that we proceed and give them a hearing on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I feel compelled to object because of the attitude of the author of the bill on Calendar No. 277, who objected to returning to another number, unless there was coupled with the unanimous-consent request a return to his bill. However, in the interest of orderly procedure I shall not object. I sincerely hope that the Members of the House will not object to bills or to the return to bills passed over simply because their individual bill is involved and we do not return to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman's request to be to return to Calendar No. 277 and to call the bills from there on down.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That have been objected to? Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLINS. Reserving the right to object, are we going to consider again all of the bills that have been considered this morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands the gentleman's request.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Calendar No. 290 was called when I was unavoidably detained from the House this morning. I would like to make some explanation of it.

Mr. BACHMANN. If the request goes through, that bill will be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the bills, beginning with Calendar No. 277.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1414) for the relief of Jeanie G. Lyles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado, Yes.

amended to reduce the amount from $10,000 to $2,500?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will be patient with me while I explain that this bill is for the relief of the mother of Lieutenant Lyles, the lieutenant having died in 1903. He was one of the outstanding heroes of the Philippine Insurrection and fought valiantly. In 1902, he invented a frame for the purpose of carrying rapid-fire guns, which was adopted and used by the Government, and has been used by the Government ever since. Up until 1911 over 3,000 of those appliances were in use by the Army of the United States, and from that time on their use has been most extensive. In 1912, a bill was introduced in this Congress to pay Mrs. Lyles the sum of $2,500. After full consideration of the bill it was set aside with a favorable recommendation by the Committee of the Whole House for the payment to her of $2,000. If I had the time I could draw attention to a colloquy which occurred at the time it was under consideration in 1912, which shows plainly and unmistakably that the department had agreed to pay to the mother of this deceased officer, in lieu of his taking out a patent, the sum of, I think, 10 per cent royalty, though I may be mistaken about the amount. However, the agreement with the Government was unmistakable. Mr. Rucker was then representing one of the districts from Colorado. Mrs. Lyles was at that time a resident of Colorado and has since moved to Maryland. That agreement showed unmistakably that there was a contract with the Government by which he was to be paid a certain royalty on the use of these appliances, and I have in my files a letter of about a year ago from Assistant Secretary Payne to the effect that $2,500 is considered a reasonable sum to be paid to this widow.

I can read that letter if it will be of any interest. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. I yield. Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not established law that when an officer invents anything while in the service of the Government, that invention goes to the benefit of the

Mr. GAMBRILL. That may be the law, but there was nothing to prevent this lieutenant from taking out a patent on this invention.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is established law that if any employee invents a device during his employment it belongs to the employer.

Mr. GAMBRILL. May I just read this letter for the benefit of the House?

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. The Government most certainly is under a moral obligation to pay this man for the use of his idea.

Mr. GAMBRILL. There is no question about that. Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me further in connection with the moral side of it?

Mr. GAMBRILL. I yield.
Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is there are hundreds of employees who give their brains in inventions who make no claim whatsoever on the Government.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Secretary Payne wrote me on July 11, 1930-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBRILL. The Assistant Secretary of War wrote me on July 11, 1930:

The file discloses correspondence in which the adoption and use of Lieutenant Lyles' invention is frankly admitted, and the opin-

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman agree to have it in expressed that the sum of $2,500 would represent fair compensation for the entire use of the invention made by the War Department, such figure being computed as 10 per cent royalty upon the cost of manufacture of all pack saddles and frames, made or contemplated during the period of 17 years.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAMBRILL. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I do not know of any reason why the order of Colonel Rucker should not be in the report. if he ever ordered Lieutenant Lyles to make one or a dozen of these pack saddles. To adapt an idea which has been used for years and years in the West for pack saddles and try to claim it as a new invention, is almost preposterous. Pack frames have been used from time immemorial for packing in the West. If the Government wishes to give this lady $2,500 because her husband died, that is another proposition, but to give her $2,500 as a matter of right because this man adapted the idea of using a pack saddle is preposterous.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

JOHANA ARMSTRONG

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1553, for the relief of Johana Armstrong.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill had his inning, and I objected, and I will object again.

DANIEL COAKLEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1813, for the relief of Daniel Coakley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that objection has been made to-day to the consideration of this bill H. R. 1813, for the relief of Daniel Coakley. The objection seems to be based on the fact that the injury received by this man occurred before the enactment, in 1916, of the United States employees' compensation act. A single objection is sufficient to prevent present consideration. I am wondering if those who are inclined to make objection to bills of this character will pursue the same course as to all other similar measures on the Private Calendar. Of course, if any exceptions are made, the results are manifestly unfair to those whose relief bills are objected to. There should be no discrimination.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The facts involved in this case present a very strong appeal for equitable consideration. The official records show that on November 21, 1891, Daniel Coakley, white, then a boy about 13 years old, was employed as a messenger in the United States engineer work on the Louisville and Portland Canal at Louisville, Ky. This canal was and is a part of the Ohio River system. While so employed he suffered the loss of his right leg by having it crushed off beneath the wheels of a railroad car. The compensation act only permits the payment of compensation and the furnishing of medical treatment, including orthopedic appliances, for injuries sustained on and after September 7, 1916. A recent application made by Coakley to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, through the War Department, for furnishing an artificial limb, was disallowed for the reason that the commission has no appropriation for the furnishing of such appliances.

The Secretary of War, to whom was referred the identical measure, H. R. 4281, by the Committee on Claims for report in the last Congress, made a report thereon under date of February 26, 1930, setting forth the general facts as to the accident and injury. The same is included in the favorable report of the Committee on Claims touching the present measure, together with the formal report of the assistant engineer, Granville W. Shaw, engaged on the canal work; and the report of the chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The report of Assistant Engineer Shaw dated December | 28, 1891, included by the Secretary of War in his report just mentioned, shows that Coakley, as messenger on the indicated governmental work was sent by his superiors to the Government warehouse near Eighteenth Street and the canal to procure there a key from Mr. Hughes, the Government receiver of materials. Coakley mounted a coal car attached to a westbound train on the track of the Louisville Cement Co. This company, I may say, was then engaged in that immediate section in the making of cement and operated its cars over local tracks for this purpose.

Employees of the canal work rode, from time to time, on these cars-which ran only a short distance along the line of the canal-with the knowledge and consent of the Louisville Cement Co. officials. Young Coakley therefore, in the discharge of his duty, and in line with custom, boarded the indicated car and, as shown by Engineer Shaw's report, rode as far as a switch or siding east of the bridge, where the eastbound train of cars was waiting. Mr. Hughes was on the eastbound train, and Coakley saw him at this siding point. In consequence Coakley sought to jump off from the car on which he was riding in order to reach Mr. Hughes to ask him for the indicated key. As Coakley thus sought to jump off the car of the westbound train, he slipped and fell with his right leg across the rail. One or more of the cars of the moving train passed over the limb, crushing it off just below the knee joint. Thereupon he was carried to a local hospital and his leg amputated just above the knee

THE EQUITIES INVOLVED

The Secretary of War in his report, after reviewing the facts of Coakley's employment and the accident and injuries,

In view of the facts, clearly shown, that Coakley was injured while in the performance of his duty, and without willful misconduct on his part, it is my opinion that the claim is meritorious and that the relief sought by the bill should be granted.

The chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, on March 11, 1930, submitted to the Committee on Claims a report on the former bill (H. R. 4281), and in that report stated, in substance, as follows: That should the measure be enacted into law the commission would be authorized to receive Coakley's claim when filed, notwithstanding the fact that his injury would not otherwise come within its jurisdiction; and to consider such evidence as he might submit showing that had his injury occurred after September 7, 1916, he would be entitled to the benefits provided in section 4 of the compensation act, and to extend to him such benefits as he might thus be shown to be entitled to receive, from and after the date of the passage of the bill. The chairman of the commission further states that

The injury in this case having occurred many years prior to the enactment of the law which it administers, the commission does not make any recommendation as to the advisability of the passage of the bill. If, however, the injury was incurred in the performance of duty, as appears to be the case, the equities would seem to be very strong for some future relief after 39 years of caring for

I may add, Mr. Speaker, that this appraisal of the equities involved, as made by the chairman of the commission, seems to be most just. This man's life was stunted and forever dwarfed by reason of this accident, sustained by him in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Federal Government. He was a poor boy and has gone through life maimed and crippled. He grew up without education. He has struggled hard for a bare existence. His earning power was serionsly and permanently impaired by this youth-time accident. He has never had a fair chance, and he is now 54 years old and life's sun is sinking for him.

Had the compensation act been in force when his injuries were sustained he might have drawn throughout all these years something in the way of compensation from the Government he was serving. Should the fact that the humane legislation intended to cover such cases was not enacted until some years after the occurrence of the accident operate as a permanent bar to the relief which should have been the object of the once and in the superintendent's nome acid was legislation intended to cover such cases was not enacted thrown over most of his furniture and the clothes of himself and his wife. With the exception of some furniture and the car, the property injured by the acid was totally destroyed or so seriously impaired that it had to be replaced.

his from the date of the accident? He yet suffers. He is yet in need. He is yet altogether poor and destitute and tremendously handicapped. In recent years he has had to pass a portion of his time in the Home for the Aged and Infirm of the city of Louisville because he was without means and because he was unable to secure any character of employment. Should this great Government of ours be less humane, less charitable, less just, if you please, than any wellmanaged private corporation of the country dealing with similar situations? I had hoped that these considerations would appeal to the membership of the House sufficiently to overcome and prevent any objections of technical character to action on the bill.

This man has just this one life to live, and from his very youth he has been thus terribly burdened and handicapped. Literally speaking, he has been one of the "forgotten ones." Only the Congress, in the exercise of its plenary powers of kindness and justice, can afford him any measure of relief. The passage of this measure would enable him to go before the indicated commission and present his case upon its merits. The most that he might receive under such presentation would be small, for his earning power was and is very small. Lacking education, lacking physical wholeness, with age creeping on, and discouraged by his fate, for what can he hope, unless here, in this small way, we help him? He has not even been able to purchase a needed artificial limb because the law has not authorized it. Should this measure come up for future consideration in the House I hope that any Member inclined to object may conceive himself to be in this unfortunate man's place before entering an objection to its consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

THOMAS J. ALLEN. JR.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2064, for the relief of Thomas J. Allen, jr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this bill is allowed to pass it makes the Government an insurer of the private property of every one of these employees.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. This is a different bill from any other here. I was inclined to oppose the bill when I first read the report. I made inquiry of the director of the national parks, and from him I received a short statement. which I will not read, but which I will put in the RECORD.

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, NATIONAL PARK SERVICE. Washington, May 13, 1932.

Hon. William R. Eaton,

House of Representatives.

Dear Mr. Eaton: Referring to our conversation yesterday in regard to H. R. 2064, a bill for the relief of Thomas J. Allen, jr., introduced by Congressman Don B. Colton, let me explain that the amount of this bill, viz, $2,183.50, was submitted by Superintendent Allen at my request.

The circumstances of the case are as follows:

Mr. Allen was transferred from the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo., where he was assistant superintendent, to the position of superintendent of Hawaii Park, which, as you know, is located on two islands, Hawaii and Maul. There had been trouble in the on two islands, Hawaii and Maul. There had been trouble in the of superintendent of Hawaii Park, which, as you know, is located on two islands, Hawaii and Maul. There had been trouble in the park due to the presence of what might be called a public enemy. This person, at that time unknown, had caused trouble of different kinds and a ranger's wife had been assaulted, apparently by the troublemaker. It was impossible to fasten the crime on the individual who committed it.

The then superintendent of the park, who had been detailed from the United States Geological Survey, largely because of the intolerable conditions existing due to the failure of law-enforcement officers to cooperate with the park, asked to be relieved. Mr. Allen was sent to Hawaii in his place. He had a new car and much new furniture. Shortly after arriving at the Hawaii National Park he left his headquarters in the Kilauea section, on the island of Hawaii, to visit the Haleakala section, on the island of Maui, to transact official business in Honolulu. While he was gone some one entered his home as well as his office. Papers were taken from the files of the office and in the superintendent's home acid was

A full report of the incident was made to the Washington office, and at my own suggestion Mr. Allen was asked to submit a detailed statement regarding his losses. His report was carefully reviewed by several officers of the National Park Service, including myself, and the final list as sent to the committee was made up here in the Washington office with my full approval. I feel that the claim the Washington office with my full approval. I feet that the chain is very reasonable. It does not represent by a considerable margin Superintendent Allen's actual loss. The report contains a full list of the articles damaged and the values. After talking with you to-day and giving full consideration to your own views on this claim, based on your careful analysis of it, I again reviewed the whole record with my associates and we could reach no other conclusion than that the claim was just and fair.

clusion than that the claim was just and fair.

I might say also that the National Park Service has been very careful in the preparation of all claims to be submitted to Congress for consideration. Nothing that has come before us has received closer scrutiny than claims of this kind because we realize that abuses may creep into matters of this kind. A review of the statutes will assure you that only a few claims have been submitted and that these have been always fair and reasonable.

Mr. Allen is one of the most conscientious officers of the National Park Service. He is one of our ablest men. He was undoubtedly the victim of a revengeful act of an enemy of the Federal Government in Hawaii. There could have been no ground for personal animosity because Mr. Allen had just become superintendent of Hawaii National Park and had come from Colorado. He was not known to any person on the island of Hawaii before He was not known to any person on the island of Hawaii before his arrival. I earnestly hope that you will see your way clear to support this bill. I can not help but feel that the failure of Congress to pass the bill would be an act of injustice to a loyal, faithful public servant.

Sincerely yours,

HORACE M. ALBRIGHT, Director.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman further reserve his objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object. My colleague [Mr. GRISWOLD] has already objected two times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is too late. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas J. Allen, jr., the sum of $2,183.50 for the total damage of his personal effects by vandals while superintendent of the Hawaii National Park.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there should be an amendment at least setting out the date in the bill, so that the bill will show on its face when this happened. There is no date here. We do not know when this happened. We do not know how long ago it was or anything about it. I offer an amendment in line 8-

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. COLLINS. Is the bill about to be considered No. 280?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.
Mr. COLLINS. I objected to the bill. My colleague [Mr. GRISWOLD] objected to the bill twice. I can not understand how it is being read.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair failed to hear either one of the gentlemen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the House that the Chair put the question twice. Somebody said something, and the Chair put the question again, and nobody said anything. The gentleman got to his feet after the Chair had said there was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a Member rises in his seat and objects, as the gentleman from Mississippi did, is it right thereafter for the Chair again to say "Is there objection?" and when the Member does not hear the Chair, for the Chair to go on with the bill as if no objection had been

Mr. CLARKE of New York. He does not need any guardian on the floor of the House. If he does, he should not be here.

Mr. BLANTON. I am addressing the Chair. Everybody here heard the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collins]

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. COLLINS. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all proceedings whereby this bill was considered be vacated, so that we can go back to the objection stage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the bill H. R. 2064.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COL. RICHARD M. CUTTS, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2084, for the relief of Col. Richard M. Cutts, United States Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill because it carries an amount of $14,198.08.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. MOUSER. The author of the bill has met my objection, which was the same as the gentleman's objection as to the amount of the claim for the property that was lost in the fire, that the property was overvalued.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill was introduced for $15,679.08. The gentleman agreed that it be reduced to $14,198.08.

Mr. MOUSER. The gentleman has agreed now to accept an amendment reducing the amount to $6,000.

Mr. BLANTON. If he does that, I do not think this kind of a bill ought to be passed under unanimous consent. There seems to be entirely too much margin on it.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I make the unanimous-consent request that the gentleman from Indiana reserve his objection to No. 280.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Colorado that the bill has been passed on the calendar. The Clerk will call the next bill.

CHARLES W. DWORACK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2296, for the relief of Charles W. Dworack

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it understood that the gentleman accepts the proposed amendment to reduce this from $10,000 to $2,500?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that as a matter of expediency rather than justice I shall accept the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have this bill marked for objection.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall be glad to explain the bill to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The claimant in the bill, who was supposed to have been injured in 1922 at the time of the Roma accident, continued in the employ of the Government until

Mr. HARLAN. That is not the fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. He received salary from the Government except for three days. Now the gentleman is purposing to pay him $2,500.

Mr. HARLAN. That is absolutely ridiculous. The man is an invalid and has been for years. As the gentleman will see from the record, Mr. Dworack was a very capable man, but the correspondence received shows the reasons for his resignation, and that he resigned very shortly after this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the author of the bill should have an opportunity to explain the bill if he takes issue with me.

I call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the chairman of the Employees' Compensation Committee. It also appears that Dworack received full pay from the Government for all time lost on account of his injury with the exception of two and a half days. He made application for relief under the employees' compensation act.

Mr. HARLAN. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am examining the report and waiting for some enlightening information from the gentleman from

Mr. HARLAN. This man, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, worked only a very short time after the accident. It is true he was paid for the time he was off in the hospital; but when he went back to work, he only worked a very short time and found himself unable to continue in his employment, and has not been employed for years. Prior to 1929 I believe he received a few intervals of very brief employment, but he has not done any real work since the accident.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Ohio give the information as to when he left the employ of the Government?

Mr. HARLAN. I have it here in the correspondence. He left within a very few months after he returned to his employment. He is in a state of complete shock. This bill passed the last House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the reason for his not making application under the employees' compensation act? Apparently he did make application and it was rejected.

Mr. HARLAN. At the time he made the application he was still working for the Government, and at that time the Government had paid him for the loss that he had sustained; but this condition he is in now has developed since he left the Government employ.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am in error in my statement that he continued in the employment of the Government until 1929.

I am willing to accept the statements of the gentleman from Ohio that he only remained in the service a few days.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to Charles W. Dworack, who was permanently injured in the Roma disaster on February 12, 1922, at the Army supply base, Norfolk, Va., while in performance of duty.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the sign and figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$2,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 1, line 5, after the word "duty," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIAM K LOVETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3029, for the relief of William K. Lovett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is understood that if the bill passes beyond the objection stage the amendment proposed by the committee is to be accepted, namely, that the amount carried in the bill is to be reduced to $2,050.

Mr. MOUSER. At the proper time I have two amendments to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William K. Lovett, Wildwood, N. J., the sum of $2,516.16 for loss of the motor sloop Edith and cargo while engaged in rendering assistance to the keeper and crew of the Holly Beach Life Saving Station at Cold Spring Inlet, N. J., on October 6, 1913.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out the sign and figures "$2,516.16" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,050 in full settlement against the Government."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorney's fee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mouser: In line 10, after the figures "1913," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BERYL ELLIOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3551, for the relief of Beryl Elliott.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SOPHIA A. BEERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3561, for the relief of Sophia A. Beers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it must first be understood that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Martin] will agree to an amendment reducing the amount carried in the bill from $13,720 to $5,100, that the usual attorneys' fee amendment be included, and that this amount be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I will accept those amendments. Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words about this bill? When a meek gentleman like myself starts to object-immediately my motives are impugned and I am jumped on with hobnailed shoes. Session after session I have seen bills objected to. I have been angry just as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] has been angry, because I know the labor that has been put on these bills. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] should not quarrel with me. I would like to see all of the bills passed which committees act on, because, as I say, I know the labor they put on them.

When I came here this afternoon I had this meritorious bill on the calendar. I am thoroughly familiar with it. However, I see it passed up like a white chip.

Mr. BLANTON. What kind of a chip?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. A blue chip. Fortunately, my colleague from Texas stated that the person involved here is a poor, starving woman, Sophia Beers. Her husband, who was a bright mechanic, during the war invented these pipebending machines. His resources were limited. After he had made this invention he went to the navy yard at Puget Sound and he asked them to have two of his machines put in the navy yard. The authorities consented that he should do this, and they were so placed. The efficiency of the machines were such that they ordered four more, making six in all. It took all the resources of that poor fellow to manufacture those six machines. The Government used the machines for one year. Evidence comes from the Secretary of the Navy that these were efficient machines and most valuable machines, and, as I say, they were used by the Navy Department in the navy yard at Puget Sound for one year. Then, when it came time to pay for them, this man ran up against some of this Government red tape which so many of the Members here condemn and rebel against, and which I rebel against. The Government said, "We can not pay for them because there was no advertisement for bids," and they refused to pay on these technical grounds. The man who invented these machines is dead and his poor widow has waited 10 years for her money. It is a most distressing case.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, assuming that the report is correct-

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I am familiar with it.

Mr. MOUSER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Under what authority did the foreman in the navy yard contract for these machines?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That is just the point. He was one of those men who came in the Navy during the war. He was not familiar with the red tape and did not advertise for bids. Of course, he did not have the technical authority to order these machines and, as I say, he did not advertise for bids. It is merely a matter of red tape, and it is merely a thing which they overlooked. I am perfectly familiar with this case.

Mr. MOUSER. It goes beyond a mere matter of red tape and technicalities when the question of open and competitive bidding is concerned. That is why so much money was thrown away during the war. They did not follow that procedure. They did not give the public an opportunity to bid so that they might get the lowest and best bids. Will the gentleman accept an amendment reducing this amount to $2,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Please do not ask me to do that. Mr. MOUSER. I will be compelled to object unless the gentleman accepts such an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I say to the author of the bill that I am confronted with the same difficulty which has presented itself to the gentleman from Ohio. These machines were used for one year and then the owner was given notice that the Government would have no further use for them. Why did not the owner then remove them?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. He did remove them. Mr. STAFFORD. He did not. He left them.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The poor man was broke. He had no resources and his wife has no resources. Why do you want to continue to deny her her just dues?

Mr. MOUSER. We feel sorry for the widow, but it is a question whether the Government of the United States has a legal liability or a moral obligation.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. It has both a legal and a moral obligation.

Mr. MOUSER. I can not see that the gentleman has satisfactorily explained that.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The Government has had the obligation for 10 years.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman accept the amendment I have suggested?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Two thousand dollars?

Mr. MOUSER. Yes; just simply paying her on a moral obligation that amount for rent of these machines for nine

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. How can the gentleman stand up there and look me in the face and make such a proposition?

Mr. MOUSER. There is no legal obligation involved here and the Government only used them nine months, and $2,000 would certainly be a fair rental. It is not the fault of the Government that they negligently left the machines there and they disappeared.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman make it

Mr. MOUSER. I am not that kind of man. Will the gentleman accept the amendment? Two thousand dollars is a pretty good rental for nine months.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I shall have to accept the amendment

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair may have the attention of the gentleman from Oregon, the Chair will call attention to the fact that a similar bill has passed the Senate and is now on the Speaker's table. Without objection, the Senate bill will be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the Senate bill carry the same amount?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; $5,100.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill. as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sophia A. Beers, widow and the heirs at law of William H. Beers, deceased, the sum of $5,100 in full compensation and settlement for all claims and demands of William H. Beers, deceased, growing out of, of arising from, the use, destruction, and loss of certain pipe-bending machines in the United States navy yard at Puget Sound,

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer two amendments; in line 9, change the amount of $5,100 to $2,000, and at the end of the bill add the usual attorneys' fee provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mousea: In line 7, strike out "$5,100" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000," and in line 11, after the word "Washington," insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold or receive any sum of the amount appropriated collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon con-viction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the revenue bill.

quest of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, the meanest and most merciless of all Federal tax bills! This is a fair and not extravagant description of the Senate tax bill as sent to conference by the House this noon.

Over one-quarter of the $1,121,000,000 of the total revenue provided for in the bill is assessed on one industry—the automobile industry.

On top of that we have the cool suggestion of the Speaker of the House, Mr. GARNER, proposing additional tens of millions of dollars upon the automobile industry in the form of gasoline taxes to pay the cost of over $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds which are to be issued to finance his $2,309,-000,000 relief and unemployment bill.

With fine irony Speaker GARNER calls this cruel and ruinous additional tax on the automobile industry "mercy

The enemies of the automotive industry have always had great influence with Congress and with the administration, and they have dealt many underhanded blows to the automobile industry, but never have they been so successful and so destructive in their machinations as in the present annual revenue bill and in the Garner relief plan.

At last, by reactions of the terror and desperation which is menacing the country, the friends of the automotive industry in Congress have been powerless to get fair and adequate consideration for the key industry of the country. It is universally conceded in financial and business circles that the automobile industry had the finest opportunity to lead the country back to good times.

Rising to their responsibility, captains of the automobile industry have been risking their last dollar recently to bring back prosperity. They issued 217 new models for the annual automobile shows this past winter, which is illustrative of the daring and enterprise of the industry.

The automobile industry made its big gamble, only to be slapped down by a wildly desperate Congress, which apparently can not resist the attack of the enemies of the automobile industry.

This morning automobile men all over the United States were panic stricken and stood aghast at the cruel and unwarranted injuries that have been done to them in the revenue bill as it was sent to the House.

They saw their competitors in the transportation world triumphant and protected from ruinous sales taxes.

One has but to examine the bill to see how malevolent and malignant it is to the automotive industry.

The direct sales tax on automobiles, trucks, parts, and accessories has been raised from the 3, 2, and 1 per cent rates of the House bill to 3, 2, and 2 per cent.

A conservative estimate of this direct tax is $55,000,000. The Senate inserted an entirely new and vicious tax on tires and tubes, amounting to $33,000,000 per year, in the form of a 4-cent-per-pound tax on rubber tire cases.

In the last hours of the bill in the Senate the automotive industry was struck another deadly blow in the form of a 1 cent per gallon tax on gasoline, which the Senate estimated at $150,000,000 but which is much closer to $200,-000,000 per year, in my opinion, for the automobile industry alone used over 16,000,000,000 gallons of gasoline last year.

An extraordinary tax of 4 cents a gallon on lubricating oil is in the bill, and it is estimated this additional tax on the automobile industry will amount to $35,000,000 per year.

This makes a total alone of $273,000,000 per year.

But there are other unusual taxes in the bill, such as the import tax on gasoline and oil and copper, which undoubtedly bring the taxes in this bill alone on the automobile industry to over $300,000,000 per year. The automotive industry is one of the biggest users of lumber and coal in the country and these additional tariff taxes will add to the burdens of the automobile industry.

Consider that the automobile is already the heaviest taxed of all commodities and is paying over $1,000,000,000 per year now in State, county, city, village, and township taxes,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the re- | and any fair man will readily concede that this Federal revenue bill is just what I called it in my opening statement of these remarks-"The meanest and most merciless of all Federal tax bills " considered by the American Congress.

We friends of the automotive industry in the House will fight this bill as best we can in conference and we will fight to get a vote on some of these items on the floor of the House. Certainly the House conferees should insist that the Senate's 2 per cent tax on parts and accessories should be put back to the House rate of 1 per cent.

We are imploring the House conferees to kill the $33,000 .-000 tax on tires and tubes.

The Federal gasoline tax is altogether too high, and that should be cut down. Certainly the Ways and Means Committee never should pass out the Garner relief plan, providing for additional hundreds of millions of dollars in gasoline and automotive taxes.

For many years I have insisted to the leaders of the automotive industry that they should not take this persecution of high, unfair, discriminatory, and exorbitant taxes at the hands of their servants and public officials.

In 1923 and 1924 I helped organize the automotive industry into one of the most powerful political machines ever developed by any industry.

My personal advice to the leaders has been that they should stand by their friends among the Congressmen and Senators in their primaries and elections, and I have always insisted that they should let the voters who have automobiles and who are in any way connected directly or indirectly with the automobile industry know who their friends are in

It follows as the night the day that they should also let the voters know who the bitter and unrelenting enemies of the automotive industry are in the House and Senate, in the State legislatures, and in the other political units of the

No group of men in the history of this country have ever shown such daring and gameness and enterprise as the men who are running the automobile industry in this country to-day.

It remains to be seen whether they will lie down like cravens and cowards in the face of this merciless attack and persecution embodied in the two great bills now before Congress-the $1,121,000,000 revenue bill and the $2,309,000,000 Garner relief bill.

The leaders of the automobile industry have always been reluctant to engage in politics, but only the blindest of them can now deny that they are submerged almost over their heads in politics through the schemes and manipulations of their enemies.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD made to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EULA K. LEE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3775, for the relief of Eula K. Lee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOUGLAS B. ESPY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3791, for the relief of Douglas B. Espy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what obligation is upon an enlisted petty officer so far as insuring his property against fire is concerned.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. I can not see any evidence in the report of negligence on the part of the Government. I think the amount is certainly excessive so far as the loss of clothing is

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ROSAMOND B. M'MANUS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4059, for the relief of Rosamond B. McManus.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, with the understanding that this bill is to be reduced to $5,000 and with the proper safeguarding amendment adopted. I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rosamond B. McManus the sum of $25,000 in full settlement against the Government for the death of her husband, Howard McManus, who was killed a Department of Commerce airplane on September 17, 1930,

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. At the end of the bill add the usual attorney's fee clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: In line 10, after the word "Illinois," insert a colon and the following:
"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment. On page 1, line 7, before the word "against," insert "for all claims."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: In line 7, before the word "against," insert "for all claims."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLES HELLYER

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4274, for the relief of Charles Hellver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will gladly do so. My objection is based on the fact that the injury occurred prior to the enactment of the employees' compensation act. It has been the consistent policy of this Congress to object to all claims of that character brought within the purview of that act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will relieve the gentleman from all responsibility in connection with the bill by saying that I have the sad duty to announce that the claimant is dead.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman that notwithstanding his sarcastic remarks, under the provisions of this bill, the widow, if he left any, would be entitled to the compensation. I object.

JOSE O. ENSLEW

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4405, for the relief of Jose O. Enslew.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object— Mr. SOMERS of New York. When the gentleman objected before to this bill, I got the impression that he did so on the ground that this accident occurred on a narrow street, and it was impossible to have an accident there without the fault lying with the claimant. During the past summer I was on this street and noted the conditions there, and I can see how one might encounter an accident of that sort without any fault on his or her part. Knowing that condition, I was wondering if the gentleman would not reconsider his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I based my objection a year ago, as well as to-day—and I wish to say that I have reexamined the report in the case, because I did not want to do any injustice to the claimant—because I believed that the claimant was at fault, that she virtually walked into the truck. and the eyewitnesses so testified, and that the truck was going at a reasonable speed. There is nothing in the record to show that the Government was at all at fault.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. This was a wet day, and the construction work of a new building had blocked the sidewalk, and this girl turned out, and when the automobile came down the street it struck her.

Mr. BACHMANN. How old is this little girl?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Oh, about 20. She is a stenographer, a brilliant girl, well educated, and a responsible person in every way.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to say that I went so far as to examine all the affidavits, and the entire report and testimony, and I came to the conclusion the Government was in no way at fault. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Thatcher] was unavoidably called to the telephone at the time calendar No. 279 was called. It was objected to, and I think in fairness to the gentleman from Kentucky, owing to his unavoidable absence, that we should go back to that calendar number. I ask unanimous consent to return to calendar No. 279, in order that the gentleman from Kentucky may offer an explanation of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection, provided it is subject to objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, we have gone over this calendar twice. There is no man in the House for whom I have a higher regard than I have for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER], but I think we ought to get along with the calendar. I object.

BUSCH-SULZER BROS, DIESEL ENGINE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5429) for the relief of the Busch-Sulzer Bros. Diesel Engine Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call attention to what the department says about this bill. I read from the report:

The claimant entered into the contract for the construction of the engines for the V boats with full knowledge that its orderly performance must depend upon appropriations to be made by the Congress. No general legislation has been effected for the payment of carrying charges in similar cases, except where the construction of vessels was suspended by reason of treaty limitations, and it is considered that it would establish a dangerous precedent to allow such charges on an isolated contract.

Further, the department says that the cost of the proposed legislation is $38,007.74, and the bill itself carries $15,-273.60. By stopping this bill I save $15,273.60, and ultimately I save the sum of $38,007.74 for the Treasury, because the department says this legislation will cost the people that sum. In these strenuous times it is worth while to save $38,007.74.

On the recommendation of the department, I object.

LAWRENCE A. JETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5793) for the relief of Lawrence A. Jett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

HOWARD EMMETT TALLMADGE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 964) for the relief of Howard Emmett Tallmadge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a bill introduced by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer]. The record shows that this man was dismissed from the service because of bad conduct; that | during his brief period of service he committed a number of serious offenses against naval discipline. In view of the President's position recently stated in his veto message to the House of the omnibus pension bill, of similar character, does the gentleman think that if this bill should be submitted to him it would escape a veto?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is different from the ones that the President vetoed. If the President should veto this meritorious bill, he could not defend his position. The facts indicate that this man received a discharge that was not honorable during his Spanish-American War service by reason of the fact that he talked a little rough to a noncommissioned superior officer. When the World War broke out he voluntarily enlisted and served from January 21, 1918, to March 13, 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Howard Emmett Tallmadge, formerly coal passer, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held to have been honorably discharged from services in the naval forces of the United States on October 13, 1902: Provided, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bachmann: On page 1, in line 7, after the word "provided," strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That no bounty, pension, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HENRY DIXON LINEBARGER

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 2599, for the relief of Henry Dixon Linebarger.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sanders]. I heard the evidence in this particular case. There was no offense involving moral turpitude. This man very shortly after his alleged desertion was found to be insane. It is my opinion that the man's desertion was undoubtedly due to his mental condition at the time. He has been confined in the hospital a good deal of the time since his discharge. I am convinced that he was mentally unbalanced at the time he absented

Mr. MOUSER. And the gentleman considers his condition due to his mental condition?

Mr. COYLE. Entirely.

Mr. MOUSER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors, Henry Dixon Linebarger, who served as seaman, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on January 22, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this set. passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ARTHUR L. HACYKELL

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3601, for the relief of Arthur L. Hacykell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill should not pass. The department says the disability did not occur in line of misconduct."

service and that it will cost the Government approximately $600 each year, and the department recommends against the bill. I think that sum of money should be saved each Upon that recommendation, I object.

HARRY MANNING LEE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5595, for the relief of Harry Manning Lee.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws con-Be it enacted, etc., that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sallors, Harry Manning Lee, who served as private, United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on September 5, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this set. sage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUSTIN L. TIERNEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6000, for the relief of Austin L. Tierney.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Will the gentleman withhold his objection Mr. COYLE. for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. COYLE. This is another case where I listened to the testimony, and I feel convinced that in this particular case the man was insane at the time he absented himself. All the medical evidence seems to bear that out.

He is apparently a charge on some community, and it would seem that in view of his service it might not be unfair to let the Pension Office assume that charge.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the Medical Office of the Navy Department to show that he had any mental disorder.

Mr. COYLE. The moment that mental disorders show he unquestionably would be discharged from the Navy. That is the reason it does not show on his record.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COYLE. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman take the position that when these mental disturbances demonstrate themselves 10 or 15 years afterwards, we are to go back and forget their unsocial attitude and reinstate these men as good soldiers and good sailors? Is that what the gentleman is trying to do by this series of bills?

Mr. COYLE. It does not seem so to me.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If it is called insanity, the elements were just as present then as they are to-day, and it is not recognized, as I understand it, as either a basis for damage or a basis for claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COYLE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The department recommends against this bill, yet it says it will place no additional charge on the Treasury.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman from Texas would read the next sentence-

It is probable that a Veterans' Administration charge will be involved now or in the future.

Mr. COYLE. The gentleman is sound in that statement. There undoubtedly will be a Veterans' Administration charge, but I submit that in all human probability that is the proper agency to take care of this man, because he has been insane practically from the time he was a deserter from the service.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is, if you call it insanity. Insanity is a defense every time a man commits murder or theft.

Mr. COYLE. If the gentleman will bear with me still further, this case was diagnosed as "psychosis, maniacdepressive, origin not in line of duty, and not due to his own

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman know what | those words mean?

Mr. COYLE. I have seen them frequently.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman know what they mean?

Mr. COYLE. I have a general idea.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And does the gentleman not join me in objecting to this bill?

Mr. COYLE. No.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object, Mr. Speaker.

THOMAS T. GESSLER

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2284, for the relief of Thomas T. Gessler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, this man enlisted in the Navy as he said he wanted to get better medical attention at the time, in his letter. He apparently was one of the border-line cases. His nervous system was suitable for ordinary life, but when he got into the Navy things just went to pieces. He was in the hospital 41 days of the 65 days that he was on sea duty. He went home to get treatment from his own doctors; and while there he was unable to get funds to get back, and he went to the naval-recruiting man, and he said he could not help him. Finally, his father borrowed enough money to get him back to his ship. He came back to the ship and surrendered himself and was charged with being away without leave, or deserting during war. He was sent to confinement, and it was discovered that he was physically unfit ever to return to the service, and they released him.

As shown by the report, the doctor who examined him during his confinement said:

been unable to work steadily, and he says he joined the Navy to get "doctored up." His history shows that due to his hypochondriacal ideas he has

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARY A. COX

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1174, for the relief of Mary A. Cox.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, the bill in its present form is not objectionable, except that it is not in the customary form in which we authorize these claims to be examined by the Compensation Commission.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Has the gentleman any amendment to suggest?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman from Maryland will have no objection to the substitute I am about to propose, because it carries out virtually the same purpose, and I will withdraw the reservation of objection and offer an amendment.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman understands, does he not, that no payment will commence until after the adjudication?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes. This is merely to grant authority to submit the claim to the Employees' Compensation Commission.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 767 and 770), are hereby waived in favor of Mary A. Cox, who claims disability as a result of employment under the United States Shipping Board in 1917 and 1918. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized to consider and act upon her claim, No. 112410, under the remaining provisions of such act, as amended, as if her claim and notice had been filed within 60 days after said alleged disability.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Will the gentleman advise the date the injury occurred, so I may incorporate that in an amendment?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The woman was employed in August, 1917.

Mr. STAFFORD. When did the injury occur?

Mr. LINTHICUM. She says:

The muscles of my right arm would ache, and on February 14, 1918, when I first consulted my doctor, the fingers of my right hand were badly twitching. However, I did not think it would amount to anything but a passing cramp, and believed when they caught up with my work and just worked along normally it would

She states that the serious trouble began about February,

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it would be agreeable to describe it as an injury purporting to have occurred in 1918 and thereafter.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would the gentleman have any objection to saying "1917, 1918, and thereafter "?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will make it read "1917, 1918, or thereafter."

Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Mary A. Cox for an injury purporting to have occurred some time in 1917, 1918, or thereafter, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Mary A. Cox had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN S. SHAW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1778, for the relief of John S. Shaw.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

IRENE LUNGO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1861, for the relief of Irene Lungo.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SILAS B. LAWRENCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2478, for the relief of Silas B. Lawrence.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state to the author of the bill my objections. In the first place, this accident happened in 1897. I object because of the remoteness of the time of the accident in reference to the time this bill was introduced.

Secondly, I doubt very much whether this man when deputized by the United States marshal was actually in Federal service, in view of the reward of $500 which had been offered for the apprehension of some alleged moonshiners, or that he was a Federal employee within the meaning and spirit of the law. It is quite evident that the posse went out more in view of the $500 reward than they did for any act of Federal duty.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman misunderstands the sitnation.

Mr. MOUSER. He went out after the $500 reward. Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is mistaken as to the $500 reward. The reward was offered by the Attorney General of the United States for the arrest of the bootleggers after they had shot two deputy marshals, Mr. Lawrence and another gentleman.

Mr. MOUSER. The reward was offered subsequent to Lawrence's injury?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Since the claim was investigated and reported upon I obtained a report from the Attorney General and also photostatic copies of all the proceedings that were taken by the Attorney General for the apprehension ished. Some of them were hanged.

Mr. MOUSER. Was the reward paid?
Mr. MILLER. The reward was paid to other people.

Mr. MOUSER. This claimant did not participate in the reward, then?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. I yield. Mr. COLLINS. I do not have this bill down for objection, but I notice there is no report from any of the departments, and it seems to me to be rather unfortunate that some of these bills are coming in without reports from departments.

Mr. MOUSER. I agree with that statement of the gentlemen. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the gentleman from Arkansas has just stated he has in his possession now photostatic copies of statements from the Attorney General, and if he will insert them in the RECORD that will make a complete report.

Mr. MILLER. I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have had difficulty in subscribing to this claim for the reason the injury occurred so long ago. This claim has not been presented to the Employees' Compensation Commission. The injury occurred in 1897. If we are to be consistent we must object to this claim as we have to others.

Mr. MILLER. I will state to the gentleman that in a discussion with the old gentleman himself I asked him why he had never made a claim. He made this statement to me:

I have never asked my Government for a dime for anything, but I have reached the point where I am totally disabled, and the loss of my arm is largely responsible for it, and if you feel like the Government should pay me anything for the injury I will appreciate it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the report of the Attorney General show, because I have been consistently objecting to these old claims, and we must stop some time having the Treasury used as a vehicle for passing out Christmas presents?

Mr. MILLER. The report of the Attorney General states:

Further reference is made to previous correspondence concerning your bill for the relief of one Silas B. Lawrence, who was injured on August 29, 1897, while a member of the United States marshal's e in the eastern district of Arkansas.

There is inclosed herewith a copy of a letter from the United States marshal for that district, dated February 26, 1932, concerning this matter, and also copies of letters transmitted with his report.

A further search of the records of the department at Washington shows that there were received from the marshal two telegrams dated August 30, 1897, and also a report dated September 3, 1897. The latter shows the names of the deputies who were killed and also the statement that Cy. Lawrence was "shot in the arm" and that "his arm has since been amputated." Copies of the telegrams and report are also inclosed herewith.

Although these reports definitely establish that Mr. Lawrence was injured while serving as a member of the United States marshal's posse, on the date above mentioned, the department would prefer not to express any opinion, at this time at least, as to whether the bill should be enacted into law.

to whether the bill should be enacted into law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the Government reimbursed these other officers who were injured or killed?

Mr. MILLER. I am not able to say, but they were officers of the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes in order that the gentleman may continue his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we have not recognized liability in these other cases, I do not think we should begin in this

Mr. MOUSER. May I suggest to the gentleman that this man might be excused for a lack of knowledge of the law as to the statute of limitations. Moreover, it appears from the position he occupies as a citizen that he could not have understood the technicalities of the law with reference to the statute of limitations, and I think he should be forgiven for laches upon his part. I certainly think the amount carried in the bill is not too high. I am rather of the murderers. They were apprehended later and pun- sympathetic with the gentleman's bill in view of his explanation.

> Mr. MILLER. This man lived back in the mountains and could not know about the statute of limitations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Silas B. Lawrence as reimbursement for expenses actually incurred by him as a direct result of personal injuries received by him on August 29, 1897, while in the discharge of his duties as a member of a posse under the command of the United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas, and as full compensation for said injuries the transfer of the second states. sation for said injuries, the pain and suffering from the same, including loss of earnings and any permanent disability resulting

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. In line 10, strike out the word "western" and insert the word " eastern."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Muler: In line 10, strike out the word "western" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eastern."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorney's fee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mouser: In line 13, after the word "injury" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RALPH LAVERN WALKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2535, for the relief of Ralph LaVern Walker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman reserve his objec-

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I would like the gentleman to give me some indication of what his objection is. The War Department admits liability in this case.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman read the words on which he relies in making the statement that the War Department admits liability?

Mr. RAMSPECK. In the report there is this language:

It is the opinion of the board that the preponderance of evidence warrants the conclusion that the dangerous materiel which caused the accident was War Department property.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Those are the words on which the gentleman relies?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. My objection to the bill is, in the first place, that there is absolutely no connection between the cause of this injury and the United States Government. It is so stated in the report, over the signature of Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War, notwithstanding the fact that there is an opinion to the effect that the particular item-that is, a bomb, or a detonator, it is called in the report-which caused this explosion belonged at one | time to the War Department, but it is stated that the War Department, and no one connected with the War Department, was the owner of this property, this hand grenade or whatever it was, at the time it was brought into the yard of this boy who picked it up. This is a very distressing case, but there is nothing that ties it up with any liability, even any sympathetic liability, on the part of the United States.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman misunderstands the location. The boy's yard was a part of what was Camp Gordon during the war. The Government dismantled that camp; they advertised for bids and sold this property to the public. This family moved there. I do not know whether they owned the property or whether they were tenants, but the place where the boy found this bomb, or whatever you call it, was on the old camp site. Of course, it was left there by the Army. It failed to explode in their maneuvers there. This is a great big area of hundreds and hundreds of acres, about 13 miles from Atlanta, where they trained hundreds of thousands of men during the war. At all times they had there about 40,000 or 50,000 men. They had all sorts of matériel of that kind, and for several years after the war they had this camp there and had a lot of matériel there, a lot of ammunition. I do not know just exactly when the property was sold, but it was not so very long before this thing happened.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Surely.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the fact that the board of officers which conducted this investigation held that-

It is the opinion of the board that the preponderance of evidence warrants the conclusion that the dangerous materiel which caused the accident was War Department property-

I can not see how the gentleman can object to this bill. The words they use are "preponderance of evidence." In view of the fact that it is unreasonable to expect that any private individual or corporation would have had these hand grenades, with detonators on them, on the property, I think the Government is properly charged with the ownership of the property and is responsible for the injury to this child. I certainly hope the gentleman is not going to take it upon himself to indicate that the entire Claims Committee, which spent about 30 minutes in considering this bill, erred in unanimously recommending it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I think the Claims Committee erred in not carefully reading the report, for if you read the language of the report, you will see that those making the report very carefully refrained from placing any responsibility on the Government. If you were to allow such a claim as this, you might as well say that when a soldier takes his issued revolver or rifle and commits suicide the Government should pay some indemnity, because the property which caused the death or caused the accident belonged to the United States Government.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the board of officers held hearings and carefully investigated all the facts, and that board holds that the preponderance of evidence indicates that the accident was caused by the War Department's matériel. Certainly, the gentleman is not going to take one line of a report from a man here in Washington in opposition to this meritorious claim and deny justice to this injured person.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Let me also call the gentleman's attention to one other statement in the report:

The accident was investigated by a board of officers, the findings of which are in part as follows: That the object which caused the injury was left as a menace to life through the carelessness of party or parties unknown.

Certainly, it must have been left there by the officers or by the enlisted men of the Army, because the only way it ever got on Camp Gordon property was because it was brought there by the Army when it occupied the property.

The report also states that in the activities of the War Department they did have dangerous material of the exact kind here in evidence on the site of Camp Gordon, Ga., where the accident occurred. If this is not an admission that the War Department brought the material there and after having been employed 14 months and those who sus-that they left it there on the very site where the accident occurred, according to the findings of this board convened by the War Department, I do not know what an admission is.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No one knows better than the gentleman who is speaking that that is no admission. It is simply a reference to a conclusion by some one who did not personally know anything more about the case than the gentleman from Georgia or myself. The thing that is proven there is that nobody knows how this boy happened to get in touch with the grenade that caused his injury or who is responsible therefor, and they are trying to charge the United States Government with such responsibility without having any proof.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will permit, it must be assumed that the War Department issued these grenades because the War Department is the only agency that would have them, and they are issued just the same as rifles are issued for the enlisted men. We also have the report of this board of officers indicating that the preponderance of evidence shows that the injury was suffered by reason of War Department ammunition.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the War Department recommend the payment of this money?

Mr. RAMSPECK. They do not recommend against it.

Mr. SCHAFER. We can not follow the recommendation of some one like Mr. Hurley, who came into the War Department two or three years ago, and use simply one line of his report to overturn the actual weight of the evidence in the case as reviewed in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. I will agree with the gentleman that you can not follow Mr. Hurley at all. His radio speech the other night was ridiculous. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not want to become involved in that matter.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

D. F. PHILLIPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3621, for the relief of D. F. Phillips.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the author of this bill is our good friend and our good neighbor, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], and he is a good neighbor and a good friend, and a most valuable legislator here, and I hate to object to the bill on his account personally, but this would establish a very bad precedent. Here is a rural carrier who served the Government 14 months and quit in 1920. Not a word was heard about any injury, and now after all these years, he comes in and claims an injury of hernia caused, he alleges, by his service in driving over a mountainous road.

This would set a very bad precedent and would culminate in thousands of similar claims being made against the Government. We are better to the rural carriers than to any other class of employees in the United States. They are getting good salaries and lots of them only work three or four hours a day. I am for them and I am their friend, but we ought not to let claims like this pass, and although the gentleman is one of my good friends and is a good neighbor and I like him, I object to his bill.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker, so that the gentleman may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. TARVER. Permit me to say to the gentleman that while I thank him for his expressions of friendship, no issue of that character is involved in the consideration of any of these bills. It is a question of justice.

In this case the facts are not distinctly different from those of many cases in which the gentleman has sat silent and permitted the passage of similar legislation upon the floor of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. No one has ever accused me of that before-sitting silent. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARVER. Let me finish my statement, please.

The employees' compensation act, passed in 1916, makes no distinction between employees who sustain injury in service

The only other distinction from other bills of like character to which he has not objected which the gentleman seeks to make is that this man is a rural carrier and that rural carriers, for some reason in his opinion, which is not clearly disclosed by his statement, ought to be treated differently and entitled to fewer rights than those which are provided by law for other employees of the United States.

I confess my inability to understand the gentleman's position. The evidence in this case clearly discloses that this man sustained a severe injury in the course of his duty, as a result of which he was compelled to resign as a rural carrier in 1920; and the fact that there are no records showing any complaint by him is accounted for by the report of the Postmaster General, who says that the records of this office were destroyed by fire on a date which he gives in his report, and thereby accounts for the failure of those records to disclose the injury of the man in service and his retirement on account of it.

This bill merely permits this man to have his claim considered under the terms of the law. He did not know, as he says, at the time he resigned anything about the employees' compensation law. It was a new thing.

The question is whether, because this man was a rural carrier, my colleague will object to his being accorded the same consideration which the gentleman has sat here and permitted to be accorded other Federal employees in like

Mr. BLANTON. Let me say that the report shows that Postmaster General Brown says:

While the card records of the department show that Mr. Phillips the term of the department show that Mr. Philips served as temporary rural carrier at Resaca from December 2, 1918, to January 31, 1919, was appointed regular rural carrier February 1, 1919, and resigned February 29, 1920, we have no record of an injury sustained by him during his term of employment, the correspondence files of the Resaca office prior to January 1, 1921, having been destroyed.

Then the correspondence shows that the files of the office prior to January 1, 1921, have been destroyed. When were they destroyed? It does not show when; they might have been destroyed last year or the year before that. The fact remains that this claim, if it accrued at all, accrued before the date in 1920 when he resigned. Why has not the claim been here in 1921, 1922, and 1923?

Mr. TARVER. Why has not my colleague objected to the hundreds of other bills for employees who were not rural carriers which provided for the consideration of claims just like this since the passage of the act of September 7, 1916?

Mr. BLANTON. I have objected to all bills I deemed unmeritorious. This is the first time I have ever been criticized for not objecting to bills. I have been criticized heretofore for objecting to too many of them. While I regret exceedingly to do so, I object.

PAUL I. MORRIS AND BEULAH FULLER MORRIS

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3628, for the relief of Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill consent to striking out all of lines 3 to 11 on the first page, leaving in the bill only the reimbursement of the father and mother of the child?

Mr. TARVER. Let me say that I see no reason why that action should be taken. If my colleague will examine the report, and I presume he has, he will discover that the proposed legislation, which is somewhat identical in context with legislation which has heretofore been enacted by this House, provides for compensation to the dependent parents for the death of a trainee occurring because of disease contracted while in a citizens' military training camp.

This young man, according to the report of the War Department, contracted spinal meningitis while in attendance on the citizens' military training camp at Fort McClellan. Ala., dying as the result, and leaving dependent parents. Is there any reason why the dependent parents should not by the recommendation of the Secretary of War, Mr. Hurley, tain such injury after having been employed during a term | be compensated according to the employees' compensation law? If there is, I would be glad to consider the gentleman's

> Mr. EATON of Colorado. Having in mind the statute applicable at the time of this deplorable death, unless the gentleman is willing to take what he otherwise would have been entitled to, and which is recognized by the War Department as the proper sum, I will have to object.

> Mr. TARVER. The gentleman will notice from the report that there was a bill enacted in the last Congress in an exactly similar case. Why should the gentleman think that this bill should be distinguished from that?

> Mr. EATON of Colorado. The bill the gentleman alludes to was for a definite amount, for an injury caused by an accident and was not a matter of sickness. The details of the two bills are as dissimilar as two bills could be.

Mr. TARVER. The compensation law makes no distinction between an injury and physical disease incurred in service, and there is no reason for excluding all cases of death by disease from remedial legislation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Let me say once more that the bill referred to by the gentleman was for the cost of medical attention and services, and there was a definite amount, about $150.

Mr. TARVER. No; it was $100 a month.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have the bill here. In this bill the amount these people would be entitled to under the statute at the time would be about $400 or a little less. There has been added onto that, $379.25. An attempt is made to make a comparison as between death by spinal meningitis and injury to an arm or a leg. They are not comparable. The point is that the War Department says the man is entitled to about $400. The paragraph in the bill names $764 as paying in full every detailed item which the War Department finds was asked for in accordance with the statute.

Mr. TARVER. The statute does not cover it at all. The gentleman is absolutely in error. There is no $400 or any other sum provided for by statute.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TARVER. Unless the gentleman will permit me to make a full explanation, I shall be forced to make the point of no quorum. I am asking only an opportunity to inform the gentleman of facts that he evidently does not know; and if he refuses me that privilege, I must necessarily interfere with the business of the House by making the point of no

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman wishes me to reserve the right to object so that he can make a further speech, I shall be glad to do so, and I shall listen to what he says, but I warn the gentleman not to go outside of the

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman has never been able to show me where I have been outside of the record, but I shall be able to show the gentleman that he has not read the record. The evidence in this case as disclosed by the report shows that the funeral expenses, doctors' bills, nurse hire, and hospital bills of this boy amounted to exactly the amount that is set out in the report, the sum of $764. I have in the anteroom the receipts and canceled checks showing the exact amount which is claimed in the bill. Nor is there any basis for the gentleman's statement that some $400 of this amount is recognized by the War Department as properly due. The law of 1928 which provides for the payment in cases not exactly similar but somewhat similar to this of doctors' bills and funeral expenses provides for the payment of such expenses only in cases where the sickness began in camp and the treatment began there and was continued after the trainee left camp. This is not such a case, and therefore the provisions of the law which the gentleman thinks applicable have no reference to it whatever. Further, I call the gentleman's attention to another case, which is only one of many, that of the bill proposed during the last Congress for the relief of Herbert E. Zook, in which, a young man who was injured in line of duty at Camp Grant, Ill., was to be accorded the benefits of the employees' compensation act-not an adverse recommendation, such as the same Secretary makes in this case, but a favorable recommendation. Permit me to ask the gentleman why a trainee, who happens to be injured at Camp Grant, Ill., should have extended to him the provisions of the employees' compensation act of 1916, while the dependents of a trainee injured at Camp McClellan, Ala., should be denied the benefits of that law? I show the gentleman the report of the Claims Committee in the case to which I have referred, so that he may check up on the facts. If the gentleman simply intends to object irrespective of what the facts are, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman is rather unfair to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Eaton]. The gentleman from Colorado was willing to allow the parents the amount for hospitalization and medical services that the statute allows.

Mr. TARVER. But nothing for his life.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not grant anything for the life of a soldier killed in action. If we did, the Government would be bankrupt.

Mr. TARVER. The Secretary of War recommended it in this case for injuries to a trainee at Camp Grant, Ill.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is such a case, it was a pure accident and should not be used as a precedent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I have not heard the gentleman say whether he will consent to accepting the $764.

Mr. TARVER. No; I will not consent.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object.

T. BROOKS ALFORD

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4227) for the relief of T. Brooks Alford.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced in the last Congress but failed to pass simply because it was not reached on the calendar. This man Alford was in the United States Consular Service for a period of more than

Mr. MOUSER. Permit me to ask the gentleman a few questions, and if he desires to elaborate upon his explanations, perhaps we can reach what I have in mind. As I understand it, this gentleman was assistant consul in Russia during the World War.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is correct.

Mr. MOUSER. He was then ordered to Copenhagen.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Prior to the close of the war he left the place where he was located, at Riga, and made no endeavor to take his property with him, or at least left nobody to Mr. McMILLAN. I may say in reply that the gentleman was really lucky to get away with his life. That was during the revolution in Russia. In the hearings before the committee, of which committee the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Ramspeck, was a member, in many instances it was shown that he was fortunate to get away with his life. Instead of returning home by the European ports, he was compelled to make his way through Asia, and finally was captured and sentenced to be shot, but he finally escaped and landed in Japan and then shipped over the Pacific. It is one of the most unusual cases I have ever encountered as a result of the war.

Mr. MOUSER. A part of his claim was based on the amount spent for medical service as the result of his nervous breakdown while stationed at Riga?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Notwithstanding that nervous breakdown he did later arrive in Copenhagen and served in the capacity of assistant consul and drew pay from the Government.

Mr. McMILLAN. In a letter in which he requested his resignation, the gentleman will find some evidence on that point.

Mr. MOUSER. If the gentleman will accept an amendment as to the amount of the medical expenses, I will not object.

Mr. McMILLAN. The gentleman will see in the report that he has a number of statements from several physicians who have examined and treated him since his return home.

Mr. MOUSER. I do not think there is any question that he had a nervous breakdown because of the pressure he was under in Russia, serving his country.

Mr. McMILLAN. Exactly.

Mr. MOUSER. Therefore, I think he should be compensated for his medical expenses, but I can not see where the Government owes him any obligation to pay for his property.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I say in explanation this gentleman offered his service under the draft act, and at the request of the State Department he was requested to continue his service in the consular service.

Mr. MOUSER. He was cited for meritorious service.

Mr. McMILLAN. He was cited for meritorious service. Mr. MOUSER. There is no question about his service.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the Seventy-first Congress H. R. 10919, an omnibus bill, was passed, including some 30 or 40 men in the Consular Service, covering just such cases as this. Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman accept the amendment which I suggested?

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the amount? Mr. MOUSER. The gentleman claims he spent $5,000. Of course, the bill is only for $4,000. There is no property listed here. We do not know what that was. Therefore it should be confined to the medical expenses.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am frank to say I could not accept that amendment, because here is a man whose health is ruined and he is to-day suffering as a result of that experience.

Mr. MOUSER. There is no itemized statement as to his property.

Mr. McMILLAN. And under other existing provisions of law the men who served in the military service have been protected. The men mentioned in this bill to which I have just referred have been compensated for their loss.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman accept an amendment reducing the amount to $3,000?

Mr. McMILLAN. It shows there was $7,500 involved.

Mr. MOUSER. We have to go by what the bill says. The bill says $4,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. Of course, if the gentleman is going to restrict me to a reduction of that character, naturally I will have to accept.

Mr. MOUSER. In view of the fact that there is no statement of the property, we can not consider that.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it is a very reasonable amount. Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to this bill. The State Department says:

The records of the department do not reveal any circumstances which would bring Mr. Alford within the scope of any existing law under which a recommendation for his relief could properly be

If this bill is passed, it means that thousands of claims that have been filed against the Government of Russia would be propounded against our Government, and we would have just the same obligation to pay one as the other. That is the first reason for objection.

The second is that our Government is not an insurer of the property of its officers, and we do not want to go into that field. If my house should be destroyed by fire, I would not expect the Government of the United States to reimburse me.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield, but shall object to the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to say in explanation of the gentleman's inquiry that the State Department further said that under the facts surrounding this case it is one in which Congress alone can decide whether or not he is entitled to any compensation as a result of this experience, and, furthermore, if we had, under existing law, a provision to take care of a case such as this, then there would be no necessity of a private bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4421, for the relief of the Southern Railway Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill would take $29,000 out of the Treasury, and I must object. While $29,000 is not such a tremendous sum of money, still it is more than the great majority of the people ever have had, have now, or ever will have in cash. Taken with other sums that are continually appropriated out of the Treasury aggregate the huge sum that causes deficits at the end of the year. While I regret to have to do it, I object to the bill.

LEBANON EQUITY EXCHANGE, LEBANON, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, S. 944, for the relief of the Lebanon Equity Exchange, of

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, at the opening of the consideration of private claim bills the Speaker of the House of Representatives called attention to the fact that it would involve the expenditure on the part of the Government of hundreds of millions of dollars if these refund claims were allowed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman requested——

Mr. NORTON. The Lebanon Equity Exchange is a farmers' cooperative association at Lebanon, Nebr. For the year 1920 it paid Federal income taxes in excess of $2,500. The Treasury Department decided in 1929 that said exchange was exempt from the payment of such taxes and was, therefore, not required to file returns for 1927 and prior years. Whereupon the exchange filed claim for refund of income taxes, which had been paid in error. The Government pleaded the statute of limitations. The Treasury Department states that the last payment of taxes was made February 24, 1925, and that the claim for refund was not filed until August 9, 1929, or a little more than five months over the four years provided by law.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to receive, consider, and determine in accordance with law, but without regard to any statute of limitations, the claim to be filed by the exchange within the time specified in this bill.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I yield. Mr. MOUSER. There is no question but what this amount has been paid to the Government and the Government has the money.

Mr. NORTON. Yes. Mr. MOUSER. The sole question is that the claim was not filed within nearly six months of when it should have been.

Mr. NORTON. That is correct. Mr. MOUSER. There is no interest included in this amount is there?

Mr. NORTON. None is asked.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NANCY H. ROUSE AND OTHERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1357, for the relief of Nancy H. Rouse, Clara H. Simmons, W. H. Hays, Hallie H. Hamilton, and Bradford P. Hays.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Kentucky has just furnished me a supplemental report, or, rather, part 2 of the report, which was filed on April 18.

The original report, which the supplemental report does not dispute, shows that no one suffered any injury in this case except Mr. Carr. There was no real damage done these persons. They were deprived of the use of the road a part of the day.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No injury was suffered except the deprivation of the use of the road while the soldiers were engaged in artillery fire.

Mr. SWICK. The situation continues to-day just as it was then. They are deprived of the use of that road.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In the supplemental report, on page 4, is a letter from the Secretary of War, dated March 18, 1932, which deals with the particular bill under discussion, whereas the original report from the War Department that the gentleman from Wisconsin now has deals with a bill of a different nature.

The present bill simply authorizes the parties to institute suit in the Court of Claims or in the district court of the United States to ascertain and recover such damages, if any, as they may be able to show under the law.

There is more to the claim than a loss of the use of the road. The proof shows they are unable to get tenants to farm this tract of land because of artillery fire and riflerange practice.

Mr. STAFFORD. The owners of the land had the right to go to the Court of Claims to present their claims. There was an agency of the Government provided for that purpose. Now, long years afterwards they ask to be granted this right, probably because some claim agent in Washington suggested to them that perhaps they can get something out of the Government.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say to the gentleman they have been endeavoring through the years to effect an adjustment with the War Department?

Mr. SWICK. What are they asking for?

Mr. CARDEN. They are just asking the right to institute

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Just the right to go into court. Mr. SWICK. They are not asking for any specific sum of money?

Mr. CARDEN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Their original claim was for $35,000. Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. They are just asking the right to take the matter into court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, on the ground that the original report which is applicable to the same state of Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The original report deals with a different bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. In which the department found that there was only one person who had any real claim, I shall not interpose an objection. I do not wish in the consideration of these cases to be obdurate and assert an objection where there is a possibility of a righteous claim. Therefore, I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Nancy H. Rouse, Clara H. Simmons, W. H. Hays, Hallie H. Hamilton, and Bradford P. Hays, owners of A certain farm consisting of 332 acres, more or less, near Camp Knox in Hardin County, Ky., are hereby authorized to bring suit against the United States of America to recover damages, if any, for loss or losses, which they may have sustained or suffered by reason of establishment, construction, or maintenance of Camp reason of establishment, construction, or maintenance of Camp Knox in the State of Kentucky. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States or the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, consider, determine, and render judgment for the amount of any such damages, if any, as may be found to have been sustained or suffered by the above owners of said property, with the same right of appeal as in other cases, and not withstanding any lapse of time or statute of limitations: Provided, That such action will be brought within one year from the date that this act shall become effective. act shall become effective.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS BY FIRE IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 491, for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October, 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota explain the necessity of passing this bill.

Mr. PITTENGER. Has the gentleman had an opportunity to read the hearings on the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I have carefully considered the 23-page report made by the committee. It is a fact, is it not, that 10 per cent more than $13,000,000 has already been paid?

Mr. PITTENGER. Those figures are probably approxi-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill, if passed, will take the huge sum of $10,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury and pay to claimants, and I shall object.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. It would be a waste of time, for I could not let this $10,000,000 be taken out of the Treasury in its present depleted condition. Ten million dollars is a large sum of money. It is hard to raise in taxes. If we allow this bill to pass this afternoon, we will have to levy further taxes upon the people to raise this $10,000,000. Just how will we tax the people to raise it? The Senate has taxed picture shows and talking movies until the Publix and many other leading show houses have already closed down, and every American child who wants to see a 15-cent picture show will have to pay a tax. I am in favor of defeating this proposed tax on movies. It ought to come off. Attending a movie once in a while is about all the pleasure and recreation that many families who work hard all day have, and we want to make the admission as cheap as possible.

The first-class postage has been raised from 2 to 3 cents. That is outrageous. We ought to kill that provision. This House placed a tax on stock transfers on the gambling exchanges of New York and other large cities, and the Senate has stricken that provision out. If we will properly tax stock transfer in gambling transactions, we will not have to raise the postage from 2 to 3 cents and we will not have to tax the children's picture shows.

We have taxed the people just about all they are able to pay, and that is why I am not in favor of taxing them more to raise this $10,000,000 that this bill would take out of the Treasury. I therefore object to the bill.

AMY HARDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 550, for the relief of Amy Harding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 154 will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Amy Harding on account of her personal-injury damages resulting from the Army airplane accident at Langin Field, Moundsville, W. Va., July 10, 1921, and to allow said claim in an amount not exceeding $43.33, as recommended by the Comptroller General of the United States in his report to the Congress dated June 18, 1930, Seventy-first Congress, second session, pursuant to the act of March 5, 1928 (45 Stat. 1707). The sum of $43.33, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of said claim.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

LUCY MURPHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 632, for the relief of Lucy Murphy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lucy Murphy the sum of $5,000 as reimbursement to her for the loss suffered by her in the death of her husband, Maurice Murphy, now deceased, whose death occurred on April 21, 1929, without fault on his part or on her part, through the collision of a trimotored Ford airplane belonging to the Maddux Air Lines (Inc.), of Los Angeles, Calif., bearing factory number 5-AT-10, license numbered NC 9636, near San Diego, Calif., with an airplane belonging to the War Department of the United States, which was then and there operated in a wrongful and negligent manner by Lieut. Howard Keefer, a United States pilot, then and there flying under orders and in line of duty.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 1, line 6, after the figures "$5,000," insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 1, line 6, after the figures "$5,000," insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the bill I offer the usual attorneys' fee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: Page 2, line 6, after the word "duty," insert the following: "Provided. That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 692, for the relief of Western Electric Co. (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the author of the bill as to its merits, and a good reason for now passing it. Without such explanation, I shall be forced to object.

There are 809 bills on this Private Calendar, all seeking to take money out of the Federal Treasury. Some involve very large sums of money. Here and there you will find a bill on this calendar that seeks to appropriate several millions of dollars out of the Treasury. Some of these 809 bills are good and meritorious and ought to be passed, but some are wholly without merit, and to pass them would be almost a crime against the trusting taxpayers of this country.

Under the rules to-day, when each bill is called by the Clerk, unless some Member is upon his feet and promptly objects to its passage, it is passed in the twinkling of an eye, merely by the Speaker stating, "Without objection, this bill is considered, read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider is laid upon the table," and that short but decisive action passes the bill.

To stop these bad bills from passing, it is necessary for some of us to carefully investigate each and every one of these 809 bills as soon as they are favorably reported and placed on the calendar, and to be prepared to be able to make timely objections, and to be here and promptly make the objection when the bill is called up. Otherwise you could not tax the people enough to keep any money in the public Treasury, for every dollar that goes in the Treasury comes out of the pockets of the people in burdensome taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

CARL F. CASTLEBERRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 873, for the relief of Carl F. Castleberry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman kindly indicate the ground of his objection to this bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say in favor of this bill. Apparently you are trying to collect damages. Here is a case where a man elected in 1922 to collect damages for an injury which he received as a railway mail clerk. He had his opportunity to make an application for compensation under the compensation law. He elected to take damages instead of the $66.66 a month, and 10 years afterwards he wants to have everything in the past set aside and to collect compensation from that time until now. I was very much interested in noting that there is not a single offer by him or on his behalf to reimburse the United States for any amount he collected as damages. It looks like an unfair claim.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The point involved is simply this: This man was in the Railway Mail Service and was injured by a wreck on the train while on active duty, and sustained an injury. He thought, and was so advised by the attending physician, that it would not be a matter of serious consequence, and he made a settlement with the railroad company for the injury sustained.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. One thousand five hundred dol-

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. He did not file any claim with the Compensation Commission.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. But, on the contrary, he was advised of his rights time after time by the Compensation Commission, and at the end of a year he advised the Compensation Commission that he did not want to make a claim and instead he made a settlement with the railroad company.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will kindly refer to the report, I think he will be impressed with the language used, as I have been, by the chairman of the Compensation Commission:

Should the proposed measure be enacted into law the limitations hereinbefore referred to would be removed and the commission would be able to receive and consider Mr. Castleberry's claim, which appears to have strong equities.

The only purpose of this measure is to allow this man an opportunity to file his claim with the agency of the Government constituted for that purpose, to consider his claim the same as it considers all other claims; in other words, to allow him the opportunity of having his day in court and an opportunity of receiving consideration by the Employees' Compensation Commission. This is all that is provided for in the bill, and this is all that is sought.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here we have a case where a railway mail clerk immediately after the accident availed himself of the damages that he might recover from the railroad company and, also, perhaps received the benefits of insurance in the railway mail clerks' organization. If he had filed his claim then, he would have been entitled to monthly compensation dating from the time of the injury back in 1921. I know my friend from Tennessee will have no objection to providing that the measure shall not be retroactive, as we do in all such cases.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, very frankly, this is a bill of my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McReynolds], who is unavoidably absent to-day, and I am simply undertaking to look after the matter in the gentleman's absence.

Mr. STAFFORD. There have been some instances where we have reinstated claims of this character, some of them where the claimant did not know of the law and others where, for some reason, they did not file the claim. In this case the Government has not been out any money by virtue of this man not having filed his claim originally. The claimant has not received any money from the Government, although he has received money from the railroad company, but the money he received from the railroad company would not have barred him from relief under the employees' compensation act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Only to the extent of repaying the Government and having deducted from the amount of money he got from the Government all money he received as damages.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this injury having occurred in 1921, under the law, the man would be entitled to the sum of $66 a month, and the gentleman will readily see that in two years that amount would have entirely offset the amount received as damages. The Government has been the gainer. If this claimant, a former railway mail clerk, for some reason did not then wish to present a claim, or if, perhaps, he felt he could get along without making such claim, but is now in straitened circumstances, I think we should grant him the privilege of being accorded such rights under the customary stipulations which we generally follow.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, may I supplement the splendid statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin to this extent? All the records presented in the report very clearly indicate that this man has suffered a permanent injury. He did not know, and his physician did not know, at the time of the injury, that it would be a matter of such serious consequences.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 767 and 770), are hereby waived in favor of Carl F. Castleberry, who was injured while in the employ of the Railway Mail Service in a railroad accident on December 2, 1921, resulting in permanent physical and mental disability. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized to consider and act upon his claim, No. 104497, under the remaining provisions of such act, as amended, as if his claim and notice had been filed within 60 days after said accident: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue hereunder until after the enactment of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Carl F. Castleberry for an injury purporting to have occurred while employed in the Railway Mail Service on or about December 2, 1921, in the same manner and to the same extent as if Carl F. Castleberry had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RAYMOND NELSON HICKMAN

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5999, for the relief of Raymond Nelson Hickman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GRISWOLD. I object.

ASA G. AYER

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1843, for the relief of Capt. Asa G. Ayer. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would | CHICO-WESTWOOD-SUSANVILLE AUTO STAGE CO., CHICO, CALIF. like an explanation of the bill from the author, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to act as proxy for the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has been called out of

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to know if the bill embraces any of the rigid provisions he had in his bill against birth control, which he said his secretary introduced for him by

Mr. STAFFORD. No; this is for the remission of a bond given by Captain Ayer for failure to appear as a material witness in a case in a district court and does not involve any midwife or maternity restrictions. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The bill that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tinkham] introduced, and which he sought to withdraw, was full of rigid restrictions against birth control, and I wanted to be sure that none of them had gotten into this bill.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MOUSER. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have the peculiar condition in this report, that a former attorney general, John S. Sargent, from the Granite State, very obdurate in his opinions, recommended favorable action on this bill. But the present Attorney General takes a counter position.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is always here on the occasions when we have a beer bill up, and he is always here on the occasions when we have a bill for repealing the eighteenth amendment. He comes in also and makes periodical speeches against Methodist Bishops and the representation of the South in Congress. Why is he not here when his bill comes up?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I stated to the gentleman, I was under the impression the gentleman from Massachusetts was called out of the Chamber.

Mr. BLANTON. Has he gone off on an elephant hunt? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MOUSER. I object.

CAPT. CHESTER J. DICK

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2063, for the relief of Capt. Chester J. Dick. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate bill, S. 669, an identical bill, will be substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

An act for the relief of Chester J. Dick

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Chester J. Dick, captain, Finance Department, United States Army, in an amount not to exceed $662.77, representing the amount of stoppage against the pay of the said Chester J. Dick ordered by The Adjutant General because of the embezzlement by Otto Melton, former civilian cashier, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., of funds for which the said Chester J. Dick was accountable.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Chester J. Dick an amount equal to the amounts paid by him to the United States in partial settlement of the said obligation of $662.77.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table. The House bill was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3526, for the relief of the Chico-Westwood-Susanville Auto Stage Co., Chico, Calif.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

HOMER J. WILLIAMSON

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4162, for the relief of Homer J. Williamson. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will if the gentleman will not indulge in a tirade about making socialists, as he did before.

Mr. LUDLOW. There will be no dissertation on socialism, but I would like to present the facts in this case. This is a righteous claim, if there ever was one before Congress. This young manufacturer of candy in the city of Indianapolis wanted to do the right thing in filing his income-tax returns. It occurred to him that the best way to make an honest, fair, and legal return would be to take the advice of the local officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Then he did the very proper thing. He went to the Indianapolis Internal Revenue Office with his figures and laid all of his facts about his income before the officials there. They made out his return and not until five years later, after the statute of limitations had run, was he notified by an official of the Government that the return had been made out improperly and that he had been overcharged in the sum of $1,045.81. There was no way in the world for him to know that this mistake had been made. His intent was perfectly good. The error was committed by an agent of the Government, and this bill is to refund to this business man in Indianapolis the amount which was erroneously overpaid in income taxes through no fault of his own and on a return that was made out for him by an agent of the Government. I do not believe there could be a more just claim against the Government than this one.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are many instances where the taxpayers called on representatives of the Government for aid and where mistakes were made. Speaker of the House early in the session called attention to the fact that if we reopen these tax refund cases from his experience on the Ways and Means Committee it would involve an expenditure running into hundreds of millions of dollars. There may be merit in this case, but we should not adopt the policy of opening the door-in such a case as this: otherwise we would have to open it to many others. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RALPH E. WILLIAMSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4911) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I had this bill marked down for objection myself, but I find that all of the others have been paid, and it seems to me in common justice that this one ought to be paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] for withholding his objection. Permit me to say that the amount involved in this bill is only $525. A bill passed the Seventieth Congress for about $70,000 involving the same circumstances. The name of Ralph Williamson was merely left out of the original bill inadvertently, through no fault of mine and through no fault of this claimant. Inasmuch as all the other claimants have been paid by this Government, and a thorough investigation was made by a former Congress, it seems that the gentleman from Wisconsin might withdraw his objection and permit this claim to go through.

If time permitted me to go into the history of the case, I am sure I could explain to the entire satisfaction of the gentleman that this is a just claim. If he will read the report of a previous Congress, as well as the report of the present Claims Committee, he will find that the Government was entirely at fault; and if the gentleman so desires, I shall be glad to give him all the information he wishes on this claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am more concerned with the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collins] that prior Congresses have enacted bills for the reimbursement of claims arising out of this situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. And they have been enacted into law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $565 to Ralph E. Williamson, as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That before said claim is allowed and paid the Comptroller General of the United States shall make an investigation of said claim to determine the extent and amount of such loss and damage, and such claim shall be adjusted in amount not in excess of the amount set out herein and upon certificates not in excess of the amount set out herein and upon certificates issued to said claimant by the said Comptroller General of the

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE BOIES

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the membership of this House to the death yesterday of the Hon. William Dayton Boies, my immediate predecessor.

Judge Boies, as he was familiarly known, was a resident of Sheldon, Iowa. He served as judge of the fourth judicial district of Iowa for several terms, and in 1918 was elected a Representative in Congress from my district.

In his service as a public official he had a record as one who fulfilled that public trust honestly, fearlessly, and faithfully. He was a member of the Judiciary Committee, a position which, owing to his legal ability, he was well able to fill. For 10 years he served in Congress and voluntarily resigned by reason of ill health. Many Members of this Congress knew him well and appreciate the associations they had with

I shall never forget the helpful advice that he gave me as. his successor, and the news of his death will bring sadness to those of us who have had the pleasure of his personal association.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 2, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

CONSTRUCTION OF PROJECTS THROUGH THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. BARBOUR presented a letter from D. J. O'Connor, manager of the Jackson (Mich.) Chamber of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JACKSON, MICH., May 31, 1932.

Senator W. Warren Barbour,

United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Barbour: I have very carefully gone over your bill which was introduced to expand the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and I believe that it is one of the most constructive which was introduced to expand the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and I believe that it is one of the most constructive pieces of legislation with regard to the relief of the unemployed that has been devised to date.

I have had a great deal of experience in organizing of late, building and modernizing projects for the relief of the unemployed as well as stimulating the general business through the sale of building supplies and material.

Your bill should initiate such a movement nationally and should be of great assistance for the relief of the unemployed, especially in the sections or districts where the building of smallincome homes or resident property has heretofore been neglected. There is no doubt but that there is a great demand for projects of this character, homes that will fit the needs of individuals with an income up to $2,500 to $3,000 per annum.

As a suggestion, I would think that it is necessary, or at least advisable, for the Government or for private business interests, especially those connected with the building trade, to immediately initiate a national campaign upon the passage of your bill so as to have each section organized where there has been a need determined for this type and class of construction.

A survey could be made nationally that would illustrate the exact number of such projects in various sections of the country and the publicity gained from such a survey would be of material assistance in stimulating this type of construction.

Personally, if I can be of any assistance to you in the advisory capacity or otherwise, feel perfectly free to call upon me.

Thanking you for your courtesy and cooperation in sending me a copy of this bill as well as the opportunity to express my opinion of the same, I remain

Sincerely yours,

D. J. O'CONNOR. Manager Jackson Chamber of Commerce.

EXCHANGE OF TIMBERLANDS, YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of Tuolumne County, Calif., a telegram from the district attorney of that county, and also a letter addressed to me by the California State Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the passage of the bill (S. 4472) to provide for the restoration, through exchange, of certain timberlands to the Yosemite National Park, Calif., and for other purposes.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C .: United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:
Respectfully request your opposition Senate bill 4472. This bill pernicious move by chronic conservationists deprive this county more and more privately owned land from assessment roll. If proposed annexed land paid for by timber sales from Stanislaus National Forest, this county lose revenue 25 per cent. Timber sales Stanislaus Forest under present law used for support county schools and highways. This method of purchase would place county ridiculous position surrendering annual revenue from Stanislaus Forest to purchase land Yosemite National Park, which land when paid for and Government receive title would be taxland when paid for and Government receive title would be tax-free, and county would be making gift portion purchase price and then lose all tax revenues from land annexed. California Chamber of Commerce meeting this matter June 18.

C. H. GRAYSON, District Attorney of Tuolumne County.

California State Chamber of Commerce, Stockton, Calif., May 16, 1932.

Hon. Senator Samuel M. Shortridge

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: You probably know of the activities of the emergency conservation committee, with headquarters at 113 East Seventy-second Street, New York City, which is advocating the acquisition of certain timberlands immediately outside of the western boundary of Yosemite National Park by the grant in ex-change therefor of an equal value of Stanislaus National Forest stumpage.

It is the contention of the emergency conservation committee that the lands in question are adjacent to the Big Oak Flat Road, but the fact is that the proposed new Big Oak Flat Road will not traverse any portion of these lands.

The California State Chamber of Commerce has adopted a policy which opposes any further extension of national parks in California where there are natural resources involved which may be needed for the future development of this State based upon this policy and further, upon the belief that to take additional lands out of the tax roll of Tuolumne County would place an undue burden on the citizens thereof.

The Central Valley Council of the State chamber of commerce den on the citizens thereof.

The Central Valley Council of the State chamber of commerce has gone on record opposing the acquisition of this land. The council area, which comprises the counties of Alpine, Amador, Calaveras, San Joaquin, Stanislaus, Tuolumne, and the fifth supervisorial district of Contra Costa County, urges that you exercise your power to defeat the announced program of the emergency conservation committee having to do with the acquisition of the above-referred-to timberlands.

You have probably received the resolution which was adopted.

You have probably received the resolution which was adopted by the board of supervisors of Tuolumne County, in which this council wishes to express itself as concurring in that resolution.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. H. SEGEESTROM, Regional Vice President and Chairman Central Valley Council.

SUBSIDIZING OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement of the subsidizing transactions between the United States and the Franklin-Roosevelt-Dollar group of steamship companies, giving them over $100,000,000, compiled from the official records of the United States Shipping Board and the Post Office Department as of May, 1932, by John Nicol-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

SUBSIDIZING TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE FRANKLIN-ROOSEVELT-DOLLAR GROUP, GIVING THEM $100,000,000

The P. A. S. Franklins, the Robert Dollars, and the Roosevelts have a joint interest through stock ownership in one or more have a joint interest through stock ownership in one or more of the lines mentioned below, all of which are owned by one or more of this group, hence this combined statement of the financial aid they are receiving from the United States incident to sales of ships at very low prices, loans from the construction loan fund, and ocean-mail "contracts" under Title IV of the merchant marine act, 1928:

I. THE UNITED STATES LINES CO.

The Franklins, the Roosevelts, and the Dollars are all financially interested in this company; they own it. The line is greatly profiting at the cost of the United States through large concessions from true value in the sales prices of vessels sold it, in the loans made it for the construction of new vessels, and in postal loans made it for the construction of new vessels, and in postal contracts given it.

(a) Sales prices: The vessels sold it include the Leviathan, the Roosevelt, the Harding, and seven others. Their total cost to the United States exceeded $44,000,000. They were sold to this line for $3,175,000, and as the part payments received from a previous defaulting purchaser was more than offset by unpaid accrued interest and by the loss resulting from taking back the steamships America and George Washington, the amount named ($3,175,000) is all the United States will receive for these vessels, less than 10 per cent of their cost. While the "cost" does not represent present market value, the sales price is very much less than their true market value, the concession being made to promote their operation in foreign trade. To construct only the Leviathan now would cost over $20,000,000. About eight years ago the Shipping Board expended nearly $10,000,000 in | reconditioning her.

(b) Loans: The Shipping Board has lent this line $15,700,000 in aid of building two new vessels. This large sum has been loaned it at the excessively low interest rate of one-half of 1 per cent, and for 20 years. The average interest rate on the public debt of the United States is about eight times greater. The interest loss on this one transaction will exceed $5,350,000.

(c) Postal contracts: There have also been granted this line two ocean mail "contracts," the compensation under which greatly exceeds the transportation value of the mail in fact carried.

(1) Route No. 43, between New York and Hamburg, Germany, for 10 years, under which it will be given $14,000,000.

(2) Route No. 44, between New York and London, for 10 years, under which it will receive $10,500,000.

Total from both mail contracts, $24,500,000.

II. THE ROBERT DOLLAR LINES

The Dollars also own three trans-Pacific lines, viz: One from San Francisco to Manila, one from Seattle to Manila, and one from San Francisco in "the round the world" service. With respect to each of these, also, it has received extensive financial spect to each of these, also, it has received extensive financial aids from the United States in the low sales prices of vessels sold it, in the grant of loans at very low rates of interest, and in the award of ocean mail contracts at excessive rates.

(a) Sales prices: The board has sold it 15 vessels in all. These were built after the World War and are among the finest the United States has built. Their cost exceeded $84,000,000. They have been sold to the Dollars for $12,775,000. While construction cost does not represent market value, the sales price was hardly one third of their true market value, a concession being made to cost does not represent market value, the sales price was hardly one-third of their true market value, a concession being made to promote their operation in foreign trade.

(b) Loans: Nearly $13,000.000 has been loaned the Dollars—entirely apart, of course, from the unpaid purchase money on the vessels sold it. Of this amount, $10,575,000 has been loaned for 20 years to aid in building two large vessels. One-half of it (i. e., $5,287,500) has been loaned at the abnormally low rate of 1 per cent per annum, and the other half (i. e., $5,287,500) at the ridiculously low rate of one-quarter of 1 per cent per annum. The average interest rate on the public debt of the United States is nearly sixteen times the one-quarter of 1 per cent rate. The interest loss to the United States will exceed $2,450,000.

(c) Postal contracts: Three ocean mail contracts have been awarded them for 10 years: Route 25, between San Francisco and Manila; Route 26, between Seattle and Manila; and Route 27, the round-the-world service. The amount being paid at present will round-the-world service. The amount being paid at present will be greatly increased in the future; but even on the basis of the present fleets they will be about $38,000,000. The transportation value of the mail in fact carried, tested by results down to June 30, 1931, will be only about one-eighth of the compensation in fact paid.

III. AMERICAN SOUTH AFRICAN LINE

This line operates between New York and South Africa. It was sold the Roosevelts and the Franklins by the Shipping Board.

(a) Sales price: The five vessels sold it are about 409 feet long and 5,600 tons gross. The total sales price was $777,000. Their construction cost the United States over $9,000,000. Hence the sales price is not 10 per cent of their cost. Their market value is less than their cost; but their market value greatly exceeded the sales price, a concession being made to promote their operation in foreign trade. foreign trade.

(b) Loan: This company has built one new vessel (the City of New York) in aid of which the board loaned it $1,350,000 at 3% per cent for 20 years—a rate lower than the average interest cost of the public debt. The interest loss exceeds $7,000 per annum.

(c) Postal contract: Route No. 6, New York to South African ports, for 10 years. This contract will yield the line over $2,600,000. The transportation value of the mail, in fact, carried between October 27, 1928, and June 30, 1931, was $43,237 at commercial rates paid by the International Postal Union, but the "compensation" paid for the same period was $782,692.

IV. AMERICAN LINE STEAMSHIP CORPORATION

This line is owned by the Atlantic Transport Co., which in turn is owned by the International Mercantile Marine Co. and is thus controlled by the Franklins. The vessels were not sold to it by the board; the company built them, aided by loans from the the board; the company built them, aided by loans from the loan fund of the board.

(a) Loans: The board loaned about $11,000,000 for 20 years to aid the construction of the three vessels in this service. As it is a "coastwise" route, the interest rate was definitely fixed by law and is not at a loss to the United States. It has been with loans on vessels in foreign trade that unreasonable and abnormal rates have been applied.

(b) Postal contracts: Route 32, ostensibly a route between New York and Balboa. We say "ostensibly" because the visit to Balboa is a mere navigation incident in the transit of the Panama Canal. The contract is for 10 years and will yield the company the totally unexpected boon of over $4,000,000. The three vessels built are not the result of this contract, either immediately or

V. THE ROOSEVELT STEAMSHIP CO.

This line operates between Baltimore and Bremen. Its initial sale by the board was to the Franklins and the Roosevelts.

(a) Sales price: The five vessels sold it are about 440 feet long and 7,500 tons gross. The sales price was nominal; $30,000 for each vessel, total $150,000. They were built by the board and cost more than $9,000,000. Hence the sales price is less than 2 per cent of their cost. Their cost is not necessarily their market per cent of their cost. Their cost is not necessarily their market value. Their true market value, however, was nearly ten times the sales price; the concession was made to promote their reconditioning ditioning and their operation in foreign trade. The board lent most of the cost of reconditioning.

(b) Loans: The loan is $6,500,000 for 20 years at 3 per cent, to aid in the reconditioning of the five vessels sold. This low interest rate will yield less by $500,000 than the average interest cost of the public debt, hence the interest loss will exceed $500,000.

(c) Postal contract: Route No. 46, between New York and Bremen, for 10 years, during which the line will receive not less than $1,222,000 per year. The total will exceed $12,000,000.

than $1,222,000 per year. The total will exceed $12,000,000.

That the annual compensation is excessive for the vessels used, is revealed by the terms of the contract, under which the Postmaster General may, after the first five years, require the contractor to build a new vessel, and it would cost the company over $5,000,000 to do so. The right to require the new vessel is imperative; it is not a "mutual agreement" item. It is obvious the postal-contract compensation through the first five years was made higher than otherwise justified, to put the contractor in funds with which to build the new vessel if compelled to do so by the Postmaster General.

This interpretation is confirmed by the provision of the con-

This interpretation is confirmed by the provision of the conract, that, if the new vessel is not built, the compensation for the second five years will be reduced to a more nearly proper level for the old vessels. It is an incredible fact, however, that the contractor is thus (admittedly) compensated during the first five years on a scale covering a new building program, and yet, should the new vessel not be built, he is to retain all this surplus compensation intended for the cost of the new vessel.

compensation intended for the cost of the new vessel.

This feature of this contract prompts reference to another contract of this group, viz, the sales contract to the Dollars for the seven large, fine "President" vessels, operated in the "round the world" service. These vessels cost the United States over $6,000,000 each to build, and they were sold to the Dollars within three years of their completion at the nominal price of $550,000 each. This absurdly low price seemed explained by a stipulation in the preamble of the contract that "the buyer has agreed to establish with sald vessels and to maintain for a period of five years * * the round-the-world service." That is, that they were guaranteeing to do it, apparently, whether it paid or not. And that the great difference between sales price and market price was to compensate for this risk.

But the body of the contract imposed no such guaranty; they

But the body of the contract imposed no such guaranty; they were free to abandon the maintenance of the service; nor was the abandonment of that service to impair the contract of sale; the abandonment of that service to impair the contract of sale; the board could have taken the vessels to operate them, but only temporarily and at its own expense, and with obligation to return them in good condition to the Dollars not later than at the end of the 5-year period; and, of course, that period having passed, they would then be free of all limitations as to use—restoring them to their normal market price value—the excess above the low sales value being the Dollars'. This result is not based on any ambiguity of language, but by clear and express provisions of the contract.

The success members of this group have had in procuring terms and policies serving their purposes, as in obtaining a postal contract for an intercoastal service, in direct contravention of law and in the two instances just mentioned above, is further demonstrated by the successful opposition of the Dollars to the declared purpose of the Postmaster General to advertise as a postal route a direct service between San Francisco and Manila, P. I. This course had been decided on because the Matson Line had made known that if awarded a mall contract it would build fast, splendid vessels for the route and give a service about seven days shorter than the schedules of the Dollar vessels. The Matson vessels would have gone direct; the Dollar vessels go via Japan and China. The success members of this group have had in procuring terms

After extended hearings the Dollars were successful in their opposition, their success being largely explained by the fact (revealed in the records) that the chairman of the Shipping Board veated in the records) that the charman of the Shipping Board supported the Dollars in their opposition, an amazing attitude in the light of the fact that the Shipping Board has recommended an extension of the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands.

And thus was lost a direct passenger service with the Philippine Islands which would have saved seven days over present schedules, all to the end that traffic by the Dollar vessels, which take a route seven days longer, might not be impaired.

TAX ON ELECTRIC ENERGY

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in the discussion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] to the revenue bill relating to the tax on electric energy, a difference of opinion was manifested as to whether the tax which is provided for will be passed on to the consumer. In view of that difference of opinion I ask that there be incorporated in the RECORD an article appearing in to-day's Journal of Commerce on that subject entitled "Electric Industry Not to Shift 3 Per Cent Tax-Utility Men Say Companies Will Absorb New $55,000,000 Levy on Gross Income."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Journal of Commerce, June 2, 1932]

ELECTRIC INDUSTRY NOT TO SHIFT 3 PER CENT TAX—UTILITY MEN SAY COMPANIES WILL ABSORB NEW $55,000,000 LEVY ON GROSS

The electric power and light industry is not expected to be able to pass on immediately to consumers any important part of the 3 per cent excise tax adopted by the Senate and include d in the new revenue bill, it was indicated yesterday by local utility men.

The amendment to the tax bill, submitted by Senator Howell of Nebraska, provides that there shall be imposed upon energy sold by private companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of gross revenues received and that this tax shall be paid from net and "not

With gross revenues of approximately $2,000,000,000 after allowing for an estimated 5 per cent decline in 1932 gross, the tax would raise in the neighborhood of $55,000,000.

TWICE RAILROAD TAX

The utilities would enjoy a small partial offset, however, inasmuch as the 3 per cent payment would reduce net income on which their tax payments are computed. With the fact in mind which their tax payments are computed. With the fact in mind that the power industry last year paid out a sum greater than $200,000,000 in taxes, equal to more than 10 per cent of gross revenues, it is indicated that a 3 per cent tax addition is a considerable burden. Under the new bill the companies, taken as a whole, would pay approximately 13 per cent of their total gross receipts in taxes, while the railroad industry, for example, pays only slightly more than 6 per cent more than 6 per cent.

As an offset, it is said that in the long run, in view of the con-As an offset, it is said that in the long run, in view of the constitutional protection afforded the companies, the new tax might mean that rates will be held at present levels. It is this question of lower rates that has been much to the fore during the past several months, and if a tax on power sales means that rates will remain relatively unchanged, it is said likely that the industry will suffer little in the way of diminished income and at the same time the Government will receive a substantial return.

Meanwhile the question of reduced earnings is problematical. As numerous power companies have hardly begun to cut expenses

Meanwhile the question of reduced earnings is problematical. As numerous power companies have hardly begun to cut expenses to the extent of other industries, it was yesterday pointed out that much in the way of expense reductions could be accomplished. Wages, for instance, are at predepression levels for almost all leading companies. Further savings in maintenance due to cheaper materials and supplies is also a factor, while oil and coal, the biggest utility costs excepting labor, are cheaper than in many years. Depreciation provisions, liberal in the past, may also be altered. years. altered.

According to the wording of the Howell rider to the Senate bill, municipal plants would be exempt from the impost. Senator Howell is head of the municipally operated gas and water works of Nebraska shares were liquidated rather heavily in yesterday's trading on the securities market. A number of holding-company common shares sold at new low level in anticipation of lower net income for operating companies, and hence reduced returns for the parent concerns, according to opinion expressed in some quar-ters. Companies where the equities for stocks are thin would be most affected by the measure, it was argued.

His amendment follows:

PRIVATE COMPANIES

"There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which sold payable from net income, but not otherwise.

REDUCTION IN COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have been presented with a memorial from the two cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis containing better than 20,000 names of citizens who are opposed to the proposed wage cut. They protest in their own language, to wit:

This protest expresses the opinion of 20,000 Minnesota citizens. We are opposed to wage cuts and enforced lay off for Federal employees. Such legislation would have a serious effect on Besides this protest of 20,000, I have been receiving daily hundreds of wires and letters to the same effect from my State. This morning's mail brought me better than 500 such wires and letters. Among them is a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green, which I ask leave to print. Also a letter from the president of the National Federation of Federal Employees, Mr. Steward, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Charles E. Smith, president St. Paul Branch Railway Mail Association, wires in behalf of its members.

- J. W. Koktavy, Minneapolis, wires in behalf of the Minneapolis post-office motor-vehicle employees.
- C. M. Harvey, president tenth division, Railway Mail Association, St. Paul, wires in behalf of railway postal
- J. E. Hanslik wires in behalf of 5,000 members of property tax reduction clubs.

Margaret West, president Minneapolis Teachers' Federation, wires in behalf of thousands of teachers.

- H. P. Borgman, secretary, Local No. 125, National Federation, Post Office Clerks, wires in behalf of 550 members.
- C. H. Allender, secretary, Local 286, Cass Lake, wires in behalf of 70 employees.

Mr. Redpath, commander, Railway Mail Post, American Legion, St. Paul, wires in behalf of 150 members.

James H. Long, president Federal Employees, St. Paul, wires in behalf of its members.

W. A. Fish wires in behalf of Minneapolis postal employees, and hundreds of other such wires representing smaller groups, besides a great mass of individual protests.

Mr. President, there is undoubtedly a universal protest of the workers and producers of my State against this legislation who demand of me my opposition to the lowering of living standards and favor the preservation of the wages and conditions which Federal employees have gained through years of struggle and effort.

Minnesota has received only 75 per cent of the apportionment of civil-service employees she is entitled to, and under any plan there should be no dismissals of employees whose residence is in the State of Minnesota unless the reduction in personnel is more than 25 per cent.

There being no objection, the letters above referred to (with an accompanying table) were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1932.

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Because of the deep interest which the American Federation of Labor takes in the economic welfare of the Government employees we are deeply concerned over the provisions in the economy bill. For this reason I am taking the liberty of communicating with you to officially advise you of the position of the American Federation of Labor, and of labor generally throughout the Nation, so far as the American Federation of Labor can speak for it.

It is the opinion of the officers and members of the American It is the opinion of the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor that a reduction in the salaries and wages of the Government employees would be economically wrong. Through such action a great injustice would be imposed upon thousands of Government workers without a corresponding benefit to the Government. Wage cutting on the part of the Government would aggravate the disturbed state of mind which already exists, would intensify a paralysis of buying power, which at the present moment is having such a disastrous economic effect, and would increase the social unrest and economic discontent which would increase the social unrest and economic discontent which is so noticeable in all sections of the land. Private employers have followed an unwise policy of wage cutting and have aroused feeling and passion in the minds of the masses of the people everywhere. They believe that wage cutting on the part of the Government will be the signal for further reductions in private industry.

In my judgment a great service can be rendered the people by the Congress of the United States if it will officially declare itself in opposition to the lowering of living standards and in favor of the preservation of the wages and conditions which Federal employees have gained through years of struggle and effort. Such action would strengthen and encourage employers in private in-

Very sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN President American Federation of Labor.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1932.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are inclosing a tabular statement showing the number of civilian employees grouped by $100 salary steps. This table was prepared in the Bureau of the Budget and steps. This table was prepared in the Bureau of the Budget and is authoritative.

This table shows that a cut of 10 per cent on annual salaries of civilian Federal employees below $1,000 would save $4,330,902; below $2,500 would save $82,090,505; below $3,000 would save $92,574,817; and below $5,000 would save $102,687,787.

It is apparent that no Senator wishes to cut the pay of employees in the lower salary ranges. The bulk of the savings must be secured by cuts in this group. The savings effected by cuts in the higher-paid groups is so negligible as not to warrant the United States Government lowering employment standards.

Very truly yours.

Very truly yours,

LUTHER C. STEWARD, President.

LEGISLATION BY CONGRESS URGED

Mr. HASTINGS presented the following letter from H. S. Hayward, of Wilmington, Del., which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

WILMINGTON, DEL., May 31, 1932.

Senator DANIEL O. HASTINGS,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Do you know that you are sitting on a political volcano? Do you know that your fellow Senators and Congressmen in the lower House are sitting on a political volcano? Do you know unless drastic relief measures in the way of increasing employment are taken in time that there will be a revolution were then the French or Pussian Revolution? lution worse than the French or Russian Revolution? Do you know that there will be thousands of eligible voters who will not know that there will be thousands of eligible voters who will not vote this year or, if they vote, will vote some one not in office rather than anyone who will increase their taxes in any shape or manner? Do you know that the best ammunition that your opponents will have for your defeat and their election will be your vote for the $1,000,000,000 tax bill, whether the sales tax or other equally obnoxious taxes are written in it? Why don't you follow the plan formulated by Mr. Lammot du Pont, of the Du Pont Co. whereby the United States Government can save $1,000,000,000 in taxes? Then there would be no need for any present $1,000,000,000 additional taxes which are wholly uncalled for and unnecessary if the United States would cut its expenses to meet its present income like the individual, company, or corporation must do or go into bankruptcy or receivership. It would be nothing but plain common sense, just good horse sense if the United States Government would cut its expenditures by $1,000,000,000. Why should a spendthrift Congress—Senators and Representatives—impose burdensome taxes upon a people suffering under a depression the worst they have known. Why do you alienate depression the worst they have known. Why do you alienate 17,000,000 investors in bonds and stocks already having terrible paper losses in their bonds and stocks by imposition of additional transfer taxes. Why don't you tax heavily the short sellers of wheat, cotton, stocks, and bonds, the criminal betrayers of our prosperity, who are prolonging this depression? Why don't you increase the tax on refined sugar and increase the employment in our sugar refineries rather than have them on part time or thrown out of work because more and more refined sugar is imported?

Why do you regulate the railroads to the point of starvation so that they would be bankrupt or in hands of receivers if it were not for the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Why do you let the busses and trucks go unregulated, taking away business from the regulated railroads? Make the railroads prosperous and make the country prosperous. Why isn't there some constructive action in Congress rather than destructive in the $1,000,000,000 tax program.

Yours truly.

H. S. HAYWARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the State, Columbia, S. C., June 1, 1932] THE SOUTH CAROLINA BAR AND PROHIBITION

The question is being raised as to the merit of the vote recorded at the meeting of the South Carolina Bar Association last week in favor of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

In comment on the report published in the Greenville News that the resolution favoring repeal was passed by "a very large majority," H. J. Haynesworth, Esq., writes that the vote was actually 50 to 42, and was taken when less than half those who had attended the association's meeting were present. Mr. Haynesworth adds that he wrote a letter in advance of the meeting to the chairman of the committee having the resolution in charge saving.

ands that he wrote a letter in advance of the meeting to the chairman of the committee having the resolution in charge saying:

"The committee of which you are chairman has given public notice of its purpose to offer a resolution at the approaching meeting indorsing the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

"This is a subject involving certain moral, political, and economic considerations upon which the bar of this State is hopelessly divided.

nomic considerations upon which the par of this state is hopelessly divided.

"I question the propriety of entangling the association in controversies of this kind. Any resolution on the subject pro or con, if introduced, would be the subject of discord, and the result would not represent the sentiment of a united bar.

"I hope that your committee will reconsider its purpose to press this resolution."

The South Carolina bar is, as Mr. Haynesworth says, "hopelessly divided" on this issue, but whether that fact should debar it from raising the issue in its counsels, this layman regards as an open

We assume that the majority of the bar is personally wet; we do not believe a majority or even a large minority is politically wet at this time.

These resolutions are really not important without knowing something of the plans and program of the hereafter. What is to come after repeal—should repeal prevail?

As there is not one chance in ten thousand of South Carolina or three-fourths of the States consenting to repeal with no acceptor three-fourths of the States consenting to repeal with no acceptable substitute provided in advance, this splashing around seems rather purposeless and futile; especially by so potentially powerful and influential a body as is constituted by South Carolina lawyers. And there is so much which the South Carolina bar could do for South Carolina if it but put its hand to the plow. There is vitally important work to be done; there is crying need for it to be done, and only the members of the bar can do it.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask permission to print in the RECORD a short editorial from the Washington Daily News of this date entitled "A World Conference."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News, Thursday, June 2, 1932] A WORLD CONFERENCE

The Washington-London suggestion of a world economic conference is splendid. Two things have been taught this Nation and others by the depression. One is that the basic causes are economic. The other is that economic forces are not national but international. Drop a stone in our economic puddle and the ripples circle out across the seven seas to the ends of the earth. So when another nation puts its foot into it, we get the repercussions over here.

Such being the case, it is only a matter of very obvious intelligence for the nations to get together to eliminate causes which injure them all and to produce results which will benefit them all.

of course there is nothing new about the idea of a world economic conference. There was one at Geneva in 1927. There was another, though more limited in scope, in 1928. Neither of them improved the state of the world which, on the contrary, has grown

On the basis of this record one might consider another effort hopeless. That, indeed, was the attitude of President Hoover recently when he vetoed the Democratic tariff bill which carried a provision for a world economic conference. "The American Government has participated in several international economic conernment has participated in several international economic conferences for these identic purposes since the great war," he said, and added: "They have resulted in very little accomplishment."

It seems to us fortunate that the President has become more hopeful. He has now accepted the idea, at least in a limited way, according to the State Department announcement. In fact, Foreign Minister Simon told the British House of Commons yesterday that this latest proposal originated in Washington, which means at the White House.

Just why Washington should announce that the idea originated in London and London should insist that it was born in Washington.

in London and London should insist that it was born in Washington is not clear. This confusion, however, is not important unless it means that the two governments are practicing the old diplomatic trick of discussing solutions which they have no intention of carrying out.

That was the trouble with these other two economic conferences about which Mr. Hoover was so discouraged. The fault was not in the conference method. Nor was it in the failure to discover causes and to find at least partial solutions. The trouble was the insincerity of the governments participating. They were not willing to abolish their own selfish trade restrictions against foreign commerce and to batter down their own tariff walls. They were not willing to cut down war debts and reparations to a point which necessity now imposes upon them.

which necessity now imposes upon them.

It is futile; however, to blame the other fellow as long as our own attitude is so unintelligently selfish. In the very breath that the State Department announced acceptance of the international-conference plan, it specified that the "conference would have nothing to do with war debts, reparations, disarmament, or any other than purely economic subjects." There may be some disagreement—though we can not understand it—as to whether disagreement is a conference would be a subject to the subject agreement—though we can not understand it—as to whether dis-armament is an economic question. But if debts are not an eco-nomic question, words have lost their meaning.

Tariff is another economic question which Washington appar-ently would shut out from the "purely economic" conference.

For many months there has been need of an economic conference on debts, disarmament and expense and tariff—the 3-in-1 economic issue which must be settled to stop the world depression. But a world conference which concentrated on results like the fall in commodity prices, without getting back to causes, would be just another conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, under the subhead "Schedule of Temporary Reductions," on page 45, line 6, after the word "reduced," to strike out "as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $2,500 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $2,500" and insert "by 10 per cent of the amount thereof," so as to read:

Sec. 102. (a) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced by 10 per cent of the amount thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume the Senator is going to discuss the question of salary reductions?

Mr. BYRNES. I am. Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has given the matter so much attention that I would like to have the benefit of his discussion of an amendment which I have prepared. If he will yield for the purpose, I will offer the amendment. It can then be the pending amendment, and the Senator can discuss it.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection. Mr. NORRIS. I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

Strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500"; and, in line 8, after the semicolon following the word "reduction," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and that part of any annual compensation in excess of $1,500 and not in excess of $2,500 shall be sation in excess of $1,500 and not in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 5 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $2,500 and not in excess of $4,000 shall be reduced by 10 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,500 shall be reduced by 15 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $5,500 and not in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 20 per cent; and that part of any annual compensation in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 25 per cent."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not believe there could be assigned to any committee of the Senate a more disagreeable duty than that assigned to the so-called Economy Committee. It is pleasant to increase the salaries of employees and to increase appropriations for activities which result in larger salaries for employees. It is very unpleasant to take anything from employees. I would rather exercise the rôle of Santa Claus bringing gifts to people than to be charged with the duty of economizing when necessarily it results in decreasing the compensation of persons in the employ of the Government; but, Mr. President, we must not forget the situation existing in this country when the Congress convened last December and the situation existing to-day.

The necessity for this legislation has not arisen during the last few days. Throughout the Nation there was a demand for a reduction of taxation by all government. Decreasing dividends, decreasing employment, 5-cent cotton, 40-cent wheat, mortgages being foreclosed, farmers being driven from farms where they were born and where their ancestors were born, all caused the people of the Nation to demand that the cost of government—Federal, State, county, and city—should be reduced. States, counties, municipalities, have all responded with a reduction of taxation.

The Federal Government, however, responds by passing a bill taxing the people, who cry for a reduction, one and a quarter billion dollars, to be added to the burdens already placed upon them. On the other hand, throughout this Nation. States, without exception, have reduced their costs; salaries have been reduced by them; counties have reduced salaries; cities have reduced salaries. That condition is general. I shall refer to only a few instances where that has been done. The following municipalities, so far as I can learn as a result of a hurried investigation, during the fiscal year 1931, or during the current year, have reduced the salaries of employees in amounts ranging from 3 per cent to over 20 per cent: Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Newark, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Rochester, Portland, Oreg., Houston, Toledo, St. Paul, and Syracuse.

Even with the reductions we have made in some of the appropriation bills, what is the situation now confronting the country, and which has been confronting it during the last six months? Since last December I think I have consumed but 15 minutes of the time of the Senate: but I have listened with great attention to much of the discussion about appropriations. I know that every man who discusses the subject discusses it from a different angle. The President of the United States has referred to the reduction below the Budget estimates submitted last December. He refers in his statements to the reduction in what we call the regular annual appropriations and states that there was a reduction in the estimates submitted by him of approximately $369,-000,000 below the expenditures for the current fiscal year. But, Mr. President, what are the facts so far as the taxpayer of America is concerned? The taxpayer of America wants to know what is the tax bill imposed by this session of Congress as compared with the tax bill of the session of Congress which adjourned March 4 last year. That tax bill he has to pay; it makes no difference to him whether appropriations be called regular annual appropriations or miscellaneous appropriations. Here are the facts as to the appropriations of the last session of Congress as compared with this session of Congress:

The last session of Congress, which adjourned March 4, 1931, appropriated $5,178,524,967.95. Last December, at this session, the President submitted to the Congress from the Bureau of the Budget estimates for regular annual appropriations amounting to $4,601,479,101. Since that time he has submitted supplemental estimates amounting to $1,003,-456,647.64, which makes a total of $5,604,935,748.64 submitted to Congress.

What is the status of the appropriation bills to-day? If at this date the President of the United States should affix his signature to the appropriation bills now pending in Congress, whether they are now in conference, in the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, or in the hands of sub-

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not believe there could assigned to any committee of the Senate a more disagree-ble duty than that assigned to the so-called Economy Comittee. It is pleasant to increase the salaries of employees and to increase appropriations for activities which result in appropriations for activities which result in appropriations amounting to $159,491,057.79, which would leave us in the situation, if we had to close down this minute and the President signed the bills as they stand, of appropriating $266,-100,000 and to increase appropriations for activities which result in principles.

It is fair to say that involved in the aggregate amount are the so-called miscellaneous appropriations, including those for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the subscription to the capital stock of the Federal land banks, a deficiency appropriation for the Veterans' Bureau, an appropriation for the Employment Service, and several other items, all of which have combined to make this total. That, however, is not what the taxpayer wants to know. He says, "I do not want to become involved in any intricate set of figures; I want to know what the total bill is of this session of Congress as compared with the last." If we were to hand it to him to-day we would have to hand him a bill for $266,000,000 more than was appropriated by the last session of Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, just for information, will the Senator indicate how much the capital figures are in that estimate?

Mr. BYRNES. I can not give them in detail, but I think I can give the Senator the information he desires: That the decrease in the appropriations known as the regular annual appropriations as it stands to-day, by reason of the desire on the part of the Congress to economize wherever possible, amounts to $159,491,000.

How has that been brought about? It has been brought about because the Senate undertook to reduce expenditures and thereby respond to the demand of the people of America. After the House had undertaken its economy program we resorted to a further 10 per cent reduction here. Because of the reductions by House and Senate, the Interior Department appropriation bill was reduced 33½ per cent, and as a result of it hundreds of people will have to be dismissed from that service. We have greatly reduced other appropriations and similar dismissals will have to take place in the many departments affected.

The Post Office appropriation bill is pending before the Appropriations Committee, and as to it a controversy exists. It is contended by one Member that we can reduce it 10 per cent without causing dismissals because we can reduce the ocean mail subsidies and the air mail subsidies. That, however, is dependent entirely upon whether or not those contracts can be violated. The United States can not afford to violate its contracts; it never has done so and it never will: and when the Appropriations Committee of the Senate goes into that matter and the Senate considers it, if it involves a violation of contract, such action is not going to be taken; and then, if the reduction shall be made, it will mean that men and women throughout the Postal Service must be dismissed; that rural routes must be consolidated; that carriers and clerks must be dismissed. That is the situation. This cut must be agreed to or else the Senate must retreat from its position in favor of a 10 per cent cut in the appropriation for the Post Office Department, otherwise hundreds will be dismissed.

Where else are we going to effect savings? The President of the United States in a very optimistic statement said that he thought, in addition to the approximately $250,000,000 saving sought to be effected by this bill, we could hope for an additional $150,000,000 cut in other appropriations. Can we deduct 10 per cent from the independent offices appropriation bill? That bill carries approximately $1,000,000,000 for the veterans of the World War, the Spanish-American War, and the War between the States. We can not reduce it; and if we can not make a reduction in the appropriation for the veterans, manifestly we can not strike $100,000,000 from that appropriation bill. It can only be done by going to personnel and dismissing employees, destroying the service, closing regional offices throughout the country. We may as well realize that situation.

There is another thing. We talk about saving in this bill $238,000,000, and then say that we will add to that sum the savings effected in these other bills. If we should do that, we would not be doing what the Economy Committee thought was right. I want to explain that to the Senate right now.

In the Interior Department bill, as I have said, we reduced the appropriation below last year by 33 1/3 per cent. That means the dismissal of employees who have been in the service for years; it means turning them out at a time when more than 8,000,000 men walk the streets seeking employment. No more inhumane thing could be done even under extremity. We do not believe that it should be done, and we have sought to prevent it not only as to the Interior Department but also as to the other departments. How have we sought to prevent it? In this bill we seek to apply a reduction of 10 per cent in salaries. If for the Secretary's office there was an appropriation of $100,000-using that figure merely for mathematical purposes-and when the appropriation bill reached the Senate, by reason of the action of the majority of the Senate, under the McKellar motion we reduced that appropriation 10 per cent, then the amount left for personnel in the office of the Secretary of the Interior is $90,000, a reduction to the extent of $10,000, and to that extent employees will have to be discharged. This bill comes along, and we reduce by 10 per cent the salaries of the employees in that office, and when we reduce by 10 per cent the salaries paid to employees in the office of the Secretary of the Interior then he is able to keep in that office every employee now there. It is true they will all get 10 per cent less for this year, but not one employee will have to be dismissed. This is true because we have put into this bill a provision that the savings effected by this reduction of 10 per cent shall be available to apply in the departments and bureaus solely for the purpose of paying salaries. In other words, the head of the bureau can not take that reduction and use it to put up a building, but the head of the bureau, the Secretary of the Interior in the instance to which I have referred, can take the 10 per cent saving and apply it to the employees of that office and prevent the head of some family from being turned out upon the streets in this day of unemployment.

Mr. President, we did another thing. We thought that inevitably, by reason of the reductions and cuts heretofore provided by the Congress and those which are threatened, even with this 10 per cent reduction, there would necessarily be some reduction in the number of employees; and again, seeking to help them, we included a section, which has been the subject of criticism, but which was included for no other purpose other than to help them, providing that where, in any department, by reason of a reduction in appropriation made by Congress, after applying the 10 per cent cut, it is still necessary to dismiss men from the service of the Government, for this year the head of the department will have the right to furlough such employees instead of absolutely dismissing them from the service. The employee is furloughed without pay; he will not have to go through the procedure of reinstatement when normal times return when he asks for reinstatement: but he is continued as an employee. Solely for the purpose of helping him, we have placed in the bill the provision that the head of the department may furlough him without pay for the remainder of

But, Mr. President, we come right down to the question of salary reduction. If there is to be a saving on this score, we can not proceed, as did the gentlemen at the other side of the Capitol, to save, on account of salaries, $9,000,000. No man wants to reduce the compensation of employees. I certainly do not want to do it; and yet what is the situation in business?

According to a report which the Department of Commerce has received from the National Industrial Conference Board of New York City—I do not know how accurate it is in its figures; I submit it only for what it is worth—salaries were reduced in the last two years by four out of five of all concerns in the leading fields of American business. Wages were cut by three out of every four firms, according to a statement which the Department of Commerce, on May 28, received from the National Industrial Conference Board.

Our own experience is just as good a guide to us as any figures submitted by that board. What is the situation in our homes? Is the income of the cotton farmer decreased? It is gone. Is the income of the wheat grower decreased? It is one of the forgotten things of the past. How about the industrial enterprises in our States? Yesterday I received a telegram from the president of a cotton mill in South Carolina indicative of the rather general conditions, saying that 30 cotton mills would be closed down, and the men are laid off for the next 60 days. In every other State similar situations exist.

With this situation, with the demand on the part of the people for some relief from the burden of taxation, this problem is submitted to us,

Within the last 24 hours we put into a bill a tax of an additional cent on gasoline. It was sent to the other end of the Capitol and sent to conference with cheers, cheering the imposition of an additional tax on gasoline. When the farmer to-day, out on some farm in a Western State or a Southern State, stops a rural carrier and asks, "What is the news from Washington?" he can be told truthfully that in Washington they have imposed an additional tax of a billion and a quarter dollars to add to the burden of taxation under which he was already groaning and suffering day by day. He, in turn, can say, "Has any reduction been made in the appropriations, in the salaries of Federal employees?" "No."

We put this provision in the bill with this thought: We had to make a reduction in the expenditures of the Federal Government for this year. Where can it be done except on personnel? The reduction must be made with personnel. When we make the reduction in personnel, shall we do it with an exemption, on a graduated scale, by the furlough plan suggested by the President, or by some new and original plan?

We canvassed every one of the propositions. We concluded that the only way that we could possibly save the amount of money which the exigencies of the occasion demand was to apply this reduction of 10 per cent from President to porter, from judge to janitor, throughout all the Government service. When we enter into the intricacies of the furlough plan we necessarily become involved in discriminations in favor of one as against another man. Here is one man in an office who the head of the department would say was essential and should be exempted from the furlough plan. Here is another man who says, "Why did you exempt him? I am just as important to the Government"; and he is dissatisfied.

Government employees are human beings. No man will ever hear me criticize them for complaining of any reduction at all, because they are human; but what they want, if I understand them, is that every man shall be treated alike. If we treat them alike, then they have no complaint.

Whenever we enter the field of exemptions, we run into this situation: Suppose we put the exemption at $1,500. Pirst, from a legislative standpoint, let me be practical about it. I know what happens. If the Senator from Michigan bids $1,500, the President of the Senate will immediately become an auctioneer. Whenever he says "Are there any other amendments?" some other Senator is going to bid $2,000. "Are there any other amendments?" $2,500, $3,000, $3,500—exemptions going up and reductions going down. The inevitable result will be that out of this there will be no saving to the taxpayers of America. That is because we are human. That is because it is necessarily our desire, if we happen to entertain those particular views, to go as far as we can, to please friends among the Government employees.

The committee represented both sides of this Chamber and practically all sections of the country. We had varying views. We sacrificed them. So far as I am concerned, I stand for every provision in the bill. I stand for them only because it is absolutely to grant relief to the tax-payers of America. Much as I may think of the people in the employ of the Government of the United States when a rural carrier to-day leaves his post office to go 24 miles around his route, if he is a thoughtful man, he will know that every house he passes has in it a family which is now confronted with the necessity of eking out a living on 5-cent cotton or 40 or 50 cent wheat. He knows that the burden of taxation has made that homeowner wonder whether he will have a roof over his head for another 12 months. As the rural carrier drives by, receiving his salary, with his certainty of employment and his certainty of retirement. I think if he is a thoughtful man he will say, "I do not like to give up $200 of my salary this year, but when the Congress of the United States and the President of the Nation say it is necessary that this reduction be made, when my common sense tells me, even if there never was a Congress or President, that some reduction should be made. I am willing to give it up for one year, knowing as I do that under the terms of the bill, at the end of the year, automatically my salary is restored, and all that I am asked to do is to give up 10 per cent of what I received last year." Then he has the knowledge that every other employee is giving up the same thing, and he can say, "Well, I am being treated just like the other fellow. If any other employee were being treated better than I am, I would feel differently about it." I have an abiding confidence in the patriotism and unselfishness of these employees and their willingness to make a sacrifice.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, let me say that the theory upon which the committee acted in applying the 10 per cent cut was simply this: If a man is receiving $1,200 this year, and we deduct 10 per cent from his salary, he will receive $1,080 next year. There is not a man here who will not agree with the statement that for $1,080 now he can buy as much as he could buy for $1,200 last year or the year before.

If that statement is not correct, then our conclusions are not correct. I have gone to some trouble to investigate it. It is unnecessary to go into consulting the figures as to the wholesale index in this city. It shows a reduction. It shows that the purchasing power of the dollar has increased every month for the last 18 months. It shows that a dollar to-day is equal to more than a dollar and a half two years ago.

We can say—and I know the arguments, because we have thrashed them out—that that might not affect rent; that might not be true of this thing or that thing. I have discussed it in my own home, and I know that there has been a reduction certainly in the expense of provisions and of clothing to an amount that more than offsets the 10 per cent reduction that is applied here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator what consideration, if any, the committee gave to the question of rent, particularly in the city of Washington, where the largest number of Federal employees live. It seems to me that rent has not kept pace with the other necessities of life in the downward trend.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that the committee agrees with him, and that is why I mention it, because it is a subject that engrossed our attention for some time. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], nods his head, because we had a long discussion of it. It varies. In some instances there has been no reduction in rents, from what we could learn. In many other instances there has been a reduction. have even talked to one or two of my colleagues, and I learned from a colleague on this floor of a reduction of rental of the house occupied by him so that it now rents for much less than it was rented for last year.

I will say, however, that that is the worst of all of the items. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that rents have been the one thing in which there has been little reduction; but offsetting that I say this: While we reached the conclusion that that was the one factor in which there had been no material reduction in so far as the city of Washington is concerned, elsewhere in the country you can rent a house anywhere for from 25 to 33 1/3 per cent less than That I know there has been a reduction of more than 10 who are my friends, I know it is essential. I believe that | its former rental. You can do it in the State in which I live, and every man knows that that is true in his own home. This city is the only place where there has been an effort to maintain rents along the standard of the last few years.

> Outside of rent, however, a 10 per cent reduction in pay will not seriously impair the purchasing power of the individual. We have to take into consideration clothing and food; and every man who is keeping house, by consulting the housewife and the boss of his establishment, will find out that that statement is justified as to food and clothing.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Has the Senator found that there is any reduction in the cost of fuel?

Mr. BYRNES. I did not inquire, and therefore I do not

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the Senator know that coal is just as high as it ever was, and that all forms of fuel are just as expensive?

Mr. BYRNES. I know there has been a reduction of soft coal. I know that throughout the country, by reason of the tax bill, there presumably will be, in so far as electric current and gas are concerned, some possible increase in those

Mr. BLAINE. There may be an increase in electric current and gas and fuel over the present price, which is no lower than the price that has prevailed for several years.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that I do not know that there will be an increase; but I say in response to it that if that is so, then this is the fact: The whole Nation must be considered; and if by our action here we are going to increase the price of the fuel of the man who lives in Wisconsin and the fuel of the man who lives in Nebraska and the fuel of the man who lives in Maryland, and we are going to tax everything else that he uses, then we should not say, "While we take more from you, we decline to reduce the salaries of employees of the Federal Government so as to lighten the burden. We are going to take more out of you by additional taxation, but we can not reduce the expenditure of the Federal Government."

Mr. BLAINE. Another item: Where the Federal employee lives in a city having street-car transportation, street-car fares are increasing instead of being reduced. That is a very important item.

Mr. BYRNES. In some cities, no doubt, that is true. I am not familiar with the statistics on it. If the Senator has investigated the matter, I will accept his statement

Mr. BLAINE. It is true.

Mr. BYRNES. It may be true in one place.

Mr. BLAINE. I know of no place where street-car fares, the common means of transportation, have been reduced.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say for the city of Washington that taxicab fares are about the lowest here of any place that I know of in the Nation. I rather have rejoiced that that is true, as I use them.

Mr. BLAINE. In that connection, it would cost an employee 40 cents a day to use a taxicab in going to and from his work.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, if he did it without taking with him two or three other employees, that is true. If he took two or three others with him and paid the fare of 20 cents, it would be cheaper.

Mr. BLAINE. In the city of Washington, on a single ticket, it would cost a man 20 cents to go by street car to and from his work each day.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; and in a taxicab it would cost 20 cents, but if he took two or three others with him they would ride for the same 20 cents.

Mr. BLAINE. I am just analyzing these elements of cost. What did the Senator say was the reduced cost of food?

Mr. BYRNES. I said I would not go into that, since it was not fair to take the wholesale index, because the retailer might not give the benefit of the reduction in every instance. But I say this from my experience with my own expenses:

per cent in the cost of food. It is one of these things which | employees of the Government but to say that if they are livit is impossible to reduce to an absolute certainty. If any man thinks that to-day a dollar does not buy more than it did last year, he can take the view that this proposal would result in a reduction. If any man will admit that the dollar to-day will buy as much as $1.10 would heretofore, then he must agree that the salaried employee would not be hurt by the proposed reduction. That is the whole thing.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator recognizes that commodity prices, in so far as raw materials are concerned, have been greatly reduced. It has not been my experience that there has been great reduction in the retail prices of a great many of the necessities of life.

Mr. BYRNES. That is the Senator's view. I took the trouble of inquiring of my wife, the purchasing agent in my own home, as to the prices of the necessities of life, and when I see my friend the Senator from Wisconsin after this debate, I will tell him where the purchasing agent in my home does the buying for the home so that he can get the

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator may have a special Piggly Wiggly store at which he buys, about which I know nothing. Mr. BYRNES. I suggest that I will consult the purchasing agent of my home first, and then I will advise the Senator, so that he may profit by the information.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will give that advice to all of us.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think it will be necessary in the case of the purchasing agent in the home of the Senator from Nebraska, whom I know very well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator has referred to a salary of $1,200 a year. Let us take the time two years ago. Does the Senator think the average employee, let us say employed in the District of Columbia, drawing $1,200 a year, could enjoy anything like the comforts of living, of food, of clothing, of entertainment, of amusement, the Senator

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not exactly understand what the Senator refers to. If he means to ask whether some employee of the Government here in this city could enjoy the comforts I enjoy, I would say that most of them enjoy more comforts and certainly more entertainment than I do. It depends on a man's mode of life. The standards of living have not changed. When my clerk hands me a notice of overdraft this morning, it is not my first experience. The same thing has occurred when I was in private life and had a larger income. My observation is that we all have our standards of living, and generally manage to spend what we have. As income increases, obligations increase, demands increase.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The point is that the committee propose to take a flat rate off everyone's salary, they propose to reduce the standard of living of people with lower salaries by that flat-rate reduction, and in placing only a flat rate on the higher salaries, they would not change or in any wise interfere with the living standards of persons getting the larger salaries.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in response to that, let me say this, that this is not permanent legislation, it is temporary legislation. It is only asking each and every employee of the Government of the United States, from President to porter, whether in this crisis he is willing to give 10 per cent of what he is making this year to the Government of the United States. We say we do not disturb the relative positions of the employees of the Government. If they are drawing $2,000, or $1,000, or $3,000, there is no change in their status. If we make an exemption, we immediately begin to change the relative positions of the employees, and we do not want to do that. That would require permanent legislation. It would be saying some particular man should have a greater exemption because he has a larger family, or because he needs the money more. We thought it would be the wise thing not to affect in any way the relative positions of the 1 ing to-day in Washington and have an income of $3,000, and the standard of living is based upon that $3,000 income, just to give up 10 per cent of that, telling them that even with that reduction they can live just as well as they did two years ago. If that is true, they are not hurt. If it is not true. then to the extent to which it is not true, just to that extent and no more, are they hurt. But we do not attempt to interfere with the relative position of employees and say that the man drawing $2,000 should take a bigger cut than the fellow drawing $1,800, or $1,500, or $1,200. Let me direct my attention to that, because so many Senators have asked about it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I would like to know why the committee proposes to change the policy in dealing with salaries from the policy which has always prevailed in levying taxes upon incomes. Why did the committee do that?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the committee has had nothing to do with levying taxes, and I am glad we have not had. The job we have had has been sufficiently difficult for me without entering upon that. The only question is whether we will proceed with the policy which has been pursued by the Senate of deducting 10 per cent from all appropriations, resulting in kicking thousands of people out of the employ of the Government of the United States, and turning them into the streets or take 10 per cent from the salaries of employees of the United States and let the Government use that money in order to keep all the employees on the rolls. The time has arrived when one of two things is essential, to deduct 10 per cent from all the appropriation bills, meaning that the men and women on the rolls would have to leave the service: and who knows what demoralization would result? There is only one way to avoid that, and that is to apply the 10 per cent reduction to salaries, and apply the money saved to keeping people in their jobs. We can do the other thing, cut them out entirely, go on kicking people out of the Government service, but I can conceive of no more inhumane thing than that at this very time. It is not the time to do it.

As to the poorly paid employee, every man must feel kindly toward him. I could not be as eloquent as some Senators in picturing the hardship that would come to the charwomen. Some Senators stated to me that they would hate to take 10 per cent from the pay of the charwomen. I would, too. I do not like to take 1 per cent from the pay of any man or woman in the service of the Government of the United States. But why should we discriminate?

When one Senator asked that question I sought the information, and we may as well know the facts. The chairman of the committee and I were informed that charwomen-if we are going to wreck this economy bill because of our sympathy for them-get 50 cents an hour, $4 a day for an 8-hour day, if they work 8 hours, and the great majority of them work 8 hours a day. Of course, standards of living vary in all cities, and it may not be fair to make this suggestion, yet I say that in my State there are thousands of people being turned out of mills to-day, without a dollar to look forward to, who would rejoice at the opportunity to get on the Government roll at $3.60 a day, knowing that it is but temporary and that at the end of the year they would go back to $4 a day, to perform that service.

My friend the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] asked yesterday for some information which the committee did not have, because it involved a mathematical calculation that was different from that upon which they had proceeded. He wanted to know the amount of salary reduction for the several groups. As I recall, the Senator's inquiry was directed particularly to what would be the amount of reduction for the group drawing from $1,500 to $1,800. The amount of salary reduction from the group getting from $1,500 to $1,800 would be $12,370,000.

The amount of reduction in the group drawing from $1,800 to $2,000 would be $13,210,000.

The amount of the reduction in the group drawing from $2,000 to $2,500 would be $46,030,000.

I shall be glad to supplement it if I have the information.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator repeat the last figure he gave?

Mr. BYRNES. The amount of the reduction for the group drawing from $2,000 to $2,500 would be $46,030,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. When the Senator says that, does he mean that the $46,000,000 represents all below $2,500, or represents only the amount between $2,000 and $2,500?

Mr. BYRNES. Only between $2,000 and $2,500; but I will say to the Senator that this table shows that if there is added to that the amount taken from all those drawing below that, the inquiry the Senator now makes, the amount would be $89,450,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. That can hardly be accurate, can it, if we start with those drawing from $1,500 to $1,800? There are some salaries below $1,500, however, I suppose.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. That accounts for the difference. Now. let me check these figures.

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to turn this table over to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. On those drawing between $1,500 and $1,800 the reduction would be $12,370,000; from $1,800 to $2,000 it would be $13,210,000; from $2,000 to $2,500 it would be $46,030,000; the total for all under $2,500 being $89,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; $89,450,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, of course there is a reason for these figures. When we looked into the reason for that large figure covering employees receiving between $2,000 and $2,500, we found that the largest number of employees is in that group. We can not make reductions where there are no employees. The greatest reductions must necessarily come from the group where the greatest number of employees are, and that group, according to the table, embraces the employees drawing from $2,000 to $2,500 a year. As we get beyond $2,500, and go to $3,000, the amount decreases to $12,000,000; then, in the next group, drawing from $3,000 to $3,500, the amount is only $4,988,000, because the number of employees necessarily is smaller as we go into the higher brackets.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have in my hand a table showing the range in salaries from a thousand dollars up, by hundreds, of all Government employees. I have just made a calculation, which shows that if all Government employees receiving $2,150 a year or less were exempted from this reduction, it would mean that all who received $2,150 a year or more would have to stand a 20 per cent cut to arrive at the same figure. In other words, the man who is getting $2,400 a year, instead of losing $240 a year, would have to lose $480 a year, and that would be, in my judgment, with his rents and building association payments and the cost of his home going on, a greater hardship on that class than if there were a gradual reduction over the whole list.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to proceed, because I do not want to take much more time of the Senate. We recognize the strong argument that can be made along the lines several Senators have indicated in favor of an exemption. On the other hand, whenever we draw a line, there we cause dissatisfaction on the part of the man who has to pay more. An exemption would necessarily have to be arbitrary. The figures I have just read to the Senator from California so indicate. Whenever you make an exemption, the man whose salary is cut says: "Why exempt some and not exempt me? I have a family to support. Look at that man over there. He is a bachelor, he has no dependents upon him, and by reason of the exemption he does not lose anything." But when we apply the reduction to all, there is no man who would not have to say, "I have not been changed in so far as my status, with relation to my neigh-

I think that covers the range of the inquiry. If not, | bor, is concerned. He gives up 10 per cent and I give up 10 per cent. I know I can live, on about the same standard, with 10 per cent less than I received last year."

I had hoped that throughout the entire service of the Government of the United States the employees might say, "The Congress is not making a permanent change in our law. It is not seeking to disturb our salaries in the future. The Congress has simply said that when our relatives at home are being driven out of their homes and off the farms and their places being sold, and when they are unable to pay taxes, we should be willing to make the sacrifice ourselves of 10 per cent for this year, knowing that at the end of the year our salaries will go back where they were."

Let us face the situation frankly. If we provide an exemption of $1,500 and apply a 10 per cent cut, it will save only $35,000,000. If we provide an exemption of $2,000, the saving will be $16,000,000, and that is all. The President of the United States has talked about saving by this bill $238,-000,000. The Finance Committee had the Secretary of the Treasury sit in with them. He said, "When you talk about balancing the Budget, you will have to save $231,000,000." Whenever we put in an exemption we might as well be frank enough to say that instead of saving through this reduction in salaries $128,000,000, we are going to save only $30,-000,000." The Finance Committee will then have to be called in session again. If we are not going to reduce expenditures, then we have to increase our revenues in some way. It means more taxes if the Budget is to be balanced.

If we do not take it off here the Finance Committee is going to have to raise more by taxation or else when the other appropriation bills come up we have got to say there must be a reduction not of 10 per cent but of 15 or 20 per cent, and that means dismissal of employees. If we do not make a reduction of some sort, postal employees must be dismissed, Government employees of Washington must be turned out on the streets. When they are turned out they will come to your office and mine and ask for assistance. They will ask that some other man or woman be dismissed. Remember, if you pass this bill, you may save them, because if you do this they can be kept in the service of the Government, even if they do get a 10 per cent cut.

We get many letters and telegrams to-day. Everybody is in favor of economy provided you do not reduce his salary or reduce the appropriation for some activity in which he is interested.

I do not quarrel with those people. That is human nature. But I have heard from many who patriotically say they recognize there must be some reduction in their salaries. My observation of employees of the Government in Washington is that the great majority of them are patriotic public servants who work overtime when necessary and never complain. There may be a few, and there always are, who try to reach the elevator before 4.30; but the vast majority of them are faithful workers. I ask the Members of the Senate to remember, when we receive protests from employees, that after all we never hear from more than 5 per cent of the people of our respective States. The 95 per cent we will never hear from. They rely upon us to consider their interests. They to-day can not pay the taxes levied upon them and they are asking for relief and rely upon us to try to bring about a reduction of Government expenditures in a fair and impartial manner.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I notice on page 46 of the bill the Economy Committee has provided an exemption for the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. I am wondering why that is done in view of the fact that many of the enlisted personnel receive salaries as high as $2,200 a year?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think they receive that much. The theory upon which that exemption is based, and it is the only exemption in the compensation provision, is that a man in the Marine Corps or the Army and the Navy is there under enlistment. He can not resign. If I am in the Government service and want to get out, I can resign if I do not like the 10 per cent cut. But if I am in the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps and leave, they can put me in jail.

Mr. CONNALLY. None of them will leave with the salaries they are drawing as high as $2,200, and in addition to that getting allowances for quarters.

Mr. BYRNES. That exemption was included at the request of the President of the United States and for reasons which appealed to us as justifying the exemption.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] with a great deal of interest. I must confess a very distinct disappointment in the report of the Economy Committee. I think the bill is but a delusion and a snare. I think it is a sham.

The hour has come which I have expected ever since I have been here, which has been only a brief time. I believe every vote I have cast and every word I have said would indicate that I am in favor of economy. I have felt the time would come when we would play the ostrich act by hiding our head in the sand, cutting salaries because the public thinks all the money which is expended goes for salaries, and that if we could apply our economy plan to the smallsalaried Federal employees, then we could go back home and say, "You know we have done the very best we could. Didn't we cut our own salaries?" And then we fool ourselves into trying to believe that our constituency would be satisfied. We are satisfied to take $120,000,000 away from the employees of the Government, while horse leeches' daughters gnaw at the very vitals of the Republic. When it comes to economy we will never bring it about by reduction of small salaries.

I think that I shall probably vote for a reduction in salaries above $3,000. When I cast that vote I shall do it, knowing that I am casting a vote I ought not to cast. There ought to be no reduction in salaries, because the salaries are not too high except in a few instances, where some men and women are working for the Government probably receive more than they are entitled to get.

I shall vote to cut my own salary, and when I do it I may make it necessary to go back home and go to work to make a living, because there is no Senator, unless he has an outside income of some nature, who can more than live on what is paid him, and every Senator knows it. If it be the desire of the people of the United States and of those who make up the Congress that the Senate shall only be made up of rich men who do not have to depend upon their salaries, I shall say well and good, although I may believe that it is not for the best interests of the Nation.

I have seen many men come out of the Senate after having served a number of years. I knew one of the most distinguished Senators that my State ever sent to this body who was buried by charity and whose grave is now unmarked. I know another distinguished Senator who had a long service in the House and in the Senate of the United States and his grave is also unmarked.

I have seen many men come from the Senate or the House of Representatives after long service and they have become derelicts, floating about, depending upon their relatives and friends to support them. Yet there are men in the Senate of the United States to-day who say that "I think only of my election to this body next time, and I believe that it is necessary to cut salaries because I will be a good fellow with my constituents when I go back home." Let me tell those Senators what their constituents think about it. They will think that you are not competent to represent them if you do not know any better than to believe that you can deceive them by such a fallacy as that.

But, as I said, I shall vote to make all of the Members of Congress dollar-a-year men, if that be their desire. I have no objection. I do not have to stay in the United States Senate. In fact, I never had any great desire to be here, and I have much less desire to be here now than I did before I came. [Laughter.]

Let me call attention to this reduction in salaries. Remember always that it is made for one purpose, so we can go back home and tell our people what a great thing we have done because we have reduced salaries. We are proposing to take from Government employees, the poorly paid Government employees who have always been poorly paid, $121,000,000, so we can give a dollar each to the people of the United States. That is what we are going to do.

It is said by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] that if we take $300 from a man that it is not going to hurt him much. It may mean that his boy or his girl will have to stay home from school. It may mean that he will be unable to purchase books and clothing to keep his children in school. It may mean that he will be unable to make the payment on his little home. It may mean that he will be unable to contribute to the support of an indigent father and mother or brother and sister. It may mean infinitely more than it appears to some to whom money does not seem to mean very much.

But beyond all that, fellow Members of the Senate, let me say that we ought to approach this question of economy with intelligence and with good sense. I believe, and I said on the floor of the Senate some months ago, that there should have been a reduction of $1,000,000,000 this year and I believe it, but I do not believe that we should leave the "pork barrel" untouched at the expense of Federal employees who have been giving their lives to the work which they have qualified themselves to perform. It is not fair.

It has been said, and I heard it said by a very distinguished Senator, that we can afford to reduce salaries because the cost of living is so much less than it has been heretofore. That is not true. Let us see whether it is true or not. Have your interest charges been reduced any? Not a cent; but increased, if anything. Have your insurance premiums, life and fire, been reduced any? Indeed, they have not. Have the expenses of sending your boys and girls to school been reduced? Not at all. Have the payments on your mortgage on your home been reduced any? Not a cent. Has your rent been reduced any? Not a cent. The only reduction that there has been, so far as I recall at this time, is that food and clothing have been reduced. What part of the Budget of the average family receiving $3,000 a year does the food and clothing amount to? It amounts to about 20 per cent. If that item has been reduced by 20 per cent, as some Senators have said, then the total reduction in living costs has been only 4 per cent. So that claim falls to the ground.

Then I heard another distinguished Senator say not so long ago on the floor of the Senate that if we cut salaries the psychological effect it will have throughout the country will be wonderful. I thought at the time, although I did not say it, that it appears to me the trouble with this Government and its operations to-day is that we have been running it by psychology for the last year or two instead of by common sense. Let us not try any further to run the Government by psychology.

I have this idea about it. I am assuming that the bill is going to pass, and that nothing I can say and nothing any other Senator can say will prevent the passage of the bill. I probably shall vote for it in some form, boldly admitting that I am doing that which is unjustified when I cast the vote; but if we should exempt those employees receiving salaries below $2,000 a year, as suggested, I think, by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], that would reduce the amount of savings by $40,000,000; that is all. I have the figures here, and I want to give them to the Senate because we have had so much difficulty in finding out from the committee just what it was all about.

In the case of salaries of $1,000 and less the reduction in the estimated saving would be $4,330,000; on salaries between $1,000 and $2,000 the reduction would be $36,500,000, or a total of $40,000,000 if we shall exempt those employees receiving salaries below $2,000.

But it is said, "Where are we going to make it up?" It is claimed that we can not afford to fail in the passage of this legislation, because it is said, "Look what happened when the House refused to pass a similar bill!"

I am going back to just a little plain common sense. The reason this question has been so difficult is because we have been going at it in the wrong way. As I said some weeks ago, I do not believe much in the reduction of salaries, as Senators will see, but I do believe that there are many employees on the pay rolls of the Government in the different departments and bureaus who should be eliminated; some of them because they are inefficient, some of them because the services which they are rendering can be dispensed with, some of them, probably, for one reason and some for another. Suppose we cut out this $40,000,000 by exempting those employees receiving salaries of $2,000 and less, it is asked what are we going to do about it; where are we going to make it up? I will tell the Senate what we ought to do about the whole thing. My candid judg-ment is that we should throw this whole proposition into the wastebasket and then we could make it up in this way: If we reduce the appropriations for the departments by $40,000,000, considering that item alone, then what will happen? The heads of the bureaus and departments will be compelled to make reductions. How are they going to make them? I assume these officials are honest, I believe they are honest American citizens, who desire to give the best government that it is within their power to give. They will go through the departments and will eliminate those employees whom they can best spare and who are least necessary. I have no doubt that in the departments there are men who have toiled throughout the years faithfully and efficiently; they need every cent they can earn; but there are others who have shirked at every opportunity, who probably do not need the money that they receive from the Government. I take it for granted that the heads of the departments will eliminate those whom it will hurt the least.

When they have done that they will have eliminated $40,-000,000 in salaries, because it is our duty to cut the cloth; it is our duty to say how much the departments shall have, and it is the duty of the heads of the departments to use, to the best advantage, that which we give them. It is no business of ours to say that we are going to cut the salaries in the departments. We should furnish the money that we think the departments ought to have and allow the heads of the departments to distribute the money in a way that will bring about the most efficiency in service.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I was very much interested in the figures given by the Senator, but I did not quite retain them in my mind. Is it correct that if we were to cut 10 per cent the salaries below $1,000 the saving would be $4,000,000?

Mr. LOGAN. It would be $4,330,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Can the Senator let me have the figures as to salaries below $1,500?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not have those figures; I have the figures as to salaries between $1,000 and $2,000.

Mr. COPELAND. How much would the saving be in that bracket?

Mr. LOGAN. It would be $36,500,000, and, adding that to those below a thousand dollars, the saving would be $40.830.000.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has not the figures as to salaries of $1,500.

Mr. LOGAN. As to those receiving $1,500, I have the data, but have not made the computation.

Mr. BRATTON. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I have those figures.

Mr. LOGAN. I will be glad if the Senator from New Mexico will furnish them to the Senator from New York.

Mr. BRATTON. Employees drawing salaries up to $1,500 receive a total of $127,557,853, 10 per cent of which would be $12,755,785.

Mr. COPELAND. That is, if the salaries of employees were exempt up to $1,500, the loss in the estimated savings would be $12,000,000?

Mr. BRATTON. It would be $12,755,785.

Mr. COPELAND. Then if we exempt salaries up to $2,000, how much would the loss in the estimated savings be?

Mr. LOGAN. If we exempt all employees receiving salaries up to $2,000, the loss would be $40,830,000.

Mr. COPELAND. How much would it be if the exemption were applied to those receiving salaries of $2,500?

Mr. LOGAN. If the exemption should be made as to employees receiving salaries up to $2,500, that would add, I estimate, about $26,000,000 more. I do not have from that up.

If an exemption were made as to salaries up to $3,000, it will add to the loss by $57,300,000; so that if we exempted all salaries below $3,000, the loss in round numbers would be about $100,000,000.

Mr. BRATTON. If we should exempt those up to $2,500, the loss would be $82,000,000 plus.

Mr. COPELAND. If we should exempt salaries up to $2,000, how much would the loss be?

Mr. BRATTON. According to my figures, the loss would then be $38,690,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Does that mean if the employee were receiving $3,000, that $2,000 of his salary would be exempt?

Mr. LOGAN. I have not so figured it. I have figured that if there should be provided an exemption up to $2,000, then as to everyone receiving a salary over $2,000 the 10 per cent reduction would apply to the entire salary.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, let me say a word further, and then I shall have concluded. We have heard a great deal about the furlough plan. This bill contains a provision that that plan may be put into effect if necessary. If we should reduce the amount that we expect to save by cutting salaries by $40,000,000 or $90,000,000 or $100,000,000, whatever the sum might be, and cut the appropriations for the departments an equal amount, then is it not perfectly apparent that it would not be necessary to discharge anyone if the department heads did not desire to do so, because they could put into effect the furlough plan just as it is proposed by the pending bill to be authorized?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. It was the purpose of the committee to make a cut in salaries of $121,000,000, and then to reduce the several appropriation bills accordingly, so that no employee would have to be furloughed or dismissed permanently. The Senator will recall that as to many items in each appropriation bill-and, of course, the number is multiplied by the number of appropriation bills with which we deal-the appropriation provided is in part for salaries and in part for other purposes. We feared that, with the 10 per cent cut, we might fail to appropriate sufficient money to continue the pay roll, so if that should develop it would be necessary to dismiss some employees permanently, but by the furlough plan put into the bill, surrounding it with the best safeguards we could devise, it was intended to obviate dismissing even a small number of employees permanently. If that condition should arise through some miscalculation or oversight on the part of the Congress in failing to appropriate sufficient money to continue all the employees uninterruptedly at the 90 per cent basis-if I may so express it-we intended that the furlough plan should be brought into operation and the department head could say to a limited number of those drawing higher salaries, "I will let you go for 30 days and at the end of that period your job will be waiting for you."

Now, may I say to the Senator from Kentucky, that that was the system which we had in mind. It is the system we sought to create by the 10 per cent reduction and the furlough plan with the safeguards written into it.

Mr. LOGAN. It was the President's recommendation that the furlough plan should be the sole plan, as I recall. Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. If we should make these exemptions, and | 732,460 employees being reduced 10 per cent and having that should reduce the proposed saving a certain number of million dollars, then, if we deduct an equal amount from the appropriation, the furlough plan which has been provided could be put into operation just the same as under the illustration which the Senator gave.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator mean the general furlough plan?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I mean the furlough plan. The Senator stated that if the appropriation should be reduced and the departments should not have enough money, they could put the furlough plan into effect. Now, if we made a less appropriation, the furlough plan could be put into operation, and it would not be absolutely necessary to discharge any employees unless it should be some that ought to be discharged.

Mr. BRATTON. If the appropriation were reduced and less money were provided, there would have to be more furloughs.

Mr. LOGAN. That is right.

Mr. BRATTON. That is the whole thing.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I meant.

Mr. BRATTON. So that as the appropriations are reduced the use of the furlough plan will be increased, with the result that we will have more men and more women on

Let me say to the Senator that we thought a flat reduction was the most equitable plan after all. It does not subject a superior in a department to the temptation of partiality, or partisanship, on the one hand and discrimination on the other. It relieves every employee of any anxiety along that line. He knows that he is not subject to partisanship or discrimination on the part of some superior; he has the absolute assurance that throughout the year he is going to draw his salary, minus 10 per cent, and he can cut his cloth accordingly; he can budget his household accordingly. I do not approve of the furlough plan, and the committee was unanimously of the same view. It is filled with fallacies; it is filled with elements certain to produce uncertainty and doubt in the minds of the employees. I think, Mr. President, that the average employee had rather have the definite assurance that he is going to receive his salary, less 10 per cent, than to be subjected to abuse or to personal likes and dislikes in a department. However, I shall not trespass upon the Senator's time.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree fully with what the Senator has said: I do not like the furlough plan, but I do like the elimination plan. I believe that the heads of departments and the heads of bureaus are much better qualified to eliminate employees whom they have to get rid of because they do not have the money with which to pay them than the Senate is to determine what those department heads should do. I still adhere to the statement I have heretofore made that there is not a department of the Government that can not eliminate one-quarter of its employees and still operate more efficiently than at the present time.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield. Mr. BRATTON. If I were not so devoted to the Senator I would express the hope that he might have the job at some time of overhauling the whole subject matter and deciding what employees should be discharged and from what departments, and so forth. I, too, thought that was a pretty simple matter until I undertook the job and devoted three weeks day and night to it. The truth is that we now have a government that is too big and too broad and too complicated; and it has grown in every direction. It is a bureaucracy, and there are commissions everywhere.

Mr. LOGAN. That is right.

Mr. BRATTON. It is an accumulation that has grown through the years, and perhaps we are all to blame for it, but it is a condition that now confronts us. If we were to undertake a comprehensive program of consolidating and abolishing departments and suspending bureaus and eliminating activities, the result would be that instead of all the perhaps a living wage during this period of stress we would have scores of thousands of them without any income, with outstanding obligations incurred upon the strength of their employment, with homes mortgaged, with notes in the banks. and with other kinds of indebtedness. They would be permanently off the Government pay roll.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true of the private employee today, is it not?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Why should the Federal employee be placed on any higher basis than the railroad employee or the . factory worker? Should we, at the expense of the people, make them more secure in their jobs than others?

Mr. BRATTON. Not at all; and I express the belief that Government activities must be retrenched. We will have to curtail

In the period from 1915 to 1930 the Government expanded just as families did, industries did, and all of us did. Times were good; we made money easily, and we spent it freely. The Government appropriated money by the millions without any hesitation, and we created bureaus and commissions right and left, and the Government did just what individuals and industries were doing.

Now, however, we have a different situation. The Government will have to retrace some of those steps. We will have to curtail. We will have to retrench. We will have to reduce, and I believe it is a process which is going to cover several years. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, however, that the process should not be so sudden that literally thousands be dismissed immediately without notice. It should not be by such a leap and bound, so severe that thousands and thousands of people will be thrown out of employment immediately, with no notice. That was what the committee thought; so we permitted the provision to remain in the bill authorizing the President to consolidate and merge and coordinate activities.

Mr. LOGAN. A mighty bad provision, too, as it is written in the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps it is, but that can not be done by committee in a day, nor a week, nor two weeks.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir.

Mr. BRATTON. And I dare say that the President will find it necessary to give the matter careful consideration. covering many weeks. But with a fair and reasonable administration of that provision Government activities can be reduced and should be reduced, and I express the hope that through an effective administration of that provision much of our expansion in Government may be eliminated. and much retrenchment achieved.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is absolutely right in the statement that we have too many people employed in the different departments. They are in each other's way. A number of them ought to be eliminated. I would rather eliminate useless and ineffective employees on the pay roll than to reduce some of the others, especially those of the lower salaries.

It has been stated, and I think the statement is well founded, that we have, for instance, 150 bureaus in the Government, and at least 50 of them are without constitutional authority. Why not eliminate some of these bureaus? Why not eliminate some of this surplus number of people that are found about the different departments and different bureaus and pay those that we need sufficient compensation?

I do not think the salary of the ordinary Government employee is too high at all. It is no more than he needs for his living. He must make reductions, and perhaps Government employees are situated so that they ought to be called upon in this emergency to accept for the time being, at least, a reduction; but the fault lies very largely in what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] has been saying, that we have an oversupply of employees in the different departments and we have an oversupply of bureaus and commissions. We have been setting up commission after commission at enormous Government expense. We began | that some years ago. We have been continuing it. That field, I think, might well be looked into.

I have before me, as I presume all Senators have on their desks, or at any rate in their offices, a table which shows that a cut of 10 per cent in annual salaries of civilian Federal employees below $1,000 would save $4,330,902; below $2,500 it would save $82,090,505; below $3,000 it would save $92.574.817; and below $5,000 it would save $102,687,787. A 10 per cent cut would mean that saving.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator. Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LOGAN. I do.

Mr. GLASS. We are discussing this problem from the standpoint of humaneness. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky expresses the belief that we could dispense with one-fourth of all the employees of the Government of the United States and still conduct the Government in a more efficient way, and I agree with him. If, however, we are to consider this problem from the standpoint of humaneness, I should like to inquire which would be the more humane, to discharge practically 200,000 Federal employees right offhand or to make a reduction of 10 per cent in the salaries of all of them?

Mr. LOGAN. The answer is obvious if we should consider the matter from a standpoint of humaneness or humanity. I am not considering it from that standpoint. Neither do I believe that we ought to hasten to discharge a great number of employees. I do think that if we would apply just a little old-fashioned common sense to the whole problem and not be carried away by hysteria and by the mob spirit which is aroused throughout the country from one end to the other we would find a way to solve the problem.

I will tell you what I would do if I had the matter in charge. I would not cut the salaries of any of these smallsalaried employees. I think it is wrong. I do not think it is justified. I think it means that those who are most efficient, as soon as business is a little better-if it ever is-will hasten into private industry, and the Government will lose its best employees; so eventually we will have the Government run by inefficient employees, and we probably have some of them in the legislative branch, which is sufficient, without getting more of them in the executive branch. I am one of them, because I do not know what we ought to do. I am just doing the best I can; but here is my idea about it, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Virginia:

If Congress would do that which it ought to do, it would appoint or create or bring into existence in some way a committee, vesting it with full power to find out what the facts are, appropriate $1,000,000 if necessary, and authorize that committee to select the best experts it can get in the country to find out what bureaus may be eliminated and what positions in the bureaus may be eliminated, so that when we attempt economy we will have somewhere to go to secure information which we know is reliable. Instead of trying to cut salaries now, or to eliminate one-fourth of the employees, which I have no doubt can be done, I think we should give somebody authority-not the President; the President does not have any time to do things of that kindwe should give somebody authority to employ the necessary expert assistants, so that in a few months, when we meet again, he can bring their report in here and place it before us and say, "Here are the facts. You ought to eliminate some of these bureaus and departments, and some of the employees that are unnecessary."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the distinguished Senator again, we have not the time to do that. We must balance the Budget by the 1st of July. Had we the time to do it, suppose we should set up a joint congressional committee with instructions to do that. Talk about existing hysteria! That would create more anxiety and distress and hysteria among the 700,000 employees of the Government than anything else that I can conceive of. Every man and woman would be wondering whether he or she was to lose his or her job.

Mr. LOGAN. And, to be on the safe side, he or she probably would be making arrangements before we met in December to find a job somewhere else.

Mr. GLASS. But the trouble is that they can not make arrangements to find a job somewhere else.

Mr. LOGAN. They can not do it now.

Mr. GLASS. No. Mr. LOGAN. But I do not see why we should have one group in the United States that should be supported by all the people of the United States when many of the others are starving. That is not fair.

Mr. GLASS. I agree with the Senator as to that; but this is an imminent matter that we must determine now. It is not something that we may deliberate about.

Mr. LOGAN. Why can we not deliberate about it? Mr. GLASS. I agree with the Senator that we ought to exercise common sense, but I assert that we have not any common sense left; and we have not done a sound economic thing since Congress convened last December.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator almost wholly in what he says; but we talk about balancing the Budget here. Of course, that has become a hysteria. I suppose everyone knows that we have not balanced the Budget, and that we are not going to balance the Budget.

Mr. GLASS. Everyone has not known that, because the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] insists that we have balanced the Budget.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand; but I can not forget that Mr. Mellon-probably the most distinguished financier America has ever produced, or, at least, a good many people said that about him-two years ago gave out a statement, which he put in writing, signing his name to it, saying that at the end of the fiscal year 1931, on June 30, there would be a deficit in the Treasury of $180,000,000, and at the end of the fiscal year on June 30, 1932, there would be a surplus of $30,000,000, or a net deficit for the two years of $150,000,000. He had the laws before him, he had the previous records before him, he had all the facts, and that was his judgment. Instead of that, we had a deficit of $903,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year 1931, and we will have a deficit of more than $3,000,000,000 by the last of this month, or at least that much. So, Mr. Mellon himself, as great as he is, missed it in his estimate nearly $4,000,000,000.

When somebody says to me that we are going to raise a billion dollars by this tax bill we passed, and that is the estimate of Mr. Mills, I do not believe he is a greater man than Mr. Mellon. Of course, we are not going to raise anything like that, and every Senator here knows it; but we are governing the country by psychology, as one of my good senatorial friends said. The psychology is fine to send out the announcement to all the world that we have balanced the Budget; but when the 30th of June, 1933, comes around we will find out that we must do that which some of us thought we ought to do this time. We are going to have to go to some species of sales tax, because I do not know where else we are going to get any money.

"Well, now," they say, "this economy bill must bring about a reduction of $238,000,000." It is not going to do it. In the first place, the Senate is not going to vote to cut $121,000,000 off the small salaries. When we get to the large salaries we can not save anything. I looked at the report of the committee myself. They made a permanent reduction in the big salaries, those above $10,000, and what did they get? Ninety-seven thousand dollars. That is all they could find. That means that we relieve a thousand men of 1 cent in comparison with the total burden of taxation. If we get a thousand men of one group, we can say to them, "Boys, we have passed a wonderful law reducing salaries. On this particular group we have reduced your burden 1 cent," and the thousand men would go away happy.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I am interested in what the Senator just said, and I agree with him entirely; but the other day I received a letter from the head of a large corporation suggesting to me that the thing we ought to do was to reduce the salaries of Members of the Senate and people working for | to vote to reduce every salary where a reduction is suggested. the Government and then adjourn. Yet the very corporation he was working for pays the president of that company, I will venture to say, four or five times as much as any Member of the Senate gets, and probably as much as the President of the United States of America gets.

The salaries of the employees of the United States are the smallest salaries of any business organization in the United

There is not a business organization in the United States to-day of any size that does not pay its president and other officers more than what the Government of the United States pays those who occupy similar positions in the Government.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator is treading on dangerous ground, if I may suggest it to him. The official to whom he refers may retort that he is worth more than the President of the United States or a Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but the condition of his company would not indicate that he had earned the salary he had been drawing, or had been worth anything.

Mr. BRATTON. Was the budget of that institution two and one-half billion dollars out of balance two weeks ago?

Mr. WHEELER. I think it was out of balance, and it would have been more out of balance if it were an institution as large as the United States of America.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, when it comes to cutting the salaries of Senators my position is simply this: I never had any money in my life, and I never expect to have any. I have been holding public office at intervals since I was 21 years of age. I probably have a record no one else can boast of, and I do not often boast of it; I have served the public to the best of my ability, and it has been said, I expect, that I have received much money from the Public Treasury, but I have never held an office yet that I did not have to resign and go back to work to make a living and try to pay my debts, but I kept venturing into politics and holding office until my debts grew so that I think my creditors are going to have some difficulty before I ever pay them. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield. Mr. LEWIS. I am greatly interested in the declaration of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I knew his eminence on the bench and the high place he occupied at home. I was both curious at and affected by the assertion that he had the misfortune that attends so many. He painted a picture in which I could seem to see myself as in a looking glass, that of a person who was always a debtor, never a creditor, unable to pay his debts, and public office was responsible for the unhappy catastrophe.

Mr. LOGAN. I have learned from long experience that men can live without very much money, and by living long enough those men, whom I used to envy a little, who had money, have all come to join me on my platform, and for the first time in my life I am on an equality with them so far as money is concerned.

I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate further than to say this, that if we are going to pass this bill and reduce the salaries of the Members of Congress and others, of course I shall vote for it, until we get down to the smallsalaried employees, and then I will not vote for it. We ought to find some other way to balance the Budget. This effort to balance the Budget is important; the Budget ought to be balanced. But I doubt whether we should select the few hundred thousand Federal employees, poorly paid, hard worked, and make them contribute $120,000,000 toward balancing the Budget. They already are under the obligation to contribute to the retirement fund about 31/2 per cent of their salaries. We have already increased the income tax until it would take about 3 per cent. We have already heaped a good many burdens on them, and their salaries have always been small.

If we do what is suggested, we will satisfy our people back at home, because they are clamoring for us to reduce salaries. I know my folks down at home are. They want me

I can not do it unless I am convinced that the salary is not earned.

I shall join with others in bringing about such reduction as I think is fair, but I can not vote to take away from the families of those who work for the Government the actual necessities of life. I can not vote for a bill that will probably make them lose their homes. I can not vote for a bill that will force them to keep their children out of school. I can not vote for a bill which I know will bring great hardship on them. If it would do any good, if it were necessary to save the country, if the amount were so vast as that it would be of great help in this great economy plan, I would be willing to say that we would sacrifice them, that we would throw them before the Juggernaut, that we would offer them upon the altar of sacrifice, and say it was necessary to save the country. But the little that we would save by reason of this $100,000,000 reduction, when we need several billion dollars, is so small that I am unwilling to have it on my mind and conscience that I helped to bring disaster to those people, when it was not necessary in order to help the country.

I adhere to what I said before, that the useless employees and the useless bureaus ought to be eliminated; and if I remain in the Senate, which I may not do, because my salary may be cut too much, as long as I am here, I shall continue to insist that there should be a reorganization of the Government, that useless bureaus and departments and boards and commissions should be abolished; and if that necessarily causes public employees to be separated from their jobs, it can not be helped. But let us not do this cruel thing when it is unnecessary, and when it will not help anvone.

Mr. DICKINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD-GENERAL HINES

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to make a correction of the RECORD. Yesterday I stated that General Hines receives retired pay amounting to something like $4,000 a year. I knew that General Hines had been in the Army more than 20 years, and I assumed, without asking him, that he drew the retired pay due to his rank. I find that he receives no retired pay at all.

As a matter of fact, General Hines, who is one of the most efficient officers of the Government, and has taken over the duties of the combined services formerly of the Pension Bureau, the Veterans' Bureau, and the Soldiers' Homes, and has saved the Government several million dollars by his administrative measures, receives a salary at the present time of $12,000, and does not get any retired pay. I regret to say that under this bill his salary of $12,000 is reduced to $10,000, and on that he will get a cut of 10 per cent, making the salary $9,000, or a total cut of 25 per cent. He does not draw any retired pay.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I am glad to know the Senator from Connecticut has made this correction. I apprehend that the committee in this case acted upon the supposition that the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut yesterday represented the facts, and that therefore the committee included the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in a classification of-I will not say utterly worthless commissioners and board members, but in a classification with commissioners and board members whose positions might well be abolished permanently. I give notice that while I am going along with the committee as a general proposition, perhaps in nearly every particular, I am going to offer an amendment to the section of the bill to which the Senator has referred eliminating what I conceive to be an injustice to perhaps the most responsible official of the Federal Government

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say in this connection that actually the committee did treat the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs a little better than the House did, because the House reduced his salary to $10,000 and then put an 11 per cent cut on that. I agree entirely with what the Senator said about the injustice of reducing his salary by 25 per cent.

Mr. GLASS. If there is anyone in the Federal employment, from the President and the Supreme Court down, who earns his pay it is the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. He has saved the Government millions upon millions of dollars and has had to endure annoyances that no other Federal official has to endure.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in the presence of and in connection with the eminent Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. The Congressional Record contains a little persiflage which passed between us yesterday touching the national conventions, but there is an omission in the Record which I would like to have cleared up. Yesterday I stated to our learned colleague of the Senate, Senator Norris, that so far as I was concerned as to the Democratic National Convention it did not interest me to any great extent, certainly not to the extent where I thought I could either be an adornment to whatever arrangements they might have; nor did I hope to contribute anything that could be regarded as profitable, and added what I wish the Senator to understand, that our observations were in a humorous vein and aroused a flurry of laughter from the galleries. In this confusion on the floor the concluding observations were omitted in the report. I ended by saying, as I now say, that I agree with any other Senator who feels that public business calls us to remain in session. I agree that no demand of a mere political convention should call Senators away from a duty such as we have before us at this time, the providing for the great necessities now calling to us. Possibly what I insist on can best be described by the injunction of the Scripture, "That which thy hand finds to do, do it with all thy might."

RALPH E. WILLIAMSON

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on yesterday the House and the Senate passed identical bills, each being a copy of the other. The House bill is H. R., 4911 and the Senate bill is S. 2458. The House bill has reached this body and the Senate bill has gone to the House. In order to prevent complications I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill; and if that request is granted and the bill is passed, I shall then ask unanimous consent to have a request sent to the House to return the Senate bill for indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R 4911) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $565 to Ralph E. Williamson as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That before said claim is allowed and paid the Comptroller General of the United States shall make an investigation of said claim to determine the extent and amount of such loss and damage, and such claim shall be adjusted in amount not in excess of the amount set out herein and upon certificates issued to said claimant by the said Comptroller General of the United States.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of Senate bill 2458, and ask unanimous consent that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered and, without objection, the House will be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION ACT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before the Senator from Iowa proceeds, will he yield to me for a moment or two? A report has to-day been made by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I had hoped to ask that it be taken up. I believe it will take only a moment. If there is objection to it from any source I shall not insist on its consideration.

Mr. DICKINSON. If it does not take any time, I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill and explain it; and if there is any objection from any source, I shall then withdraw my request.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the bill should be read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it be read so we may know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill. The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 4780) to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made for crop planting or crop cultivation during the year 1932, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the first proviso in the second paragraph of section 2 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act is amended by inserting after the words "crop production" a comma and the words "crop planting, or crop cultivation."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, under the reconstruction act there was a provision for the loaning of $50,000,000 to farmers. This does not affect that appropriation in so far as increasing it is concerned. This situation has arisen. Under the ruling of the department—which may or may not be correct, but it is the ruling nevertheless—some have been deprived of the privilege of borrowing from this fund who would be included if the amendment to the act should be adopted.

There are certain growers of strawberries in some States who suffered an entire loss of their crops by reason of the freeze at the beginning of the year. The beginning of the cultivation of this crop is in July and August. It is necessary to buy fertilizer and to do all the work on the crop during the year 1932, but the strawberries are not actually picked until after January 1. The result is that under the ruling these farmers, who do all the work during this year except the picking of the strawberries, which is done the first part of next year, are deprived of securing a loan. It affects a very small number of growers, but it does affect them very vitally in certain sections of the country.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think it also applies to those crops which are sown in the fall and harvested the next winter, such as rye and wheat.

Mr. BLACK. I imagine it would. I gave strawberries merely as an illustration.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope that an amendment may be put in the bill. There is a section in our State where we raise wheat where there must be summer fallowing; in other words, the ground must be plowed this year for the planting of wheat for next year. If the Senator from Alabama will consent to add the words "and for summer fallowing," I would appreciate it very much.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, while that matter was not brought up in the committee, I think a fair construction of the amendment would include that because it is for cultivation

Mr. BLACK. That is our understanding. Mr. JONES. It is the Senator's understanding that it would include summer fallowing?

Mr. NORBECK. It uses the words "crop planting" or "crop cultivation."

Mr. JONES. Would there be objection to putting in the words "including summer fallowing"?

Mr. NORBECK. I can not speak for the committee, but there would be no objection so far as I am concerned. I want to say in all fairness that this came up rather suddenly. The Senator from Alabama urged it as an emergency measure on account of the situation existing with some of the berry growers down in his section, who had been disqualified because the crop was not entirely harvested within the calendar year, but is barred for that reason. We have not had a written opinion from the department on it, but it was thought to be rather a minor matter, and the committee authorized a favorable report on the bill in the belief that it was not very wide in its application.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall not object at this time to the consideration of the matter, but I want to serve notice now that I think the next relief bill we pass ought to apply to the whole country. This business of doling out relief to different crops, as we are doing, is going to ruin the Government if we do not stop it. Any separate relief bills hereafter will meet with my opposition.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I do not think there was any dissent in the committee to the proposion that the existing law was intended to include these very conditions, but that the decision of the department that production contemplated only those crops which were produced and harvested in the current year was a rather remarkable interpretation of the law. What is proposed is what was intended by the original law and what the committee unanimously insisted is a proper interpretation of existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understood the matter was presented to the Banking and Currency Committee, discussed there, and that there was no serious objection to it.

Mr. BLACK. There was no opposition at all. It was unanimously agreed that that was the original intention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was, on page 2, before the period and after the word cultivation," to insert "including summer fallowing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made for crop planting or crop cultivation, including summer fallowing, during the year 1932."

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have to-day received a large number—the word "large" hardly describes it—a vast number of telegrams, not only from Arizona but from other States as well, in relation to the so-called economy bill. It is impossible for my office force to reply to these telegrams. I do not like to reply "collect." I doubt the propriety at this time of sending replies at Government expense. I ask leave, therefore, to print in the RECORD a few of the telegrams from my own State, and I hope those of my constituents and others throughout the country who read the RECORD, as I am sure every citizen reads it daily, will thus understand that no offense or discourtesy is implied by my failure to reply to their telegrams. This is the only way I can make known to the country the number of telegrams I am receiving with reference to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington:

That you oppose to utmost decrease in Government employees' salary, cut in annual leave, abolishment of Personnel Classification Board, and compulsory retirement is our earnest request. All of this, we feel, inimical to best interest of the Government as well as that of employees. Thirty days' leave necessary to efficiency and health. No appreciable decrease in living expenses in this locality at least. Kindly advise by wire what you feel you can do. SAN CARLOS LOCAL FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' UNION.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the personnel pay roll of the Federal Government is about $1,315,000,000; the total expenditures of the Government are about four and onethird billion dollars. The item for pensions of veterans of the World War and other wars obligates the Government to the extent of about a billion dollars. The two controversial items involved in this bill, therefore, have reference to salaries paid employees of the United States Government, on the one hand, and to the veterans' items, on the other, which will come up a little bit later in the consideration of the bill.

Objection is made on the ground that we are making reductions in the salaries of the lower paid employees. Luther C. Steward this morning sent to the desk of every Senator this statement:

It is apparent that no Senator wishes to cut the pay of employees in the lower salary ranges. The bulk of the saving must be secured by cuts in this group.

Therefore if we are not to include cuts in that group we might as well abandon our plan.

I have looked up the data with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. I do not know that I have tabulated the figures correctly, and if the Senator has any tabulation that does not correspond with the figures I shall present I shall be glad to have them, and I want permission to revise and correct the figures I have because I have made them hurriedly. I want, however, to suggest the difference between the type of amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska and that recommended by the committee.

In the range of salaries from $7,500 to $10,000 and up, there are 673 people involved; the amount paid them is a little over $6,000,000; the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska is that a 25 per cent reduction be made in such salaries; the savings which would thereby be effected would be $1,554,000 plus.

In the group receiving from $5,400 to $7,500, there are 2,770 employees; the total amount of their salaries is $16,-398,000; a 20 per cent cut in those salaries would amount to $3,279,000.

In the group from $4,000 to $5,400, there are 8,404 employees; the total amount of their salaries is $37,654,000, and a 15 per cent cut would amount to $5,648,000.

In the group receiving salaries from $2,500 to $4,000, there are 100,902 employees; the total amount of their salaries is $231,038,000, and a 10 per cent cut would amount to $23,038,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. While it increases the rate on salaries in certain groups, the entire salary does not bear the increased rate, but only that portion of it in excess of a certain amount. So there is the portion of such salaries between two amounts which bear one rate and the portion in excess another and different rate. Has the Senator taken that into account?

Mr. DICKINSON. No, I have not taken that into account; I do not have the information so that I can take it into account.

Mr. JONES. That is the character of the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wanted simply to suggest the total.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not arrive at the correct total.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I will not get the correct total, and that is why I said I wanted the privilege of revising and correcting my figures.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will reach a wrong result when he gets through because, as the Senator from Washington has said, he has started on a false basis.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am simply giving these figures to prove the point that, regardless of how much the rate of reduction is on the higher salaries, we can not thereby make up for the loss incident to the exemption of the lower

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not want to prove it by figures that are incorrect, does he?

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the Senator say that my figures are too high?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I say the Senator is miscalculating; he is basing his calculation on a false assumption. For instance, he is basing his calculation on the assumption that a salary, let us say of $10,000, is decreased by 25 per cent. That is not true under the amendment which has been offered. In the case of a salary of $4,000, the Senator is basing his calculation, as I understand his figures, on the theory that that salary is reduced 15 per cent; but that is not true. For instance, in the case of a salary of $4,000, $1,500 of it would be exempt; as to that portion of it there would be no reduction; on the next $1,000 the reduction would be 5 per cent, and on the next $1,500 the reduction would be 10 per cent.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then I suggest that what the Senator says proves the point I am trying to make. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would reduce the savings greatly beyond the figure I have suggested, which is a little less than $60,000,000. We would be sacrificing one-half of the savings under the economy program in the case of personnel if we were to adopt the theory of making greater reductions in the higher salary brackets and exempting salaries up to $1,500. In other words, the statement of Mr. Steward is correct that the bulk of the savings must be secured by the cuts in the lower-salaried group.

I believe it was Lincoln who said that the Lord loved the common people because he made so many of them. I think there is no question but that if we do not apply the proposed reduction to the group receiving the lowest salaries we are not going to secure any economy so far as Federal expenditures for services are concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, if we do that, if the Senator will permit me, we will add a good many to the class to which the Senator referred and of whom Lincoln spoke; we will have more poor than we had before.

Mr. DICKINSON. We are getting more poor all the time. Mr. NORRIS. And we are getting more money out of the poor all the time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Here is the situation as I see it: I do not believe the Federal Government can say, regardless of the reduction of wages and salaries in the various grades of employment all over the country there is not going to be a reduction in the salaries of the large number of persons now employed by the Federal Government. I think the Govern-

Mr. JONES. I rather think the Senator is misconstruing | ment is going to be subjected to an attack that will be very far-reaching and very unwholesome so far as the Government's interests are concerned unless we show a disposition to meet the situation that is now so acute in the country, and in order to do so, I believe we have got to share and share alike all along the line.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think he will meet that condition if he says to the country, "I have voted to reduce the salary of the clerk who is getting a thousand dollars a year by the same percentage that I have voted to reduce my own salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think that it is true that people all along the line obligate themselves to about the extent of the salary they are drawing and that per capita, there will be just as large a percentage in the larger salary brackets who are going to be embarrassed by the salary reduction as there will be in the lower brackets, for the reason, if you please, that those in the lower brackets are largely of two classes: A good many of them are younger people, who have not obligated themselves for the maintenance of homes; many of them have not reached out as others have in the matter of purchases; many of them are here attending school or college as well as earning salaries. I am a friend of those, but I want to say that the person who a while ago could live here in Washington on $120 a month can now live here for 10 per cent less than that under existing conditions so far as living expenses are concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite in sympathy with the desire of the Senate to reduce salaries; but does not the Senator think that when we reach down into the lower grades, say, salaries of a thousand dollars, we meet with another question than that of economy on the part of the Government? I refer to the question whether people who receive such low salaries can live in Washington on any less amount. So an economic problem enters into consideration, and that is the question of wholesome living.

It is true that we are not going to save nearly so much if we do not cut the lower salaries, but there are appropriations, such as those for the Army and Navy, where we can reduce expenses on a tremendous scale, and, in my judgment, there is where we have got to go if we are going to make any headway at all. I favor also making heavier cuts in the larger salaries.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not presume the Senator has given much consideration to the propaganda that is now going on all over the country to restore the 2,000 Army officers who were eliminated by the appropriation bill in the other House. The claim is being made that it is going to interfere with the national defense if we adopt that provision of the House bill.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have given a good deal of consideration to that propaganda, and I have answered it in my own mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless with his consent.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am seeking like the Senator to get information. I should like to ask this question: The only reason that has been given, so far as I know, by the representatives of the Economy Committee, of which the Senator is a member, for making the cut in the low salaries is that it is necessary in order to save the money. Now I want to ask the Senator if there is any other reason beside that?

Mr. DICKINSON There is no other reason, so far as I know, and I want to suggest that the necessity exists, and if we can not save money in that direction we might as well abandon the economy bill.

Mr. BORAH. No. Mr. President; I do not think that is

Mr. DICKINSON. The House committee went through these items; it considered the proposition; it went on the floor of the House with a bill providing a saving of $260,-

000,000, and it came out with a saving of $47,000,000. The | Senate committee has considered the situation all along the line, and has come here with a bill providing a saving of $238,000,000. It may be that we have neglected some opportunity of effecting savings that the Senator believes could be availed of, but any method of saving in order to be adopted has got to be of such a character that there can be an agreement on it. For instance, one person may say, "Let us reduce the Army"; on the other hand, there will be a great many who will say, "We can not reduce the Army; it is not safe to reduce the Army." Therefore, in working out an economy bill we reach the point where we have to have a meeting of minds or at least a meeting of a sufficient number of minds so that there can be secured some unity of action.

I believe that if every Member of this body were to write an economy measure, we would have represented all phases of the differing views and opinions, and that there would not be many Senators who would agree upon very many items that ought to be included in such a bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the committee, for I think the committee has done a splendid work. I may not agree with it in detail, but it has shown courage and a willingness to meet the issue. But if it be said that we can not economize and can not reduce the expenditures of the Government unless we make a reduction in salaries of $1,000 and less, and there is nowhere else we can save, of course, we might just as well abandon the effort, because I do not believe that the Government is going to ask people to work for less than $1,000 a year.

Mr. DICKINSON. The number of people who are working for a sum below a thousand dollars a year is considerable. In this period of unemployment as we go down the scale we find that in one of our leading cities it is possible to obtain stenographers to work for $65 a month, while in the Government service I think the pay in the lowest grade is $1,440 per year. We find that situation to exist all along the line. Domestic servants who in Iowa used to get $10 a week now get three and a half or four dollars a week, and are glad to have the positions. As we go down the scale we find that the competition is keener for the position; and even though it may be said that they can not maintain themselves on these low-grade salaries, it is true that those people are occupying positions that are desired and are wanted, and would be occupied by hundreds of other people if they had the opportunity.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator says is true, of course, about reductions outside of Washington; but it seems to me we can not close our eyes to the fact that a very large percentage of these people who are drawing salaries of from ten to twelve hundred dollars a year, and some of them less, live and must live in Washington, and that the cost of living in Washington is higher than at almost any other place on earth. It may be that when we fix a reduction according to the cost of living in Washington we will not be doing justice to the country in some other locality, because the cost of living there is not so great; but we must fix it in accordance with the cost of living at the most expensive place, for otherwise it would be an impossibility to conduct the Government in Washington.

I inquired of another member of the committee whether the committee had taken into consideration the question of rents. He said it had not. I do not know that they would have had any jurisdiction. It seems to me that if they had made an investigation they probably could have given us some very important information on rents. I think, from what little investigation I have been able to make, that while rents on an average in the city of Washington may have decreased to some extent, they have not come anywhere near decreasing at the same rate as rents have decreased in practically every other section of the country about which I have been able to get any information. So that the great bulk of these people have to meet these conditions that still exist, and they have to live here in order to do the work; and it seems to me that it is unreasonable to take a hundred dollars off the salary of a $1,000 clerk.

The Senator said a while ago that many of these people are young. That is true. Many of them, he said, are going to school. That is true; some of them are. The great bulk of them, however, are not. A large percentage of them are paying for homes on the installment plan. There are some, perhaps, that do not deserve the consideration that others do; but we have to deal with them as a class, and it seems to me that in dealing with them we ought to give consideration to the most meritorious of the class.

An employee of the Senate who, if he is listening, is within the sound of my voice now, told me to-day of what happened in his family. I happen to know him very well. I know his wife very well. They are fine people. His wife is one of the school-teachers of the city of Washington, a finely educated woman, who has spent a good deal of her earnings in preparing herself for her work. Just recently, within the last three months, they bought a home. They are obligated for it. They are both drawing salaries, neither one of them very large. I have a great deal of consideration for that class of people, and there are thousands and thousands in that class.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator now?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, the large percentage of our employees who are drawing under $1,000 do not come within the class suggested. There has also been a great reduction in rents in the lower type of rental property. The rents that are higher in Washington are the rents of what might be called the upper-class type of tenants. On top of that, the District of Columbia Committee is now investigating that very question under the leadership of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. We did not think we had any jurisdiction of that matter, and therefore we did not think we should go into it.

The next suggestion is this: Rents are going down in other sections of the country. Out of the 700,000 employees on the Government pay roll, only 10 per cent live in the District of Columbia. Therefore we ought not to hold up 10 per cent and say, "This is the group that has to be protected," while, as a matter of fact, they can get lower rents in practically every other city in the United States. There are some 70,000 employees in the District of Columbia in the Federal service. There are over 700,000 employees in the Federal service the United States over. Therefore, are we going to let the 10 per cent here be the criterion on which we are going to establish this policy all over the country? I want to say to you that out in the country, over the United States, where there are post-office clerks and post-office employees and different types of Federal services, there is no question but that those sections are subject to the depression that exists all over the country, and that they have the benefit of a 10 per cent reduction in practically every line of expenditure they have to make.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I appreciate the force of the Senator's argument, and I likewise appreciate the effect upon the people living in the various farm sections and how they feel toward the Government employees who are drawing down higher salaries and have not had their salaries reduced; but I want to ask the Senator this question:

What is the most important thing, in his opinion? Is it to deflate further in this country, or should we try to bring up the commodity price level for farm products?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, there is no question but that we ought to inflate and bring up farm prices, if we can; but we must meet the situation that is facing us. We can not turn around and say that because another question is confronting us therefore we ought to ignore this thing. We must carry on in the meantime. I should like to see farm prices advanced; there is no question about that; but, on the other hand, I know that we must carry on until the time comes when farm prices do advance.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that if the statesmen who compose the body of this Congress had had the courage of their convictions, and if the man in the White House had had the courage to go ahead and do something to bring up the price of farm commodities by increasing the currency and otherwise, it could have been done, instead of resorting to this foolish policy of further deflating by reducing the compensation of Federal employees. I think it is foolish economy and absolutely a foolish economic policy

Mr. DICKINSON. That argument was used when we were trying to maintain the price of labor all over the United States, but the crisis became too keen. It was found that it could not be done. Therefore, we have to meet the situation as it confronts us now, and not as we should like to have it confront us. The fellow who thinks we can wait until we do something to-morrow, and thereby meet the crisis of to-day, is just one day late.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the cost of living has gone down as greatly as it has in Washington and Iowa and all the balance of the country, what excuse can we as Senators give, what excuse can the Senator himself give to the country and to his people for reducing his own salary only $1,000, while he is taking pretty nearly half of the salary of a good many of the lower-paid employees? If the man who is working for $1,000 can get along on $900, why can not the Senator get along on $5,000 instead of $10,000? [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me answer the Senator. I practiced law out in Iowa for 20 years. I had more money at the end of the year saved up in my bank than I have ever had since I went into public life; and to say that a Senator can live and meet the obligations that are imposed upon him at a very low salary is absolutely wrong. It can not be done. I live no differently now than I did in the earlier years, and I am living in the same house.

Mr. NORRIS. The same thing ought to apply to the clerk who is getting the thousand dollars. If the Senator applied to himself the same argument that he applies to the clerk, he never could defend this motion, in my judgment, to reduce his own salary only $1,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. The argument has been presented here. I am not going to be diverted on that particular phase of it. I do not believe that there is a feeling in this country that the men who carry the burdens that the members in public life carry are excessively overpaid. If it were just a matter of livelihood, that is a different thing.

Here is some of the sentiment that is coming from States like mine. I think every Senator is getting letters of this type. This is a letter from Robert R. Macbeth, an attorney at Keokuk, Iowa. I have known him for 30 years, and I am quoting from a part of his letter. He says:

It does seem to me, therefore, that I should appeal to you to use your influence to the fullest extent in supporting such measures as will reduce the cost of operation of the Federal Government, cut out needless bureaus and useless investigations and all that sort of stuff, and help to get down to an economic, reasonable, and sound basis. Unless something effective is done, and quickly done, along this line our people are going to revolt. Right out here in southeastern Iowa, supposedly staid and conservative, there is an undercurrent of distrust and revolt which is not only distressing but ominous. Reduction of the tax burden by reduction of the cost of government is one of the most potent barriers that may be interposed in the face of this avalanche.

We talk about reduction in Government expenditures. The Economy Committee has brought in a report. I am one of those who have voted against the 10 per cent reduction resolution on every appropriation bill that has come on the floor of the Senate; and I want to suggest to you that one of the reasons why I voted against those resolutions was because I thought they would force Federal employees out of their positions.

I noticed what the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] said about how he would abolish bureaus and how he would abolish commissions. Remember that when we abolish bureaus and abolish commissions we are dealing with the very personnel that we are dealing with here. The difference in the way we are dealing with them is that there they would have no salary and would be cut off from the Federal service, while here we are asking for a 10 per cent reduction for one year until we try to make some adjustment of the difficulties that are now facing us.

The next thing I want to suggest is simply this: If we can abolish bureaus, if we can make reductions, we had better take a year in which to do it; and whether it is done by taking away appropriations or whether it is done by Executive order or whether it is done by legislative repeal, we ought not to put these people out of a job completely at the present time. Therefore it seems to me that we are up against the proposition of either accepting a reduction of 10 per cent or putting the 10 per cent reduction on every appropriation bill; and if this economy bill is defeated, I expect to support the 10 per cent reduction from now on. Why? Because we must have these reductions.

I do not believe there is any way out of it. We have been struggling around here now for two or three weeks trying to find enough money to assure the continuance of the Government. It is an easy thing for a man to get up and say, "Why, of course, we can save a great deal of money if we will just put ourselves to the task"; but if you give him a pencil and a pad of paper and ask him to sit down and see where he is going to make the savings he will find that it is a very difficult task to do it.

Every bureau that has been created and is now in existence in this country was formed because some Members of the Senate and some Members of the House and some other people in the United States asked for the creation of that service, and used it for some benefit to themselves.

As a matter of fact, we find, when we come to consolidate bureaus that it is not an easy thing. I was amused at the suggestion that we ought to appoint a commission to make a thorough investigation of all the bureaus of the Government and see where consolidations could be made. We had a commission of that kind at one time. It spent two years on the task, and its report is getting moldy now. It has never been acted on by anyone, and it contains all the information we could possibly get if we reinvestigated the situation now.

As a matter of fact, reducing Federal services is going to be a slow, long-drawn-out process. We are not going to succeed in abolishing any particular bureau automatically and all at once. It is going to be a curtailment and a shrinking. The Government is just like an individual. Individuals thought a few years ago that they could ride in Cadillacs. Now they have found that their incomes are such that all they can afford is a Ford car or a Chevrolet, and we find that reduction is coming all along the line in personal services. Only last night I noticed in the paper that a million people in the United States who have heretofore been using automobiles are going to do without them the next year. That is one step forward, in my judgment, because it is the proper thing to curtail ourselves to meet the problems that confront us.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Many of us who have not had an opportunity to come intimately in contact with the problem have been preferring the philosophy of the so-called furlough plan, which apparently has been entirely dismissed by the special committee. Will the Senator, for our information, address himself, at least briefly, to the question as to why the furlough plan has had to be entirely abandoned and the straight cut substituted?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the furlough plan has many advantages which appeal to me, but the reason for the abandonment of that plan seems to be that there are a number of phases and a number of services in which the furlough plan would not operate successfully. The next thing is that it would work a disorganization of service. It would have to do with some one going on a furlough, and everyone would be looking for a furlough.

The next thing we find is the fact that there are a great many people who have bought homes, as the Senator from Nebraska has suggested, who could not go for a month without the pay check. They have their obligations, and therefore they want the pay checks distributed over the year. If we adopted the furlough plan, we would have to make a monthly reduction from the payroll in percentage which would be practically the same that we have here. The difference in the amount of the reduction, as I recall it, would be somewhere between $80,000,000 and $120,000,000. In other words, the furlough plan would not get the results, and, in the second place, there seemed to be even more objections to it than to the 10 per cent cut plan, if it can be applied.

The next point is this: The furlough plan applies to the low grade as well as the high grade. There is exactly the same argument against it that there is against the 10 per cent cut, because the persons getting only a thousand dollars or less simply can not get along through the year without having their pay coming in regularly once a month.

That brings me to another thing. There is no question but that every salary reduction involves hardship, and, in some cases, distress. I do not see how we can get away from that thought. But when I go into some of the other cities of the United States and find there men who were getting $20,000 and $25,000 a year now looking for anything that will give them even a meal ticket for the day, I want to say that I am convinced that the distress that we will force here is no way near as severe as the distress that is being forced on the outside by reason of the distressed conditions.

A couple was in to see me the other day. They are very fine young people, whom I admire very much, and they said to me, "We have bought a home and if we get a 10 per cent cut we can not meet all of our obligations." I said, "No; and that is true of everybody." Many times we are obligated clear up to where we can not afford to assume an additional dollar, and can not afford to have a single dollar taken away from us, but when you meet this situation, the only hope you have is to go to the man from whom you bought your home and say, "I have received this cut. You will have to share part of it." That is the only way they will be able to get relief.

Mr. NORRIS. What assurance can the Senator give us that the real-estate man would do that?

Mr. DICKINSON. The same assurances that the insurance companies are giving out in the Senator's State and in my State, where, instead of foreclosing, taking possession of all the land, they are saying, "We will carry your interest coupon for you. We are not going to foreclose this year. We are going to try it through another year with you, and see if you can not work it out."

This cut is for only one year, and there are very few realestate men in this town or elsewhere who are going to foreclose, and have another piece of property on their hands, rather than permit the Government employee to reduce the payments 10 per cent, or the amount necessary to cover the present reduction.

There is no question but that this reduction is going to impose hardships. I have had letters from Federal employees. I have been very friendly toward Federal employees. I do not believe I ever voted against a solitary measure in which they had a keen interest. Very much to my disgust, this morning when I came to my office I found pinned on my door a letter with this plea:

Will you please support American Federation of Labor in their efforts to prevent a drastic and unfair pay cut bill being put on the already overburdened Government employee?

I am perfectly willing to have anyone come and present that argument to me, and I make no criticism of it whatever. The next was this:

Many are already supporting relatives back home in the States.

There is no objection to that statement; but this is what it said further:

If such a bill is passed, we, our relatives, and friends are going to support the Federation when the day of reckoning comes.

I want to suggest that if I could find out who the committee was that pinned that on my door, and if they were Federal employees, I would see whether or not there could not be found a method whereby their services could be dispensed with from now on. I do not believe we ought to accept a mandate of that kind in seeking to prevent a man from doing what he thinks should be done in the circumstances we are facing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I agree entirely with the Senator that that intimated threat is entirely out of place, entirely wrong, and I agree with the Senator when he censures it. But I do not agree with the Senator when he says that if he could find out who did it he would have them discharged. Too much of that kind of work has been done in our Government, where men high in office, with great political influence, use their influence sometimes to elevate somebody in violation of law; sometimes to have somebody discharged.

Mr. DICKINSON. What would be the proper censure, in the judgment of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. The proper censure would be silence. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. President, I am getting letters a thousand times worse than that every day from people who are making all kinds of threats. There always will be unreasonable and unfair people in the world. People who make any kind of a threat against a Senator or anybody else are entirely out of place. But there are millions making threats every day. They are not in the luxurious circumstances of a United States Senator, and it seems to me we ought to close our eyes and say nothing about them. We will never come to the time when we will get away from that kind of criticism as long as we are in public life, and while it is wrong, and I do not agree with it, we can not accomplish any good by doing the same thing they are doing, trying to censure somebody else's conduct.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that I have no objection to any person who is interested in any legislation coming to me and expressing his views, but when a matter of this kind is being considered on the floor of the Senate, and when one is a member of such a committee as this committee, it does not seem to me that it requires silence when a group of Federal employees will say, "We are going to see what we can do to reflect our interest back home against you when the next election comes." Although the Senator from Nebraska may approve it, I want to say to him that I do not agree to that type of ethics in matters of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. I distinctly said that I did not approve it. But the Senator says it was a group of Federal employees. How does he know it was a group? It may have been written and put on the Senator's door by some silent, unfortunate person recently escaped from St. Elizabeths.

Mr. DICKINSON. I suggest to the Senator that the note is signed "A group of employees."

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; that does not prove anything. The Senator said he was a lawyer, and used to practice law. He ought to know that that does not mean anything. I could write a paper and sign it, "A million of your constituents," but that would not mean anything, and I do not think anybody would pay any attention to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest to the Senator that I do not believe in that type of tactics, even though the people do not sign their names to it. I would welcome a committee of the Federation of Labor, or of Federal employees, at any time, to discuss any of their problems, but I do not believe those who signed this paper belong to the American Federation of Labor, at least I hope they do not, and if they do, I hope the Federation will take recognition of such action, which I think would be clearly justified.

The question is, What is the necessity for economy? We have been discussing a tax bill here all these weeks, and we find that in the economies we must not only make them in the economy bill, but that we must make them in the Federal appropriation bills which are yet to follow. I am of the opinion that if this economy bill can be passed, we can then work out a program whereby the Federal appropriations will be made in such a way that practically no one will be severed from the Federal service, and that has been my strongest hope in this whole argument. If that is not done, and the 10 per cent reductions are made, it will mean that some are going to be severed from the Federal service.

I know that there are a good many people who say, "Well, we can find 10 per cent in this item, we can find 10 per cent in that item," but in the end, labor and service is so much a factor in practically every one of the appropriation bills, that if we come to reduce the total 10 per cent, and think that it will not reflect on the personnel, we are entirely wrong, because it will. I believe that we will find that practically every reduction that has been made will be reflected in some way in the personnel of the bureau affected.

My theory is simply this, that if we can reduce 10 per cent, if we can make this reduction, it will be carried for a year, and in the meantime the vacancies which occur will not be filled, departments will be in a position to adjust themselves on an even basis, and at the end of the year, when we come along to take up the appropriation bills for 1934, we will be in position to adjust the situation so that, if the conditions permit, we can reestablish the old rates all along the line, which I think ought to be done.

I have voted for increases for Government employees. I have never voted for a reduction before, and I am sorry we have to do it now. But I want to suggest that if we can not find a way whereby we can reduce, and if we do come to the point where we have to assess war taxes, then we are going to have a serious complication all along the line.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. We have been devoting several weeks here hunting for places where we might find some hope of getting additional revenue. The economy bill is in different form, but in all effect it is a tax bill, an excise bill. We have just passed another excise tax bill. The Senator's State is no different from all the other States in the Union. They can not balance their own budgets, because the people from whom they must get their revenues are in a condition where that from which they get their revenue has ceased to be. Commodities are selling away below the cost of production. Commerce of all sorts has shrunk to where there is practically no revenue. The paradox is confronting us that in the midst of abundance we are starving, naked, bankrupt.

Does not the Senator think that if we would spend more of the zeal and energy trying to rehabilitate trade and commerce that we are spending here trying to add $1,400,-000,000 of indebtedness upon an already prostrate Nation, we would be more justified in the eyes of the American people?

The paradox that confuses me is that we all recognize that the whole commercial and economic structure of the country has collapsed. Things are still going down, and in order for us to arrest the downward tendency we add $1,400,000,000 to the already insupportable load, and we are now about to discuss an appropriation of billions for the unemployed, and yet about to adopt a plan to add to the unemployed. What kind of paradox is it with which we, as the representatives of the American people, are confronted? We ought to stop now and take stock of the situation, and see to it that there is enough currency put into circulation that labor may find employment and that this terrible load may be lifted from their shoulders rather than more added to it.

As the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] said the other day, when we were confronted with the war we never thought of balancing the Budget. We had an objective, to win the war, and every American citizen responded, and in the hour of destruction we constructed. To-day in profound peace, with the greatest abundance America ever saw of real wealth, we have not the statesmanship or the courage to meet the situation and gladden the hearts of the American people, but instead we spend weeks adding burdens to their already broken backs. I should like to see us resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole and see if we can not find some way to give employment to those now unemployed and to revive commodity prices.

Mr. DICKINSON. The only trouble with trying to revive commerce is that there is none. Nobody knows where to start to revive it.

Coming back to the bill, I want to suggest that if we are not going to have an economy bill that is one thing. If we are to have an economy bill, I believe the only way we will get it will be to take the findings of the committee and do the best we can, as we did in the tax bill, sustaining the Economy Committee all the way through. We as a committee have been a jury trying to find a way by which we could adjust these various matters. The committee have made real research. We have gone into these matters very carefully. The findings we have made are the best we know of to meet the present situation.

I do not believe we can afford to say that if we can revive commerce, we will not need to reduce expenses. We have got to reduce expenses in order to revive commerce and put things on an even keel again. We are not going to proceed in a way by which we will revive the commerce of the United States unless we meet the situation that now confronts us, and that is to reduce expenditures to the point where we will have sufficient current funds to meet our expenditures. This is one source in the expenses of the United States Government, and, therefore, I can not see how we can shut our eyes, in view of all that is happening all over the United States so far as employment is concerned, and say we can not reduce the salary roll of the Government of the United States.

Therefore it is my hope that the committee bill will have the concurrence of a majority of the Members of the Senate. Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield for that purpose?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] are detained at a meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbour], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Nebraska IMr. Norrisl this morning introduced an amendment to the pending bill. It provided for a graduated salary reduction, and undoubtedly sound economics and justice support the Senator in his effort to preserve decent living conditions by exempting lower Government incomes from wage reductions. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he is prepared to estimate what amount of savings will result from the various graduated reductions?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been told by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, who has been in conference with the so-called experts of the departments, that my amendment would bring about a reduction in salaries and therefore a saving of about $23,000,000.

May I be permitted to say, since I have been asked the question, that in drafting the amendment and offering it I have not been moved by the amount of money that could be saved, because I knew it would not save as much as though we took something off the salaries of the lower paid employees; but I have been moved to prepare an amendment which, in my judgment, would go as far as in all consciousness and honesty I felt we had a right to go in reducing the salaries of the lower paid officials and employees of the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I say to the Senator that the purpose of my inquiry has been to secure for the Senate the benefit of this information at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he makes any provision in the amendment for making up the difference between the savings which he suggests and the saving suggested by the committee, which is nearly $100.000.000?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not. I am simply going on the theory that, as I look at it, it would be practically highway robbery to take this vast amount of money out of those who are getting the least amount of pay. In other words, as I understand it, half of the savings that we propose to make through this so-called economy proposition would come out of employees and be taken away from employees who are drawing the smallest salaries.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, when this measure came from the body at the opposite end of the Capitol and was referred to the special committee of 6, 3 from the majority and 3 from the minority, and I was named as a member of the committee, I entertained no hope that whatever the committee did, whatever report it made would meet with popular favor from those affected. I am not surprised that the report of the committee is meeting with stubborn opposition. Neither do I think that one side is altogether right and the other side is altogether wrong.

Mr. President, we have labored now for weeks undertaking to solve the problem of balancing the Budget and thus to maintain the stability of the Government's credit in the meantime. I am not one of those who have believed that the Budget must be balanced within 6 months or 12 months. I have never believed that that was indispensable to the maintenance of Government security. I am equally certain that the Budget can not remain out of balance to the extent of two and one-half billion dollars indefinitely and meantime maintain the stability of the Government credit. I hold to the view, Mr. President, that we must evolve a program which contemplates the restoration of the Budget to a balanced basis within a reasonable period of time, whether that be one year or two years or some other period which may be regarded a reasonable time.

Mr. President, the accomplishment of that end involves two parts—income and outlay, revenues and expenditures. For several days, aye, for more than two weeks we have dealt with the revenue phase of the problem. We completed that feature of our task night before last at 12 o'clock. Now we turn to the other phase of the problem—that is to governmental expenses.

Let me say, Mr. President, that while I supported virtually all of the rates in the revenue bill which I believed necessary and indispensable to the safety and perpetuity of the Government, I think economy and methods of reducing expenditures are more important than means of raising revenue, because in my opinion the Government has expanded far too widely during recent years. Its activities have been projected on too many lines and too far out in every direction. The time has come when the people of this country will demand with increasing determination that the Government retrench in its activities and curtail in its expenditures. So we now approach that phase of the problem.

The House sent us a bill that embraced economies of $52,272,740. Our committee worked for more than two weeks, morning, noon, and evening, in an effort to effect additional economies without visiting undue hardship upon any class of our people or any category of our activities. The committee reported a bill which effects economies of $238,605,606. In order that those who read the Congressional Record may have a picture of the respective sources from which these economies come, I shall ask to have printed at this point in the Record the table which is contained in the committee's report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The table is as follows:

one of the principal items in the bill deals with reductions in salaries of Federal employees. I address myself to that matter. There are 732,460 persons employed by the Federal Government in Washington and in the field in some form or another.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator's statement does not include any employees except those in the executive department, does it? There are many more than the number he mentions who are employed in the whole Government services.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator is perhaps right. I am dealing now with the table relating to the 732,460 persons in executive departments, whose annual salaries total $1,055,-

Mr. President, much has been said about opposition coming from the Federal employees affected. There is no doubt that they strenuously oppose the proposed reduction, and I am not disposed to criticise them for doing so. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. It manifests itself in the breast of every one of us, those of us here and those elsewhere. That was discussed by the committee during long hours. The committee reached the conclusion that the best way to effect a reduction in Federal salaries was to make a horizontal slash that applied to every person alike.

I for one was not willing to adopt the furlough system which would subject some subordinate in perhaps some remote Government post to the whim, the pleasure, or displeasure of a superior. I was not willing to have a husband, with a wife and children dependent upon him for a livelihood, subjected to the mental anxiety from day to day that through partisanship or discrimination he might be dismissed from the service permanently and added to the ranks of the unemployed. I believed then, and I believe now, that it is vastly better for employees, high and low alike, to have a definite assurance under the civil service law and under all other laws enacted in the past and under this measure that they will be retained in Government service during this period of stress and strain even though their salaries may be reduced 10 per cent. So, Mr. President, the measure that we have proposed relieves Government employees from that anxiety and that strain and that uncertainty which would be manifested by wear and tear as the months of the coming fiscal year advance.

Mr. President, it has been said that we should not cut the low-salaried employees 10 per cent and the high-salaried employees the same percentage. We must assume, however, that the present wage scale, from top to bottom, is fair and equitable, because it has been built up through the years with care and deliberation; we must assume that the salary paid to the employee in the lower brackets is fair as compared with the salary paid to the employee in the higher bracket, and conversely. If that be true, a 10 per cent cut is fair, because the reduction in the salary of each employee will bear the same ratio to the whole reduction that his salary bears to the whole salary pay roll of the Government.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRATTON. I vield.

Mr. FESS. When this subject was first discussed, I raised the question as to the wisdom of cutting the salaries of the employees in the lowest grades, for the reason that the Senator and the rest of us have in mind. I took the position. however, that the Senator now occupies, that if the salaries are equitable, then a cut in the one case would not be inequitable as compared to a cut in another. I recognize, however, the suffering that might come from cuts in the lower brackets. I wondered whether the committee had considered a smaller cut in the lower salary brackets with-

Mr. BRATTON. It will be observed, Mr. President, that | out exemption? I think the exemption question is going to defeat the whole purpose; but instead of an exemption, why could there not be a cut of 5 per cent in all salaries up to, say, $1,500, and then a 10 per cent cut above that?

Mr. BRATTON. Let us see as to that. If we should make a cut of 5 per cent in salaries up to $1,000 and a 10 per cent cut in salaries above that, then if one employee is drawing $950 and another is drawing $1,050, when the reduction was applied the employee drawing $950 would have a larger income than the one drawing $1,050. So it would be at every step-up of the system; it would involve discrepancies of which the employees would complain, with much justification and much force; it would involve what they would characterize as discrimination. Some will say, "Here is one working by my side who has drawn less than I drew heretofore, and now, by reason of the larger percentage of reduction applied to me, I draw less than he does." It will be so all the way from top to bottom.

It occurred to our committee, if we assume that the present system is fair and equitable from top to bottom and apply a rule that will require every employee to stand a cut which bears the same ratio to the whole that his salary bears to the whole salary pay roll, nothing fairer could be devised as a means of meeting an unfortunate situation which every one of us deplores.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. BINGHAM. May I remind the Senator that, as pointed out in the House report, if an effort were made to be fair in the exemption and to exempt the first $1,000 of all salaries, so that a person getting $1,000 would pay nothing and the person getting $1,050 would pay only a percentage of $50, the saving then would only be $61,000.000, or only one-half of what the committee has provided? May I say at this time that I was opposed entirely in the beginning to the pay cut and hoped that necessary economies might be effected in some other way, but the committee has shown so conclusively that the only way that the saving can be made is either by a pay cut or discharging between 50,000 and 100,000 employees, that it seems to me it would cause less suffering to ask every employee to take a 10 per cent cut than to ask 90,000 or 100,000 employees to go entirely without their jobs.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the Senator to explain further the furlough system. I did not get his point that there might be discrimination in the application of the furlough system.

Mr. BRATTON. That was the view of the committee, because under that system it would be left to a superior in a department to say which employee should be furloughed and which should not. It would be left to the judgment of a superior to conclude that inasmuch as so many employees must be furloughed so long he would select those to be furloughed and retain those who were not to be were made mandatory, how there could be preferences and discriminations?

Let me say to the Senator from Michigan before he addresses his next question to me that letters came to me from various parts of the country expressing the view that the system was laden with opportunities for partisanship, partiality, and discrimination; indeed, that it could be saturated with those considerations, so much so that some employees wrote saying that political considerations would govern the administration of the system. While I did not entertain that view, it being almost inconceivable that a superior in a department would stoop that low, yet the minds of many, many employees throughout the service were disturbed by that thought. I think the system is defective and unworkable and is subject to abuses from which this proposal is free.

Mr. BRATTON. The employees, of course, are graded in classes, and they are in different bureaus and different departments. If it became necessary, out of a group of 40 in one department, to furlough 10 at a time or 20 at a time-not all-it would be incumbent upon the superior to designate those who should be furloughed and those who

Mr. COUZENS. Yes: but at some time or other all would have to be furloughed, would they not?

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps. Perhaps some would be furloughed more than others.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; but, as I understood, the President's program was a month's furlough for each employee. I do not just get the point as to how there is any inequity in it.

Mr. BRATTON. If the Senator will study the system, I think he will find that some employees might be furloughed two weeks and some six weeks; at least, the system could be administered in that way.

Mr. COUZENS. Assuming that we put in the bill a stipulation that each one was to be furloughed one month, how could that be abused?

Mr. BRATTON. If we put in the bill a provision that each one should be furloughed one month, no more and no less, probably that would not enter into it; but to make it elastic and to make it meet conditions as they arise during the year, we must leave it to the judgment of some one to administer. There is where the danger of the system inter-

Mr. COUZENS. I agree with the Senator on that; but I still do not see why Congress itself can not specify a furlough of one month for each employee.

Mr. BRATTON. Let us take it this way. Suppose he is furloughed one month without pay: That would be onetwelfth, which is less than one-tenth. One twelfth is 81/3 per cent; and that would reduce the saving that much, by the difference between 81/3 per cent and 10 per cent.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true; but it would not take quite so much out of the employee.

Mr. BRATTON. Quite true.

Mr. COUZENS. And the Government would still be getting its value, if present salaries are proper and adequate. In other words, whether we follow the system suggested by the Senator from Connecticut or not, the employee is not doing some work for which he is getting no pay.

Mr. BRATTON. At the end of the year, under the furlough plan, the Federal employees would be restored to their present situation, their present status, their present level. Under the 10 per cent cut here proposed at the end of the year they would be restored to their present situation, their present level, and their same status, so that the furlough plan has no advantage over the present system when viewed from that standpoint.

Mr. COUZENS. But under the furlough plan the employee would have one month in which he could do something else.

Mr. BRATTON. That is the trouble: we have so many on the pay roll that they could take an extra month off and not hurt the Government service. There are too many in Government service, and we are trying to deal with them with the least hardship.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRATTON. I do.

Mr. JONES. What would be the effect of a furlough with reference to a rural free-delivery carrier?

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, it will not fit in certain cases. It will not fit in the case of school-teachers here in the District of Columbia. It will not fit universally as well as a horizontal slash will serve the purpose; and the horizontal slash does not permit any injustices or discriminations

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator, if the furlough | among the several employees, if it is to be assumed that our present wage scale is fair.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator from Michigan in connection with what he has just said, and which sounds very reasonable-that to take a month off would give the employee a chance to earn money somewhere else-that in the first place there was no suggestion on anybody's part that the furlough would come all at once. That would disrupt the Government service entirely, and we would have to hire some one else to do the job. The suggestion was that they take a day now and a day later, two days here and two days there; and that would not give them an opportunity to earn anything else, even if there were not 8,000,000 other people looking for that job.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the employees should understand that this is not a permanent cut. It is a temporary cut of one year. It is a contribution to the Government's financial situation.

Upon that point, Mr. President, let me say that there are a number of employees in the galleries. They are representative of the thousands upon thousands of others elsewhere. Their salaries have been built up by successive steps during the last several years. I voted for every one of those measures. I favor every worker in this country living according to American standards. I favor every laborer in this country, whether upon the Government pay roll or elsewhere, being so situated that he may educate his son or his daughter for useful citizenship in the American arena called life. I have never subscribed to the belief that the workers of this country should be required to compete without some protection against the laborers of other countries whose living standards are lower than ours. Accordingly, Mr. President, I have supported every increase in Government salaries since I became a Member of this body.

But this Government, with all of her power and her prestige and her prowess at home and abroad, with her record of which we are so proud, with her strength that has challenged the admiration of the world, finds itself now in a financial condition which requires sacrifice on the part of every citizen, whether he be on the Government pay roll or not; and I appeal to the Federal employees throughout the country, from patriotic motives and patriotic sentiment, to contribute this 10 per cent of their salaries during the ensuing 12 months as a means of aiding in the solution of the problem that is challenging the ingenuity of American

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain how it is that some of the night extras are cut off, thereby bringing about a greater percentage of cut in income in the case of those employees than others? There have been quite a number of complaints along that line.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I will explain that.

Under the present law if an employee works his full time and then works at night he draws extra pay. It was the belief of the committee that during this period when an employee had worked his full time during daylight hours the incentive to work at night at extra pay should be removed, so that some substitute perhaps without bread and meat or a meal ticket might do that night work.

In other words, we regarded the situation something like this: If the Government found a thousand of its citizens marooned upon an island, destitute and hungry, and the Government was able to reach them with only 500 meals. instead of dividing the people into two parts and giving 500 of them a full meal and the others nothing, it would be better to give the whole of them a half meal each. We believed that it was better to let the man who drew his regular pay work in the daytime and let some other citizen, perhaps with a family depending upon him, work at night and draw that much from the financial reservoir of the Government.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. I may be disclosing a lot of ignorance | with respect to how these employees are compensated, and I confess that I know little about it; but are there not some of the employees who work all night, and get higher pay for working at night than others do for working in the daytime?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. Mr. COUZENS. Is not the higher wage for night work cut off, and, in addition to that, do they not have their 10 per cent reduction?

Mr. BRATTON. I think there are some injustices of that kind. If so, they should be corrected.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I wanted to get at. I understand that if a man works at night, he gets higher pay; so we are going to cut off the higher pay for the night work, and then we are going to cut him down 10 per cent besides.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. May I say to the Senator from Michigan that that matter was called to the attention of the Senate yesterday in the absence of the Senator from Michigan? The purpose of the committee was to do exactly what the Senator from New Mexico has stated; and in order to make certain that nothing more than that will be done, an amendment will certainly be agreed to, so far as the conference committee is concerned, making certain that it does not apply except in the cases that were spoken of by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. COUZENS. I am in entire accord with that.

Mr. BYRNES. What the Senator from Michigan says is true, and we are going to correct it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut. Mr. BINGHAM. That is going to be corrected, may I say to the Senator. The only object of the section to which the Senator refers was to make more jobs, not to cut anyone at all. It needs an amendment in order to correct that injustice, and that amendment will be offered by the committee.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, so anxious was the body at the other end of the Capitol, so anxious was our committee, that everyone should be treated alike and everyone should contribute his proportionate share to this reduction, that we have in the bill a provision which authorizes those drawing salaries that can not be reduced under the Constitution-the President and the members of the Federal judiciary-to remit voluntarily any part of their salary that they see fit. I have a memorandum showing that if the Federal judges, from the Chief Justice of the United States down, make a 10 per cent remittance in their salaries by voluntarily paying that amount into the Treasury, that will effect a saving of $56,550, because they receive an aggregate of $565,500 annually.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. While I agree with the fine spirit of this offer of the Treasury to accept the money from the Federal judiciary, has the Senator any idea that they will

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have. If the members of the judiciary, who are immune from the power of Congress to reduce their compensation during their terms, fail to respond in pace with others who are engaged in public service. I shall be both surprised and disappointed in the judiciary of the Nation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that unless they all respond, it probably would be unfair to accept refunds from some of them. My inquiry was prompted by the decision of the Federal courts which held that their salaries were exempt from income tax under the clause of the Constitution which says that we shall not reduce their

According to my view, that was not a correct decision. and was absolutely in the face of the spirit of the Constitution, because the levy of an income tax on a judge, when everybody else bearing the same relationship to the Government, receiving the same pay, has to pay that tax, is not a reduction of his salary. I hope the Senator's faith in the Federal judiciary is greater than mine in respect to the return.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I express the faith that the members of the Federal judiciary, from the Chief Justice down, will respond to the call of the country, because I should feel greatly disappointed, if, when an employee drawing a thousand dollars is required by Congressional mandate to accept a reduction of $100, and a charwoman drawing $600 is required by congressional fiat to contribute $60 annually, if the members of the Federal judiciary should fail to respond willingly to the call of the Nation. I do not expect to be subjected to that disappointment, because I believe the personnel of that department are men of such high type that they will respond readily to the call of the country by turning back into the Treasury 10 per cent of their

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator vield again?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I say to the Senator that, frankly, I regard that clause in the bill as being in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, really, because while we can not reduce the salaries of judges by law, the committee is seeking to bring pressure to bear upon them to do the very thing which the Constitution prohibits. That, in effect, would be making the judiciary subservient to Congress through the power we have over their salaries through appropriations. I think this is the time when we all ought to sacrifice, but I doubt the wisdom and the propriety of that clause in the bill which seeks to highjack the Federal judiciary into making a contribution which we can not require under the

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it is not an effort to highjack the judiciary. It is my understanding that the Treasury could not receive a remittance of this kind without express authority. So we inserted the provision in the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive any such rebate. Call it an invitation to the Federal judges to make that contribution if you will; I am perfectly willing to extend the invitation to them, with the confident belief that they will accept it; but if they fail to do so, I, as one Member of this body and as one citizen of this country, shall be deeply pained and deeply grieved, because they will prove themselves to be men of a different kind from what I now regard them to be.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me that the only benefit the country would derive from a contribution from the judiciary would be in the form of a graceful gesture. The savings would not amount to anything; and if it were done upon invitation, it would lose its value.

Mr. BRATTON. The saving would be $56,500, if the judges make the contribution to the amount of 10 per cent of their salaries to the Treasury, and $56,500 is worth saving.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator will remember that we were told by one or two of the judges that they felt that it would be very embarrassing to them for their clerks and the officials of their courts to be cut 10 per cent, and they go right on with their salaries, that they would gladly and would prefer to put themselves on the same basis with all the employees of the courts; and under the present law the money could not be received by the Treasury.

Mr. BRATTON. That information was brought to the committee. By another provision of the bill we group the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board, except the Secretary of Agriculture, the members of the Board of Mediation, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, the American commissioners of the General Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, and the Commission, United States and Germany, and fix their salaries at $10,000 per annum, and provide further that, after June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the Federal Farm Board, the United States Shipping Board, the Merchant Marine Corporation, or of any governmental function named in this section, shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum.

Then we provide that the 10 per cent reduction elsewhere provided in the bill shall apply to the salaries as thus reduced. In other words, a member of a commission who is now drawing $12,000 a year is first reduced to $10,000, and then the 10 per cent reduction is applied to that figure, which reduces the salary to $9,000, which means a reduction of $3,000 to members of certain commissions heretofore drawing $12,000 a year. The savings from that aggre-

We have gone through the bill with a view of curtailing expenditures and of effecting economies the very best we could in the short period of time available to us. Some people throughout the country seemed to believe that we were a committee that would sit for months canvassing the entire machinery of the Government with a view of effecting permanent economies. I think we need that kind of a committee. I believe it could accomplish a great deal. But our committee did not occupy that position. This measure was attached as a rider to the legislative appropriation bill; the body at the other end of the Capitol sent it to us in that form; and, accordingly, it had to be dealt with promptly. We devoted two weeks to it. We effected these economies. We knew they would be unpopular in certain quarters. We recognized that they would meet stubborn opposition in this Chamber and elsewhere, and we were not deceived in that belief.

Mr. President, there arises in the equation the paramount consideration of protecting the Government, of maintaining its stability, of maintaining its credit, of maintaining its steadfast course; and I have the belief deep in my mind that every Federal employee, if he realized the seriousness of the situation, would be willing to contribute his 10 per cent during the next 12 months as a means of aiding the Nation in this time of stress and strain.

I do not call their unwillingness to do so selfishness, I do not characterize it as that, but I think they fail to appreciate the situation. I express this belief, too, that if we proceed without some curtailment in Government expenses, without some reduction in Federal salaries, the sentiment for economy throughout the country will become so strong that in less than 12 months the Federal employees will find themselves confronted with a deeper cut than 10 per cent. It requires no prophetic vision to realize that, and I say that as a devoted friend of the Federal employees throughout the country, many of whom in my own State have supported me in every way. When I stand for this cut of 10 per cent I hold to the belief that I am rendering them a real service. because I would rather see them take a temporary cut of 10 per cent than to see them required to take one much larger in 12 months or so hence, and, perhaps, thousands upon thousands of them dismissed from the service altogether.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I was wondering what information the committee had to justify the belief that the salaries would be restored within a year.

Mr. BRATTON. The provision in the law limits it to 12

Mr. COUZENS. The committee must have made up its mind that the salaries would be restored after 12 months. and I would like to know what information the committee had to justify it in reaching the conclusion that the salaries could be restored after 12 months.

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, it will take an act of Congress to prevent the restoration to the present level. In other | umpire and American commissioners of the Mixed Claims | words, unless Congress takes further action, the salaries will be restored automatically. The committee expressed the hope that our condition would be improved so that we might return to the present level at the end of 12 months.

Mr. COUZENS. So that it was only a hope; we have no assurance?

Mr. BRATTON. It was only a hope, because no one of us, not even the Senator from Michigan, can foretell with certainty what will be the condition 12 months from now; but he hopes, and I hope, and every other devoted citizen of this country hopes, and earnestly hopes, that our condition will be improved at the end of 12 months, so that we may return to the present levels. But we will not contribute to that restoration, we will not contribute to that return to the higher levels unless we protect this Government and maintain the stability of its credit.

The greatest blow we could strike in the present situation, the greatest contribution we could make to its continuance would be to let our financial situation continue with our Budget out of balance to a substantial extent.

Mr. President, I know it is going to work hardship upon many Government employees to take this 10 per cent cut. Any man who would argue otherwise, here or elsewhere, should have his mental condition investigated. Many employees have bought homes and placed mortgages upon them, many employees have obligations at banks and elsewhere, many employees have arranged their financial affairs so that this cut will handicap and embarrass them tremendously. I realize that. But practically every citizen in this country, high and low alike, is unable to pay his obligations promptly. The Federal employees will be in no worse condition after this cut is applied; they will have no more mortgages upon their homes that they can not meet currently than hundreds of thousands, aye, millions of other citizens who are caught unawares and unprepared in this hour of crisis.

Mr. President, where are we going to get the money to furnish the Federal employee to pay the mortgage on his home, to liquidate the note in the bank, if the taxpayer is unable to pay the mortgage on his home and liquidate his note at the bank, and otherwise discharge his obligations? Everybody is caught in this situation alike, and it is untenable to urge that we continue the wage scale of Federal employees at 100 per cent and rely upon a depleted reservoir, namely, hard-pressed taxpayers, for the money with which to pay such salaries.

I say that with as deep sympathy for the Federal employees and the workers of this country as any man here or elsewhere. But we are confronted with a situation, and it is for every Member of this body to deal with it as his judgment dictates. My judgment is that a flat, horizontal cut, whatever we make it, is the best method for approaching the situation. If 10 per cent is too high, reduce it. If 10 per cent is too low, increase it. But whatever it is, let it be a flat, horizontal cut, which will apply to every employee alike, so that his contribution will bear the same proportion to the whole contribution that his salary bears to the total sum of salaries paid by the Government. Do not have the man with the low salary urging that his cut is out of proportion with that of the man higher up.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Florida a while ago spoke about the graduated income tax being applied on the principle of ability to pay.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. Mr. COUZENS. I wondered what the committee's viewpoint was about cutting a $15,000 Cabinet officer 10 per cent, and cutting 124,000 employees who receive under a thousand dollars 10 per cent.

Mr. BRATTON. We thought that when Federal salaries are compared one with the other, the whole structure of our pay roll was equitable; at least we have said so in the past because Congress fixed it; and that when the cut does exactly what I have stated, namely, the share borne by each bears to the whole salary expense that is fair. That is the fairest way we can make the reduction, and it rests most equitably upon all alike.

Mr. COUZENS. I believe there is some proper basis for a graduated reduction.

Mr. BRATTON. If we were dealing with it as a permanent proposition, there might be much justification in that view; but we are dealing with it as a temporary matter, as a humanitarian problem. We believe, in view of the reduction in commodity prices, that the fairest way to do it is to cut them alike on a horizontal basis. That is my conviction. I think it will work out best in the long run.

As I pointed out a while ago, we will always have in a graduated scale what might be called ragged tops. It has been suggested that we exempt all employees up to $1.000. Let us take that proposal. One employee is drawing $1,000 and another drawing $1,100. Applying the 10 per cent above the $1,000, the $1,000 man afterwards would be drawing more money than the $1,100 man. We would have innumerable complaints of discrimination and injustice in every such step-up in rates.

Mr. COUZENS. I believe there is legislative language that we could use to obviate that. I do not think that is a very serious objection to the graduated scale.

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps the Senator from Michigan could do that. If he can, I regret seriously that the whole task of effecting these economies was not tendered him. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator for his sarcasm. Mr. BRATTON. Not at all, Mr. President. It was intended in a vein of humor.

Speaking seriously to the Senator from Michigan, it is easy to look at it and say we will make these economies without doing any injustices, but I express the belief that if the Senator had devoted two and one-half weeks to it as the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and others of us did, he would have concluded long ago that any proposal we may undertake will present many complications difficult to solve and difficult to overcome.

Perhaps this proposal is not right. Perhaps it is inequitable. Perhaps it can be improved upon. But our committee devoted themselves to it during many hours. We were of one mind that this is the best way to do it, that it is the fairest way to do it, that it is the way freest from inequities and injustices that we could devise. It is only a temporary proposal. It calls upon the Federal employees to respond with a degree of patriotism to the country at this time. I addressed myself a while ago to the patriotism of the Federal judiciary. I have the same confidence in the Federal employees in this country that they will rise to the challenge which presents itself to them and will respond to it in true American fashion, and will make their contribution to the solution of the problems which confront our whole country in a most vital way.

Although there may be complaints and outcries now, although meetings may be held, although some voices may be heard, yet if the measure passes with this flat 10 per cent cut in it, I believe it will be accepted by a large, yea, an overwhelming majority of Federal employees throughout the country. Husbands will say to wives and wives will say to husbands, and it will be said around the family circle, that the cut visited hardships upon us, but we are willing to respond to the needs of the Government in what has been characterized as an economic war. I believe that young and old alike will be stalwart soldiers in this time of economic war and will acquit themselves with that degree of manhood and womanhood, bravery of manhood and bravery of womanhood, fidelity to the country, that has been typical of our citizens in all walks and in all places and under all conditions and circumstances, including those whose names now stand upon the roster of Federal employees. I believe they are as loyal and patriotic to this country as those on the outside.

In conclusion I express the confident belief that when we have written this measure, whatever it may be-and I individual bears the same ratio to the whole that his salary | hope the committee amendment will stand—that an almost unanimous voice will be heard from Federal employees, saying that hardships though it involves, disappointments though it means, deprivations though it casts upon them, they will accept those hardships, those disappointments, those deprivations, for a period of 12 months as their contribution to the solution of the problem and the maintenance of their Government and its safety and security, both at home and abroad.

> I have here a letter from Hon, Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees, to which are attached certain tables relating to salaries paid Federal employees. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter and tables printed in the RECORD at this point.

> There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> > NATIONAL FEDERATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Washington, D. C., June 1, 1932.

My Dear Senator: We are inclosing a tabular statement showing the number of civilian employees grouped by $100 salary steps. This table was prepared in the Bureau of the Budget and authoritative.

This table shows that a cut of 10 per cent on annual salaries of civilian Federal employees below $1,000 would save $4,330,902; below $2,500 would save $82,090,505; below $3,000 would save $92,- 574.817; and below $5,000 would save $102,687,787.

It is apparent that no Senator wishes to cut the pay of employees in the lower salary ranges. The bulk of the savings must be secured by cuts in this group. The savings effected by cuts in the higher-paid groups is so negligible as not to warrant the United States Government lowering employment standards.

Very truly yours,

LUTHER C. STEWARD, President.

¹ Salary of civilian employees is gross salary and includes the value of quarters, subsistence, or other facilities or services furnished by the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want first to congratulate | the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] upon his very able and very eloquent speech. He has presented the matter in a fashion, in its presentation at least, that commends itself to every man who heard him. I feel that it could not be better presented to this body than the Senator from New Mexico has presented it, and I want him to know that I am in absolute sympathy with the work in which he has been indulging. I feel that that work has been performed with studious care, appreciated by all of those who are interested in the present finances of the Government.

What little I say I do not wish to be construed in the slightest degree as critical of the committee. I recognize their difficult task, a difficult task, sir, such as seldom has confronted a committee in the Senate. I recognize, too, that there is a difficult task presenting itself to-day to the Senate itself, a difficult task such as seldom has been presented to us.

This thing that confronts us to-day has many facets and many angles. It can not be answered in an instant by a suggestion of the necessity for money by the Government of the United States, because it involves possibilities, contingencies, future relationships, which must be considered as well. Ours is a Republic. Ours is a peculiar Government, different from any other upon the face of the earth. Ours is a Government which rests practically upon its citizenship and, sir, the Government will be just as good in the days to come as we permit its citizenship to be. If we contribute in any degree to the destruction or to the lessening of the morale, the esprit, that we love to believe is a part of the citizenship of this country, then, sir, there is no sum of money that can compensate the United States of America for the harm which we have done.

I thought the other night when we finished with the tax bill that we were over the greater part of our troubles. I fear, from what I have heard since, we are not. You have heard the whisperings, just as I have heard them, concerning the necessities of the Government and the obligation which rests upon us willy-nilly, and without regard to the merits or demerits of any proposition to pass this bill. I thought as I listened to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] the other night and then the day following that although all the nations of the earth were looking to us to see what we would do, and that various geographical subdivisions in Europe were listening to hear from the sounding board of the United States Senate what it might accomplish in the way of raising the taxes and the balancing of that mysterious Budget that changes like a chameleon from day to day under the ministrations of the Treasury-I thought then when we had balanced that Budget that we had escaped the many of the evils that were presented to us and that we had laid some of the bogey men that had been conjured up upon this floor and paraded up and down in front of us as bogey men who would catch us if we did not look out-bogey men local, national, and international, who but 'ay in wait to destroy us unless with celerity and dispatch we acted exactly as they desired.

I would like, sir, to put into the RECORD before I conclude my remarks certain telegrams which I have received of late from those abroad who are so interested in our welfare, and who have so impatiently awaited our action. There is, sir, a most reassuring dispatch from the Ahkund of Swat and another from the Majaharajah of Ratholee from their retreats in the Balkans, saying that having balanced the Budget and having passed the tax bill as was required of us, they finally could draw a full breath; that they had been waiting in the fastnesses of their retreats only to learn whether or not we had balanced the Budget and passed the tax bill that was presented to us by our friends upon the Finance Committee. They rejoice now in southeastern Europe. Again they raise their heads that were bowed in shame before, if we are to believe the Senator from Pennsylvania in the remarks that he made, and they have regained their confidence in the United States of America.

Then southeastern and southwestern Europe unite in hosannas of praise and peans of victory because we passed States Government to set the example to all the world, to our tax bill and balanced our Budget. They say apparently to us now again perhaps, unless we reduce the salaries of those who receive little in the Government of the United States, the same bogey men are going to catch us; we will have the same difficulty. I have confidence in the United States of America, and I do not believe the stability of this Republic rests upon reducing the salaries of those who receive less than $1,500, $2,000, $2,500 from the United States Government. It is said to us: Oh, that rate of 10 per cent reduction is just and equitable, applying alike to the high and the low, the rich and the poor, to those who are a part of the Congress of the United States, to those who sit in high places in the Government, and to those who have less than $1,500 a year upon which to live. The same reduction of 10 per cent to all is just and fair and equitable, it is argued.

Not so, Mr. President; not so, at all. When we take 10 per cent from a man with $1,000, $1,500, $2,000, or $2,500 as an income, what do we take from him? We take from him in part food and clothing. We take from him in part shelter and light. We take from him in part the right to bring up his children as American children are entitled to be brought up. We take from him, sir, the very necessaries of life.

When we take from those who are high up in the salaries of this Nation 10 per cent as well, what do we take? We do not take from them the absolute necessaries of life that we take from the poor. We take from them the luxuries to which they have been accustomed, and, of course, in a time like this, where the bogey man walks up and down the Chamber and is about to get us all, they, of course, will be perfectly willing to yield those luxuries and yield a greater percentage of income.

I do not believe, sir, in taking 10 per cent of incomes of $1,000, $1,500, $2,000, or $2,500. I realize that what little I may say upon the subject is of no consequence here or elsewhere, but if mine is the only such vote in this Chamber, I will not vote to take 10 per cent of the salary of a man who has little to live upon and has been accorded him in the past from a Government that has been none too grateful for services he may have rendered.

Take 10 per cent from a man with a salary of $1,500, say gentlemen who object to an exemption of $1,500—take from him $150 and say to me that it is as just as to take 10 per cent from a $15,000 salaried man! Not a bit of it, sir. No men with salaries in the lower brackets such as we have seen in the tables that have been brought here for us ought to have taken from them 10 per cent of their salary or any other amount under a measure of this sort or of any other

There is an answer to what I say. Of course, the answer that gentlemen repeat again and again and again is, Where is your substitute? There must be somewhere in the Government of the United States places where economies may be accomplished, places in departments of the Government where economies may be effectuated which will relieve us of the necessity of being so cruel as to take 10 per cent out of salaries that are so small as are those which are taxed by

Mr. President, the question goes much further than mere money. A query was propounded to-day to the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] if this were a question of money alone, and the answer was, "Yes; it is purely a question of money." There is something else, sir, involved, and, thank God, with some of us there is something else in life as well. To tell me that this country is going to the bowwows unless we take 10 per cent of the small salaries of small people I can not for a moment accept, and I can not for a moment put any particular credence in it. Something else is involved, something in our economic life. It is the right to live as Americans can and ought to live; it is the right to have children, as every right-thinking man and woman pray for; it is the right to have light and air and heat and a bit of comfort in this life of ours; it is the right, sir, to have some of God's sunlight that has been denied to many of our people; it is the right of the United protect and build its citizenship that the Republic may dollar has reached such a high point that the people are tempted endure. So, sir I am opposed to taking from these small to convert all their holdings into dollars to avert further endure. So, sir, I am opposed to taking from these small salaries any part of them.

I do not care what may be done with the upper brackets. Go ahead with them if it be desired and let every man in this body, if we are going to make a gesture of reducing the upper brackets make a gesture that is real. Take from the upper brackets every penny of salary if you wish; I will not complain and I would vote for that; but I decline to vote for taking it from those little able to pay it and those from whom it ought not to be taken.

It is not a question merely of Government employees who have their positions and ought to contribute to the emergency. Far beyond that it goes. It goes, sir, to the flowing of the national life in the fashion in which we wish it to flow; it goes to the perpetuity of American citizenship as we would like American citizenship to be maintained. It goes, sir, to the very justice of this great Government to those who have been its employees and have rendered it service and who receive but pitiful salaries in return.

So, sir, in the teeth of all the propaganda and the various articles that are presented to us throughout this land, I hope that we shall have nerve enough, I hope that we shall have the courage to stand here and do no injustice to those who really are unable to protect themselves and who need the protecting arm of those who represent them upon this floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to make a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he change his request and ask that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Ten o'clock is an extremely difficult hour if we are going to do any of the other work that is piling up for all of us.

Mr. JONES. I know that there is a great deal of work to do; but I hope we can get through with this bill as rapidly as possible. We will probably have to take more time on it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. May I take the liberty of agreeing with the Senator from California and of saying that our real difficulty is because of the many people who come here and want to visit members of the Cabinet and the Capitol on business matters at just about 10 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. They will have a hard time getting such matters before the members of the Cabinet in the morning.

Mr. President, I will change my request and ask that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to state at the outset that I intend to vote against the proposed reduction of 10 per cent in the salaries of Government employees or any other reduction in salaries at this time. Although I appreciate that perhaps the popular thing to do in the eyes of the country at this time is to slash wages of employees, particularly Government employees, I am going to vote against it, because I think it is not the thing that we ought to do at this time in view of present economic conditions.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of April 11 entitled "The Underlying Problem." I will read a portion of the editorial, as follows:

On April 1 a group of 110 representative commodities were selling for 17½ per cent less than they brought a year ago. This is superimposed upon a decline of 20 per cent in the previous year. So long as this condition remains unchanged business will be paralyzed. All the credit in the world can not induce business to go deeper into the red.

Value in the United States is being slowly concentrated into money. The dollar increases in value every day, while everything else loses some of its relative worth. In spite of the antihoarding campaign and the liberalizing of credit this situation encourages the liquidation of all other forms of wealth. The value of the to convert all their holdings into dollars to avert further shrinkage.

Unless this vicious movement is checked it will result in panic. The extension of credit will not be sufficient. Heroic emergency measures that will arrest the fall of prices seem to be in order. How that can be done without unwarranted inflation of the currency is not clear, but every fresh wave of deflation makes more urgent the necessity of restoring some measure of balance between money and commodity prices.

The heat brains of the country and the latest price of the country and the country an

The best brains of the country ought to be concentrated on this problem. This economic malady has reached a point where it can not be expected to cure itself without leaving horrible scars. problem. Palliatives will not yield the desired effect. Business can not turn toward stability unless the whole tendency toward lower price levels is reversed. Some powerful agency must be thrown into the breach to restore the value of goods and services against the exaggerated value of money.

That, Mr. President, states the underlying problem that confronts the United States to-day. Yet nothing has been done by the Congress, nothing has been advocated by the President of the United States to strike at the root of the real underlying cause of present economic conditions. The only thing that has been suggested to the Congress is to reduce wages. It is the same old story; when the head of a great corporation finds that he can not do anything else he immediately says, "We must reduce wages." So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I want to say that I am not going to cast my vote on the floor of the Senate to reduce the wages of Government employees when we appropriate millions upon millions of dollars for battleships with which to kill people and which in a few years are going to be of no value whatsoever to the Government or the people of the United States. I am not going to vote to reduce the wages in the United States when I see on my desk a bill, that is on the general program of business, proposing an appropriation of $125,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to be given to some private banking corporation. I am not going to vote to reduce wages when I see legislation pending and proposed in the Congress of the United States designed to take millions upon millions of dollars out of the Treasury, and when I know that, instead of further trying to deflate wages and trying further, if you please, to deflate the economic situation, we ought to be reversing the order and ought to be doing everything under the sun to inflate our currency and to put more money into circulation, rather than to keep it out of circulation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield. Mr. COSTIGAN. In line with the interesting newspaper extract the Senator from Montana read, may I ask whether the Senator also examined a discussion reported in the last day or two in the press, and attributed to Sir Arthur Salter, who until recently long supervised the economic studies of the League of Nations, in which it was, in effect, urged that an important international contribution might be made by the United States to relieve general distress if this country might succeed in raising the present low price level in the United States?

Mr. WHEELER. I did not see the article, Mr. President; but, of course, there is not any question about it. Let me say that the British colonies are going to meet in Ottawa, I think, some time in June, with the specific purpose of trying to do something to raise the commodity price level upon the world market; and how are they going to do it? They are going to do it by inflating the currency, and that brings me to this problem:

While I have spoken on numerous occasions with reference to the problem of silver, I did not rise for that purpose at this time; but I do say that some means will have to be found to cheapen the American dollar, and I have proposed a bill for the remonetization of silver, which unquestionably would do that, and would absolutely bring up the world commodity price level.

Further than that, the question has been asked upon the floor of the Senate, "If we do not reduce these wages, how are we going to get the money to balance the Budget?"

Mr. President, let me say frankly that I am not particularly interested in whether the Budget is balanced or not. I do not think it is of very much importance whether the Budget is balanced or not. I say that in the face of all of the propaganda that has been sent out from one end of this country to the other that unless the Congress of the United States balanced the Budget at this time we were going to the bowwows; and they say, "Why, you are going off the gold standard unless you balance the Budget."

We will not go off the gold standard whether we balance the Budget or whether we do not. It will have very little effect upon the gold standard. Let me call attention, however, to the fact that France has not balanced her Budget in the last two years, and nothing very serious has happened to the great French Government. In fact, economic conditions in France have been better than they have been in almost any other country in the world; and, as I say, they have not balanced their Budget in over two years. Yet we are told in the Senate and through the press and through the propaganda that unless we cut wages, unless we balance the Budget, this whole great Government of ours, with all of its wealth, just can not last.

It is the cheapest kind of nonsense that has ever been spread throughout the length and breadth of this land. I do not know just exactly where it emanated from, and I do not know just who is responsible for it, or what the purpose of it is; but I do want to stand here upon the floor of the Senate and say that it has done us immeasurable harm for the propaganda to go forth to the world, first, that we could not balance the Budget, and then, if we did not balance the Budget, that the Government of the United States was in a frightful position.

Where could we get the money? The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] have both introduced into the Senate bills with reference to manufacturing beer. I am not a propagandist for the manufacture of beer; but I do say that as far as I am concerned I would vote, as I have voted, to raise, as we could raise, according to all the figures that have been furnished here, $350,000,000 if the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States had the courage to come out and advocate a tax upon beer.

Why do we not do it? It is because of the fact that a lot of people are afraid of the Anti-Saloon League. That is the reason why we do not do it. We are afraid of the propaganda from the Anti-Saloon League; we are afraid to raise $350,000,000 in that way; and we would be taking it from whom? Who is getting the benefit of it now? The racketeer and the bootlegger in Chicago, in New York, in Philadelphia, in Pittsburgh. We would put a stop to that racketeering, and we would put $350,000,000 into the Treasury of the United States, if we would do what is proposed by these Senators.

We talk about threatening letters; and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] told about somebody pinning a message upon his door. What the labor people put on the door of the Senator from Iowa has not been a marker to the propaganda that the Anti-Saloon League have sent out and the threats that they have made against Congressmen and Senators and every public official in the United States.

So, Mr. President, I want to repeat what I said a while ago: As long as we have not the courage to raise the revenue in the way that it ought to be raised, as long as we stand here and are afraid to vote to put a tax upon beer, as we can do under the Constitution of the United States; as long as we are afraid to raise revenue in that way, just so long will I refuse to vote to reduce wages 10 per cent or any other sum. As long as we are going to appropriate millions of dollars for battleships, just so long shall I refuse to vote to reduce wages. As long as we appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States for a lot of other useless things, just so long will I refuse to vote for a reduction of wages; and, Mr. President, so long as this Government is afraid to face the real economic problem that confronts this country, and to do something with reference to cheapening the dollar so as to raise the commodity price level for the farmers and the other producers of this country, just so long will I refuse to vote to balance the Budget by taking money out of the wage workers of the Government of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Presiding Officer what is the pending motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on page 45, which will be stated:

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 6, after the word "reduced," strike out "as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $2,500 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $2,500" and insert "by 10 per cent of the amount thereof," so as to read:

SEC. 102. (a) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced by 10 per cent of the amount thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to the House text offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. JOHNSON. That is why I inquired, to see what is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the House text will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 7, it is proposed to amend the House text as follows: Strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500"; and in line 8, after the semicolon following the word "reduction," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And that part of any annual compensation in excess of $1,500 and not in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 5 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $2,500 and not in excess of $4,000 shall be reduced by 10 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,500 shall be reduced by 15 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $5,500 and not in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 20 per cent; and that part of any annual compensation in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 25 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment. Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is the one that is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to offer a substitute, provided the Chair rules that it may be offered as a substitute. It was originally written as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 11, page 45, it is proposed to insert the following language:

Provided, however, That the said reduction shall not apply to the compensation or salaries herein described which are not in excess of $2,500 per annum; and compensation and salaries herein described of said $2,500 or less per annum are exempted from the provisions of this section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask, as a parliamentary question, if the Chair will permit me, can that be offered as a substitute for the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule XVIII, that is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do offer it, then, as a substitute and ask that it lie on the table.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I rise to discuss quite another question than the one I find occasion now to speak of briefly in view of what has been offered here on the floor this afternoon.

I have heard Senators ask, I have heard other Senators promise, or try to promise, how long this temporary cut in pay might have to continue. There has been offered some prophecy that this 10 per cent cut would continue for only a year. One Senator, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton], however, frankly declares that such an expression is merely a hope. I insist that we might well look forward in what we do now to the possibility of having to repeat or | go even farther than we go now a year from this time in effecting governmental economies.

We are going to have to continue such a program as we are engaged in now so long as there is continued ignoring of the needs of more than half of the people of these United States. For 10 or 12 years there has been persistent appeal for a rallying on the part of the Government to the needs of the agricultural people, who are seeking only a fair deal and a fair chance to enjoy that measure of equality and that measure of blessing which was flowing from the Government to industry in general here in the United States.

On yesterday there appeared in the daily press a little account of the developments in commodity prices which is only a picture of a continuation of the severe decay that set in to agriculture several years ago and has not been diminished in any degree. So long as we permit agriculture to continue on that downward trend, that long are we going to have to deal with unemployment, with inability to create such incomes as will enable us to draw in the way of taxes the needed revenue for the Government.

This article of which I speak appeared yesterday morning in the Washington Herald and is as follows:

NEW LOW SET IN PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCE—3-POINT DROP REPORTED AS AVERAGE—MEAT ANIMALS SHOW 7 PER CENT DECLINE

The index of prices of farm products on May 15 was at a new

The index of prices of farm products on May 15 was at a new low of 56 per cent of pre-war as compared with 59 per cent on April 15, according to the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics yesterday. Price declines for all farm commodities except potatoes, apples, and eggs accounted for the 3-point drop. On May 15 a year ago the index was 86 per cent of pre-war.

Meat animals recorded the most striking price change during the past month, the index for hogs, cattle, calves, sheep, and lambs being reported as 59 per cent of pre-war on May 15, compared with 66 per cent on April 15. The average farm price of hogs declined 20 to 80 cents per 100 pounds in practically all States; prices of cattle and calves reached a record low on May 15; sheep prices were down 8 points, and lamb prices were down 8 points, and lamb prices were down 6 sheep prices were down 8 points, and lamb prices were down 6

Mr. President, our present-day difficulties in an economic way, and our difficulties in collecting revenue, are traceable directly to our continued ignoring of the needs of the agricultural people. One-third of our American population is living on the farms and dependent upon prices to be paid for their commodities. Another third of our population is residing in small communities, conducting the ordinary lines of business which every agricultural community knows.

The grocer, the dry-goods dealer, the harness maker, the doctor, the lawyer, all of the many who occupy places in professional life and in business life are dependent directly upon those agricultural people. When the farm people are unable to buy the things they want, when they are unable to get a price for their products that will enable them to go into the marketing places and purchase the things they need and want, these merchants, these business people, are in turn going to be without a buying power, and as a result they let the supplies on their shelves diminish, they do not try to keep them up to the order which was once their practice, and as a result wholesale houses and jobbers are hard pressed for business; and because there is a press there for business, mills and factories close their doors and turn onto the streets millions of unemployed men, business enjoys not its usual income, and we do not have access to the returns which ordinarily come from our levies in the way of taxation upon business and income-tax payers of the

If we want to continue our present condition, if we want to go from bad to worse evermore, all we need to do is to continue to shut our eyes to this agricultural situation, where very nearly two-thirds of our entire population look for their first and last success in an economic way.

That, however, is hardly what I rose to say, Mr. President. I have listened this afternoon to some splendid arguments offered in support of the 10 per cent cut. I have heard other arguments in support of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. Much as I should like to concur in the work accomplished by the Economy Committee, which has been devoting itself most unselfishly for several weeks, I can not bring myself to a point where I can support a proposition which deals as severely with the man and the woman who are trying to get along on an income of $1,000 or $1,500 a year as it deals with those who are enjoying larger incomes as a result of their employment by the Federal Government.

If we are now going to make a straight slash of 10 per cent upon all governmental employees, mark my word, if conditions continue as they are now, we are going to come back a year from now and ask that those $1,000 and $1,500 employees accept another slash. It may be that we will have ultimately to come to that. I hope not. In any event, I think we err grievously if we now make that sort of a slash against those who are enjoying only that size of income which enables them to get by in some fashion.

If later on, a year from now, we must resort to such drastic action, well and good, but for now I am not ready to say that the individual Government employee with an income of $1,000 or $1,500 a year is as able to sacrifice 10 per cent of his salary as I am able to sacrifice 10 per cent of my salary. For that reason, while interested in economy, while knowing that we must effect economies, I think while we are effecting economies we had best beware against doing a thing which would be a grave injustice to say the least.

In view of the fact that something like 276,000 Federal employees are drawing salaries of $1,500 a year or less, I wish we might at least postpone the day when we would have to effect our economies upon those who can so ill afford the sort of sacrifice which is demanded in the committee's recommendations

I would be the last one to suggest that the people of the United States did not have a right to demand and expect economies of the Congress. However, some two or three weeks ago I addressed myself to a certain measure then pending in the Senate and showed how inconsistent we were in our demand for economy in passing the bill that was then pending, namely, the naval construction bill.

During the course of my argument I undertook to reveal the part which had been played by certain selfish interests in this country in agitating the people by misrepresentation and by falsehood, which was occasioning their writing to their Members of Congress and demanding this, that, and the other thing in the name of economy. I mentioned names in that address, and also in that talk to the Senate I revealed the matter of expenses and economy that were being involved in the then pending measure.

Of my address the newspapers the following day carried perhaps an article of a column, not one portion of it given over to anything which I had said as to economies or my own attitude upon the question of effecting economies, but every line of it given over to what was alleged to have been my attack upon Mr. Merle Thorpe, the editor of Nation's Business, the organ of the United States Chamber of Commerce. The thought was left with those who would read that I had declared myself opposed to the program of economy which the Congress was engaged in.

Before I proceed with what I have to say to-day, in continuation of my remarks of about three weeks ago. I want to say very emphatically that I will continue to lend myself whole-heartedly to any program which will accomplish economies without working gross injustices upon those people who can least afford them.

When, some weeks back, we first began to hear from over the country, our attention was called to the fact that Mr. Merle Thorpe and other spokesmen for the larger business interests of the land were urging upon the Government all measures of economy, were selling to the public the thought that we were a most extravagant Congress, were selling to the country the thought that there were very material savings which might be effected in every department of governmental activity.

It occurred to me at the time that it would be most interesting to know whether Mr. Thorpe and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States were practicing what they preached. These people have pointed the way to where we might effect economies. They are among the leaders of those demanding this straight cut of 10 per cent upon Federal employees. If they could have their way there would be abandonment, complete abandonment, of the employment of thousands upon thousands of the men and women who are on the Federal pay roll at this time.

How consistent are they, Mr. President? They are not particularly consistent. They, the United States Chamber of Commerce, are doing anything other than practicing what they are preaching. They are not approximating, in the way of effecting economies, the work which Congress is doing.

I wish the public might know the truth. I wish the public might have more ready access to the expenditures of the Federal Government. I wish the public could know just what the Congress is aiming to accomplish through the various expenditures authorized. If they did know they would be less subject to the appeal and to the argument and to the propaganda offered by men like Merle Thorpe through their editorial efforts and through their broadcasts over networks covering the entire country.

Mr. Thorpe has little sympathy, seemingly, for the Federal employees. To him a 10 per cent cut would mean nothing if it were made to apply upon every Federal employee. Perhaps one is not to be surprised at this attitude on his part, because he seems to be rather snugly taken care of himself. He need not be alarmed about any reaction growing out of a serious pay cut.

In the Washington Daily News of January 19 of this year, under the column regularly appearing in that paper known as "9.00 to 4.30," by C. A. F., there appeared a rather interesting article, which I am going to ask to be permitted to read at this time:

required $\leftharpoonup an increase of $\leftharpoonup or per cent." (Fill in the blanks with any names and figures you wish; I don't want this letter to be technical.)

A few years ago the United States Chamber of Commerce got along with a few rooms in the Mills Building, and with a few people—Elliott Goodwin, Dave Skinner, and a few clerks. Today it has a 4-story, $2,000,000 building, with several hundred employes, all supported by levies on business. Merle Thorpe gets $75,000 a year. Others are well paid—all by business.

Let me remark, Mr. President, that where we are responding to the economic urge now in aid of business in the United States, whatever expense is occasioned by the expense of the United States Chamber of Commerce is a tax likewise upon American business. The article continues:

Where does Thorpe, with his presidential salary, get off in criticizing Government employes receiving from $1,200 to $12,500? You may say Thorpe's salary is his own business, but is it when you consider the function of the United States Chamber of Commerce and the manner in which, through Thorpe, it is attempting to beat down wages?

Mr. Thorpe has made many addresses this last winter on the matter of governmental economy. Some of his declarations, as they relate to Federal expenditures, have been badly misshapen, to say the least. I have before me an address which he made during the winter, and which is reported verbatim in the March, 1932, issue of the Way-Bill, an industrial organ. I am not going to read at length from this address of his, but I do want to call to the attention of the Senate some of his statements, in that they may indicate the trend of thought of the man, and the thing which may be at the bottom of his demand, and the demand of those he represents, for Federal economies. He says:

First, the legislative department, Congress. spent in 1924, $14,000,000. It is spending this year $30,000,000: A large factor in that increase is the 33½ per cent increase in the salaries of Senators and Congressmen. The State Department in 1924 spent $14,000,000. Now it spends $16,000,000. The Treasury Department in that year spent $260,000,000. Now it is $310,000,000. The Department of Commerce spent $21,000,000. Now it is $53,000,000.

Some time before the adjournment of the Congress, or perhaps before this economy matter is out of the way, I shall address myself to the facts as they relate to some of these increases with reference to different departments.

In the case of the Commerce Department, for example, it is altogether unfair to recite that the costs of that department have increased from $21,000,000 to $53,000,000, without revealing that bureaus and commissions which were once a part of another department of the Government have since that time been transferred to the Department of Commerce.

He went on to state that the Department of Labor spent $6,000,000 in 1924 and now its expenditures are $14,000,000. He tells about the Department of Agriculture increase. Of the Interior Department increase he says that the department spent $328,000,000 and dropped to $78,000,000 due only to the fact, not to economies, that three of the large bureaus were transferred to other departments. The Veterans' Administration in 1924 cost $409,000,000 and this year $784,000,000. He recites the Board of Tax Appeals as another example of increase in Government expenditures; likewise the Radio Commission, the Federal Board of Vocational Education, and the Federal Farm Board.

Then, Mr. President, he comes down to those features of Federal expenditures upon which he harps most freely—the Federal Power Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Tariff Commission—all of which Mr. Thorpe and the United States Chamber of Commerce would be delighted to see dumped bag and baggage into the Potomac River. He points out that in the case of the Immigration Service there has been an increase in expenditures and shows his spleen, however, further on in his address by coming back and attacking the increased expenditures of the Interstate Commerce Commission, staying upon that subject through almost the balance of his address. He attacks, too, the Bureau of Public Health, the Children's Bureau, and other units of Government which have been set up to perform a service for the people.

Understand me, please, Mr. President, I am not one who will argue that there is not room for economies in each and every one of these departments. I think very material economies can be effected, should be effected, and are being effected with relation to all these units of our Government. I am merely reciting these assertions by Mr. Thorpe in order that I may show how thoroughly inconsistent are this man and those he represents in their great urge for economies in the Federal Government. If the United States Chamber of Commerce practiced in only a small way the economies which they would have the Federal Government practice, we might with some reason stop and listen to them.

Let me point out just how the expenditures of the United States Chamber of Commerce have grown since 1924, the same period to which Mr. Thorpe resorts in presenting the terrible growth of expenditures on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, in 1925, the total expenditures of the United States Chamber of Commerce were $2,096,000. In 1930 they were $4,061,000. Of course, after 1930 we would expect the United States Chamber of Commerce to be retrenching, just as the chamber of commerce is asking Congress to retrench in the matter of Federal expenditures. We find what the chamber of commerce is doing to accomplish this retrenchment to reduce its own expenses. The chamber of commerce is understood to have discharged only 4 men and 10 girls—and they are to be congratulated for that. The men and some of the girls were let out last fall, the rest of the girls very recently.

No salary cuts were made up to March 1, 1932, when there was put into effect a salary cut relating to all employees of the United States Chamber of Commerce. But, Mr. President, that cut which was made effective by the United States Chamber of Commerce does not compare with the cut which is being demanded of the Federal employees in the bill which is before us at this time. Just observe how severely they are dealing with their employees. This March 1 cut is one of 5 per cent as relates to all United States Chamber of Commerce salaries ranging between \$1,200 and \$5,000. Those employees enjoying salaries of \$5,000 to \$10,000 must take a cut of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Then poor Mr. Thorpe, who is numbered among those employees enjoying salaries between \$10,000 and \$25,000, or more, will suffer a cut of 10 per cent under the schedule. In other words, those with salaries of \$75,000 a year are going to suffer the infliction of a 10 per cent cut which is not different from the 10 per cent cut which is going to be laid upon the Federal employee who is drawing a salary of less than \$1,500 a year.

I look upon this entire program, which has been engineered so skillfully this past winter by the United States Chamber of Commerce, as being one of the most vicious, unfair undertakings ever known in American public life. I repeat that if the United States Chamber of Commerce would practice what they preach we might with some cause listen to their advice. But here we are to-day bent upon reducing the salaries of Federal employees enjoying salaries of only $1,500 a year or less, in the same degree and with the same severity that we would use in cutting the salaries of those Federal employees who are drawing pay in the higher brackets. I hope with all my heart that we shall not have to do it now, though that matter may have to come back here to another Congress, though we may have to resort to these drastic cuts as relates to Federal employees in the lower brackets. Let us levy a larger cut on those drawing salaries in the higher brackets, including ourselves and the Members of Congress, but let us not inflict at this time, of all times, that 10 per cent cut upon particularly those Federal employees residing in Washington who are having an exceedingly difficult time "getting by," if I may use that expression, upon their very limited salaries.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NYE. I vield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Has the Senator estimated what the loss of revenue would be if we exempted from the proposed reduction the salaries of all Federal employees now receiving $1.000 or less?

Mr. NYE. I have not, but I have heard the estimate which has been presented. One must admit that to exempt $1,500 salaries from any cut at this time is going to destroy a very large part of the saving that has been effected in the committee proposal before us at this time.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. My immediate question is this: Suppose we exempted from reduction all salaries of $1,000 or less, what loss in revenue would we suffer?

Mr. NYE. I have not heard that estimated.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If we exempted all salaries below $1,500, what is the estimated loss?

Mr. NYE. As I recall the figures, it is $57,000,000.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have heard a far less sum suggested.

Mr. NYE. Perhaps the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] may be able to give us that information.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I say to the Senator from New Mexico that I was propounding this question: Suppose we exempt from any reduction in salaries employees receiving $1,500 or less, what amount of revenue would we lose?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I answer for the Senator from New Mexico? We would get $35,691,000 with the $1,500 exemption. If we exempt the $1,500 class then our revenues from the plan would be as I have stated.

Mr. BRATTON. In other words, instead of saving $121,-000,000 we would save $35,000,000.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Subtracting one from the other means that we would fail to receive $86,000.000. How many employees has the Government who receive $1,500 or less?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from California that I placed in the RECORD a while ago a table giving all that information.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Very well. Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have in my hand a resolution adopted by the citizens of Buffalo protesting against the salary cuts carried in the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY CITIZENS OF BUFFALO IN PROTEST AGAINST GOVERNMENT WAGE CUTS

Resolved, That this meeting, consisting of citizens of the city of Buffalo, assembled this 29th day of May, 1932, in the Teck Theater, at Buffalo, N. Y., do hereby oppose the policy or doctrine that the circumstances of the day require wage cutting on the part of the Federal employees or other wage earners.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of this meeting that such a policy, in instances where the same has been adopted in the past two or three years, has not proven of value nor has it furnished any contribution toward the restoration of good times.

any contribution toward the restoration of good times.

Resolved further, That we believe such a policy has had just the opposite effect; that by reason of lowered purchasing power of the wage earner resulting therefrom that such a policy did not hasten the return of good times, but retarded the same.

Resolved further, That this meeting assembled this 29th day of May, do hereby register its support of the Hon. EDMUND F. COOKE, Hon. James M. Mead, Hon. Royal S. Copeland, and Hon. Robert F. Wagner in their unswerving opposition to a policy of wage cutting agitated at Washington.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to those Members and to the several other Members of Congress who supported our local national representatives in opposing a policy of wage cutting now being urged at Washington.

rage cutting now being urged at Washington

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator in charge of the bill desires to have a recess soon or whether he prefers to have the Senate remain in session some time longer.

Mr. JONES. I should like to remain in session at least until half past 5, if not later.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think a very large majority of Senators have a common purpose to effect as much economy in all activities of the Government and in salary expenditures as may be made commensurate with efficiency of the service and the maintenance of the necessary governmental activities. I do not believe there is any great difference of opinion or sentiment among the Senators in that regard. I am sure that my attitude has been and my votes on the different questions which have arisen have been favorable to the elimination of useless expenditures, trying to strike from the burden of Government duplications in the different departments and bureaus, and this has been my policy not only for this session but as well in all the years past.

As the question has heretofore arisen from time to time during past years, and especially in more recent years, I have been impressed with the problem of the wage earners, either in the Government service or in private industry and activities. To my regret, those who are drawing only a small wage have not always had friends and advocates at court.

Mr. President, I have witnessed in the Senate in days gone by, even during the prosperous days of the country, active and intense opposition to increases of $50 or $100 per annum in the salary of some employee who was only on the pay roll for probably $1,000 or $1,100 or $1,200 per annum, and yet at the same time or within probably one or two days of such strenuous resistance to the poorly paid employee receiving a little increase of $50 or $100 per annum in his salary, I have witnessed the same Senators rise on this floor and, with all the vigor and eloquence at their command. advocate an increase of salary of two, three, or four or five thousand dollars to some one who already was receiving eight, ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand dollars per annum. Of course, my desire to defend the Government's interests, to adjust salaries, and to effect economies has never yet led me into that character of attitude which I believe almost anyone would consider rather or even glaringly inconsistent.

In raising the additional revenue made necessary by the depressed condition which exists in this country, I think we all desire to raise whatever may be necessary from those who are able to pay. I have heard that phrase uttered and reuttered and reiterated in the Chamber time and time again during the present session of Congress and in previous sessions.

In considering and adopting the income-tax provisions, as an illustration, a majority of the Senate-and I shared in that view-took the position that the income tax should not begin to apply to a person until after an exemption of income sufficient to enable single men and women and men who might be the heads of families, with wives and children, writing the income-tax provisions it was provided that single persons should have an exemption of $1,000 free of tax.

We may call the pending question a question of salary or something else, but in its effect and in its operation it is one of the means by which we hope to balance the Budget, by which we hope to make money by saving money. We are going to contribute to the Government exchequer by a course of salary reductions. In framing the income-tax provisions of the revenue law we provided that there should be an exemption, which was reduced to $2,500, as compared with $3,500 in the old law for heads of families and for an exemption of $400 for each dependent minor. In proposing now to reduce salaries I see no reason for changing the policy and not allowing employees to have a reasonable allowance upon which to live before the reduction shall begin to apply.

I believe, of course, that in these times which are distressing beyond all description there should be a reduction in salaries that are a little greater than actually necessary for ordinary, everyday plain living. I am favorable to a substantial reduction; but I do not mean by this I am in favor of taking from the person who makes only $50 a month $5 a month or that I wish to take from the person who makes only $60 or $70 a month $6 or $7 as a deduction; I am not in favor of exacting from the person who makes a hundred dollars a month $10 a month. In the case of salaries over $1,200 or $1,400 per annum, I would favor making a certain percentage of reduction, but I believe that if we are going to reduce salaries-and we should-the reductions should be made upon a graduated basis as set forth in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

If we are to appeal, as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] did, to the patriotism of the Government employees, let those who draw salaries of $5,000, $6,000, $8,000, $10,000, $12,000, and more per annum rise to that higher degree of patriotism he so eloquently pictured and ask for a reduction in their salaries which will make a worth-while contribution to the total sum and which, forsooth, will not deprive them of, at least, a reasonably comfortable existence.

If we take 10 per cent away from a person with a salary of $500 or $600 or $1,000 a year, he or she, of course, can exist, but his or her problem is made just that much more difficult. In reference to salaries of $100 a month, a Senator said, "Well, a person in the humble walks of life could get along all right on that; let us take $10 a month from him." I said, "Oh, yes; of course I know one's station makes some difference in the demands upon him, but if you think it is easy for a person at the present time in the city of Washington and in other of the large cities throughout the country to live, except under the most circumscribed and humble conditions, on $100 a month, go out and take $100 a month and try it yourself; you will find yourself in a $20 or $30 room, with some one rooming with you, in a section of the city in which you would not care to live; you will find yourself buying your meals at the poorest class of café and often at 'Cheap John' eating places where you can get meals for 25, 30, or 50 cents; and you will find yourself having to purchase all your articles of clothing and other necessary wearing apparel at the very cheapest places where they can be purchased." So I invite those who would arbitrarily cut salaries of $50 to $100 a month as much as 10 per cent to go out and try the experiment a little while themselves and ascertain what the result is from experience. Yet there are those who want to take the 10 per cent toll from these small salaries. Many of those who advocate such policy think that a man with a salary of $4,000, $5,000, on up to $12,000 or $15,000, should only have the 10 per cent reduction applied to him. It is a drive for revenue by the route of salary reductions. Why such tender consideration for more fortunate and a heartless treatment for those with scarcely a living wage?

I would rather be fair with those employees who are getting such small salaries and reduce by more than 10 per cent the salaries of those receiving eight thousand, ten thousand, twelve thousand, and fifteen thousand dollars per annum.

to support themselves and their families. Consequently, in | That is what could be done. I made a little calculation of the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and I find that a person receiving $10,000 a year would have his or her salary reduced $1,450 per annum. That would still leave one receiving a salary of $10,000, $3,500, in round numbers, on which to live and meet the demands upon him. I think that would be a more righteous policy.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield. Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator analyze the Norris amendment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not the statistics for the entire amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is reading from

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; I just made a calculation under the Norris amendment on a $10,000 basis. The Senator will understand that the amendment is on a graduated basis and the rate of reduction increases on the larger salaries.

Mr. President, my good friend from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] appealed to the patriotism of those who now have scarcely sufficient salary upon which to live in a very ordinary and simple way. I appeal to the patriotism of those who are to-day drawing salaries of from $5.000 to $25.000 and appeal to them to make their contribution toward balancing the Budget and toward a reduction in Government expenditures, which all realize is essential at this particular time

Of course, only a blind man could not have realized what has been going on throughout the country for the past few months on the question of reducing small wages and salaries. Everyone knows the appeal for reduction has not come from the average, everyday American citizen; everyone knows the request has not come from the unemployed of the land that we should slash the salaries of Government employees down to a point where those who to-day are living in the most commonplace surroundings should have their salaries still further cut. That propaganda has been circulated and spread throughout the country in most instances by people who are enjoying incomes not of $600 to $1,200 a year-I will guarantee there is not one of them who receives an income of only $1,200 a year-but, in the main, this propaganda has been directed by people who are enjoying incomes, I will say by way of illustration, of from $10,000 to $100,000 per annum.

Mr. President, none of the unemployed are going to get any of the benefit of this reduction. There is no citizen back home, who is having a struggle with his little business. who is going to get any benefit from it. We have been in session for five or six months, and I have not seen or heard of the enactment of any legislation that has been of any material assistance or that there was any sound reason to believe would be of any material assistance to the unemployed of the country, or to those who are having a struggle to gain an honest livelihood.

We must and should make a big reduction in Government expenditures, but let us do the job with perfect fairness.

There is nothing new in this issue, Senators. Ever since my entry into public life there have been more or less of warring forces, one saying that those higher up should have greater compensation, and that those lower down in the salary scale or wage scale were getting too much, and their wages should be reduced. We know what a struggle we have had in America, covering a period of a quarter of a century and more, to get a reasonable wage for those in private employment, who for many years were compelled to labor for a mere pittance that was not sufficient to feed their families with reasonably sustaining food or to provide ordinary wearing apparel for their families, much less to give to them an opportunity to educate their children as those who were more fortunate in the matter of salary and of a competency were able to do.

I recall that when in my teens that was quite an issue. Some people thought that men who were making only $1.50 a day, who went forth at dawn to labor and worked until twilight, were receiving all the wages they ought to have, possibly in bricklaying, in carpentering, in painting, in various other lines of work; possibly some one who was working upon a railroad as a brakeman or as a fireman. Those people, good citizens, said, "We have had pressed down upon us for all these years and years a system of absolutely inadequate wages. We have had no opportunities. We feel that we are entitled to a little of opportunity"; and they began the struggle for better wages. They had to resort to organization. A great many who desired to preserve for themselves the great accumulations of wealth, and others who desired to preserve for themselves exorbitant salaries, opposed the efforts of these men to get a living at a reasonable wage. Finally, due to the patriotic sentiment of a great majority of the people of the country, not restricted to those who were directly interested but to the great body of the American people who believed in justice and in fairness and believed in building up the standard of living, the laboring people of the country, whether in the factory, in railroad employment, or what not, reached the point prior to the present panic where they were getting reasonably good

Now, of course, this depression has come along and has upset the situation very much; and the whole trend now on the part of a great many is just as it was of old, except reversed. Previously it was a matter of trying to check these workers, trying to prevent them from getting a reasonably good wage. Now, since conditions have gotten worse, the first thing that happens is that those of whom I have spoken want to pounce upon the people who are making only a small wage and reduce their wages and cause them to return to the old condition of insufficient compensation upon which to live in reasonable comfort. So when we come to the question of reduction of Government salaries they rush madly in and say, "We must make a reduction of 10 per cent flat," without taking into account and distinguishing between the lowest salaries and the highest.

They demand and insist upon taking the pound of flesh; so they say, "We will reduce even the very low salaries of $600 a year, $300 or $1,000 a year." When we get above these low salaries I want to make some reduction upon a graduated scale. I am not willing, however, to take just as great a proportionate amount from those in the lower brackets as from those in the middle and high salary brackets.

Some one said that the only fair way was to take from them proportionately. If we go into a restaurant to get a meal, upon one table we find a pound of steak provided for only one person. Upon another table we find only 2 ounces provided for another person. Somebody says, "We will take some of that away from each of them. We are going to reduce them"; so they take 10 per cent off of the 2 ounces and they take 10 per cent from the pound. Ten per cent of 1 pound leaves nine-tenths of a pound. That is a pretty good meal, in fact, too much, for almost anyone; but when you take 10 per cent off the 2 ounces, which was insufficient to begin with, you are liable to cause some suffering and some hardship to the person you deprive of 10 per cent of that small amount of food, while you have caused no hardship to the other person; you have caused no hunger or suffering.

If we were going to treat everybody alike, why was not that the policy heretofore in dealing with the question of salaries? I have seen an effort to get a little increase of fifty or one hundred dollars a year in a $1,000 salary or an eleven or twelve hundred dollar salary—not over 5 per cent increase, or certainly not over 10 per cent—and I have seen that brushed aside with indifference. Upon the next day, or a few days following, I have seen an effort to raise a salary of $8,000 to $12,000 a year, which represented 50 per cent increase in the salary; and that was cheerfully and cordially and zealously done, and the increase of 50 per cent in the salary was made, though it was already $8,000 a year.

What I am endeavoring to do is to represent those who have heretofore been unfortunate and discriminated against, whether intentionally or not, and are still in the very low salary brackets—six hundred, eight hundred, one thousand, eleven or twelve hundred dollars a year. Some people talk about increases in salaries, but those in the low-salaried brackets have not had any increases of any consequence. It is in the middle and higher brackets that the salary increases have been made, and not in these lower brackets.

I am very anxious to effect all possible economy. I think we can make, and should make, substantial reductions in the salaries above the actual ordinary living expenses. I am anxious to do that. I will support a policy of that character, but we must view the entire picture.

In this debate we have heard much about the maintenance of the Government, its credit and its security.

We did not hear anything of that kind when, in the early part of this session of Congress, we were pledging the credit of America for $2,000,000,000. I do not think we have ever heard it yet with regard to that particular legislation; yet that argument is used here. At that time I suppose most of those who are supporting this 10 per cent slash on the small salaries—and those only are the ones I am endeavoring to befriend, not the others; I want that distinctly understood. At that time almost everybody said it was a very patriotic thing to use the credit of the Government to the extent of $2,000,000,000. Of course, there were all kinds of rainbows of hope held out. Somewhere along this rainbow we were going to have ushered in prosperity for everyone; but, as it turned out, it was merely a hope.

There have been some benefits. I supported the measure. There have been some benefits in our financial circles, and for this I am thankful. I share the opinion that we have to do what we can to maintain our financial institutions, because our people generally and our industries throughout the country can not be segregated from our financial institutions. Under our system of business enterprise and of operation they are all interwoven, and if we injure one we injure the other. If we help one we indirectly, at least, assist the other

So I supported that legislation. The point I am making is that we must view the entire picture and see what has been the attitude in deliberating upon other situations here.

Senators, if we do justice as we see it by these poorly paid employees and refuse to make a flat cut of 10 per cent against them, I do not think it is going to have any effect whatever upon our financial stability or the condition of the country in any regard, except that it will be disappointing to a few people who have tried to propagandize this country into a frame of mind where it was disposed to pounce upon everybody connected with the Government.

From Members of the Senate and the House down through the Government service no one has been immune from this effort which has been made throughout the country. It is quite general. I think the standing of the average public official, wherever he is, in whatever capacity he may be serving, is at rather a low ebb, largely due to the absolutely vicious, wicked, and false misrepresentations which have been circulated throughout the country for selfish reasons.

Some one was talking to me the other day about what we see in the press, and I said, "I have always been a friend of the press, I believe in freedom of speech, and I never complain but let it go unnoticed." He said, "I tell you what I heard the other day. Whenever you read anything about a public official, divide it by 10 and believe about one-tenth of what you read and disbelieve about nine-tenths, and as a rule you will be right." I said, "I do not know that it is that bad, but, of course, they put their own color on everything. They leave out some things, and they say some things that probably will not be sustained by the record."

Anyway, this propaganda has been going on, not for the good of the country, but in the main for selfish reasons, so that some one could dominate and control and direct legislation of every character which may come before Congress.

Everyone has a right to his views. I would accord everyone that privilege, but wherever we differ on public matters, let us differ honestly, carrying on our advocacy of a policy in a fair way and in a manner considerate for those who may oppose us. Unfortunately, Congress has not had that consideration during this time of trouble. The focus of the vision has been very largely of a selfish character, and restricted to the views of the particular person or the particular interest seeking favors or to escape a public duty.

I have had in one mail, or possibly through a telegram, an appeal to me to balance the Budget, from certain people representing certain interests. The next day I would have a communication from the same source saying, "We do not think you ought to place any tax upon this particular commodity, or this particular business, or this particular industry."

Some people denounce Congress upon the one hand for the plan for balancing the Budget, after they appeal for action in haste, and in the next breath denounce the national lawmakers for putting something in the Budget-balancing revenue bill that affects their own particular interest.

We have had a lot of that kind of thing to contend with. I merely mention it as illustrative, and in order that I may emphasize the fact that a great deal of the sentiment may have been aroused throughout the country on the question of salaries, carrying it to the point of causing Congress to make a reckless salary reduction upon a flat basis of 10 per cent as affecting those in the smallest salary brackets, who practically have not a living to-day.

I do not mean the person with a two or three or four thousand dollar income, but I am speaking of the people with salaries in the lower brackets.

Mr. President, we did not know until yesterday what the Economy Committee was going to report. I expected that it would report some reductions in salaries, and I intended to support very substantial reductions in the higher and medium salaries, and I have so stated a number of times within the past two or three months upon the floor of the Senate.

To-day in thinking of economy I said, "I think probably there is some other direction in which we could also effect some economy," and I just glanced over the hearings upon the naval appropriation bill in the House. The bill was passed by the House, and the Senate committee has not reported it, so that we have not taken it up for consideration in the Senate.

I saw in those hearings that upon inquiry of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House a representative of the Navy Department, in connection with a question relative to automobiles, an item for buying automobiles, for paying the expenses and the outlay for chauffeurs for public automobiles furnished to officials, said that the Secretary of the Navy had a Lincoln automobile paid for by the Government; that each and every one of his Assistant Secretaries had a Packard automobile, paid for by the Government; that the head of every bureau in the Navy Department had for his use a Government Packard automobile.

This representative of the department said that the Secretary of the Navy had a chauffeur paid by the Government about $1,200 or $1,400 a year; that two or three of the Assistant Secretaries had chauffeurs paid by the Government. However, the House agreed to the appropriations for that purpose.

I say, Mr. President and Senators, that we should strike those appropriations out and reduce by $110,000, at least, the amount we propose to take from people getting only six or seven hundred dollars or a thousand dollars a year. The same condition in regard to the Government furnishing automobiles applies to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and all other department heads.

In these times of depression I want to commend to the country and to the Senate, in connection with furnishing Government automobiles to officials, the patriotic action and position taken by Speaker Garner, of the House of Representatives. He said that under the circumstances he did not care to use the Government automobile and have a chauffeur furnished him for that purpose. I do not know that I would have done that; but I think it was a patriotic thing for him to do, and I honor him.

I think those getting larger salaries ought to have their salaries reduced, under the circumstances, but I can not understand why it is that some of them have not tried to cut out such items as these automobile items. I can not quite appreciate that.

I am going to offer an amendment to the bill to strike from the appropriation bill for the Navy Department the appropriation for furnishing automobiles to any official in the department, except probably the Secretary of the Navy, and really he should not be allowed this luxury at Government expense. The same thing applies to the other departments. The Government is giving away probably a half million dollars annually for people to ride around here in Lincolns and Packards at Government expense, and they have but little use for them, as far as official business is concerned. These officials get large salaries. Why should they not buy their own automobiles and pay their own expense for operating them?

I want to see the spirit of economy made general, made indiscriminate, and applied to luxurious contributions, as it is here proposed to apply to those receiving a wage that is scarcely sufficient upon which to live.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator not to charge that up to the Economy Committee, for it did not have to do with that. I am in sympathy with the Senator's position in regard to that matter.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have the place marked, and will call it to the attention of the chairman of the committee when we take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TRAMMELL. We will cooperate. We cooperated yesterday to save $25,000 which was recommended for the purchase of periodicals for the Supreme Court. We will cut out probably $100,000 in the naval appropriation bill to cover the furnishing of Lincolns and possibly some Rolls Royces to people who have no use for them as far as official business is concerned. And if we go into all departments we can probably cut expenditures along this line by a half million. I am glad the chairman of the committee displays the spirit he does.

I am not criticizing the committee, but I think that every Senator should give this matter rather serious consideration. I am merely expressing some of my own views.

Sometimes in the day of panic and of distress we just run pell-mell and roughshod in dealing with public problems, and though our intention be the best do injustices. I think that in this instance 10 per cent cut in the salaries of people receiving six or eight hundred or a thousand or twelve hundred dollars a year would really be unwarranted, and, on the other hand, substantial cuts should be made in the salaries that can stand a reduction.

Probably the course of least resistance would be to swim along down stream with this propagandized sentiment all over the country, but I do not propose to let anything of that character influence me to do what I consider would be an injustice toward those receiving small salaries, and which would not be in the interest of the Government or of the people of the country generally.

Again I repeat, no unemployed is going to get the benefit of such action. The everyday citizen back home is not going to be helped by such action. The only thing is that such a policy would tend psychologically to cause a little more despair and a little more gloom throughout this country, not merely with the person from whom we take the money, but the psychological effect of it on the country would not be good.

It would probably affect assistance some people are extending to relatives and friends or needy people, because they will be deprived of that privilege. What I would like to see is a little more cheer and a little more optimism, and not so much pessimism. We can not bring a return of prosperity by optimism, but we can work a very destructive course by indulging day in and day out in pessimism.

Down in my State of Florida we had a rather disastrous time following the great boom in 1925. Almost everywhere one would go people were expecting to make a fortune over-they had succeeded. Then a year or two later deflation set in; the boom was all over, and calamity spread abroad throughout the entire State, everybody was more or less depressed and more or less affected. There was nothing to cheer one wherever he went. Enterprising, courageous, and progressive as the people of my State are, after about five or six months it dawned upon them that it was foolish to keep discussing these unpleasant experiences, and thereby making a bad situation worse.

I do not think any ordinances were actually passed by the city governments throughout the State, but by common consent throughout that enterprising Commonwealth word was passed from one end of Florida to the other, "We are going to quit talking about this disaster we have undergone, we are going to turn our faces about and march forward in the direction of progress, development, and recovery." That became the spirit—a spirit of optimism instead of a spirit of pessimism.

When this general depression came on Florida was just at the threshold of a new development; the people were becoming active in the different industries; our general conditions were greatly improved. Agriculture was reviving, not to a satisfactory degree of prosperity, but it was improving. Many of our cities and towns had begun to grow and develop, and general business conditions were getting decidedly better. Of course we have been affected more or less by the general depression, though I hope not so badly as has some other sections of the country. It is pathetic, of course, to have the terrible conditions that prevail in other parts of America; but had the people of Florida gone on groping around, complaining, and scattering despair and thinking there was nothing but a forlorn hope, they would not have made the recovery that was made before the general depression came on; and that is also true of all America as a Nation.

We have, of course, an actual condition to contend with; I realize that: but I believe the constant emphasizing of our unfortunate situation has assisted in making it far worse than it otherwise would have been. I hope the time has about arrived when our people generally will say, "We have a great Nation; we have inexhaustible resources; we have a patriotic people, a people of courage, who can combat any situation; the spirit of the forefathers has not yet entirely passed from the bosoms of the people of the present day and time; we can do something toward rescuing business and bringing back prosperous conditions in our country." I am sure that that will not detract from recovery. We have had entirely too much of the other kind of attitude. Almost every day in the Senate we hear it.

I am not going to mention the names of Senators, but just the other day a Senator who had not obtained exactly what he wanted in the tax bill, who probably preferred one particular source of taxation to another, when we thought we had about finished up a good day's work arose and made a speech of despair and despondency, and the stock market the next day broke from one to three points, not on account of his great influence on the financial world, though he is a splendid Senator and an able man; but things were rather wavering anyway, and when a very prominent Senator got up in the Senate and said that if we did not do so-and-so there was going to be some terrible disaster-that is the substance of what he said-it had an effect. His statement furnished a golden opportunity the next day for the short sellers to 'sell short; the stock market broke from one to four dollars a share. Such speeches do not do any

It is much more difficult now, of course, to bring about a better sentiment than it is to throw fuel on the fire and add to the general feeling of depression that prevails; but I think we have had a little too much talk about our troubles. When we had the tax bill about finished the other night one or two very patriotic and able Senators rose in their seats, after it had been stated that according to all the statistics that had been gathered from the experts the bill would balance the Budget, and began to occupy the attitude night and the next morning they woke up and thought that of doubting Thomases and said, "Well, now, you say we have provided revenue to balance the Budget, but will not this bill be two or three hundred million dollars short?" I am not lecturing anybody; I am merely saying that that kind of attitude in the country has not been conducive to any revival of business or any spirit of happiness to the American people.

I should like to see everybody gather in one common concord in every line of business and enterprise, including those representing the Government, and endeavor to remedy the situation and get our country once more going in its old way of prosperity, of happiness, and of contentment. If we make the public feel that the Government has become panicky and that there exists in the case of almost every Government official, legislative and executive, a perfectly maddening hysteria, how does the Senate expect the people of the country to have very much courage or to endeavor to restore better conditions?

I wish again to say that I am in favor of substantial reductions in the salaries, I will say, ranging from $1,500 up, but I am not in favor of a flat cut of 10 per cent in the salaries of $600, $800, $1,000, or $1,200 per annum, because I do not think it would be just.

Some Senators, in advocacy of this policy, have said, "You can cut them and the people will run here from all over the country to get the positions." I said, "Yes"—this occurred in the cloakroom but I am going to repeat it on the floor-"and if we should cut the salary of Senators to $5,000 per annum, it would take the Capitol and all the Government buildings in Washington and many of the parks in the city of Washington to hold the people, and able and capable ones, too, who would come here to take our places." So there is nothing in the argument that people would rush here to get the places. In these unfortunate times a great many people would rush to find shelter and food even if no salary were paid. I know I would if I were so unfortunate as to be without employment. I think it is the duty of those who are fortunate enough to hold positions which afford them salaries more than what is required for the ordinary necessities of life to make a contribution in the way of a substantial salary reduction.

I think the patriotic duty in that respect should be manifested in a greater measure on the part of those receiving larger salaries, because they can better afford the contribution. Therefore, I favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which fixes the reduction upon a graduated basis, upon the theory that those who are best able to pay should make the greatest contribution, which is the policy which has controlled very largely congressional action for years.

REFINANCING OF FARM MORTGAGES-LETTER OF LOUIS B. MAGID

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Louis B. Magid, a large grower of apples and maker of apple products in northeastern Georgia, in which he outlines a plan for the permanent refinancing of farm mortgages and discusses that question in an interesting manner.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator Walter F. George, Senator John S. Cohen, Congressman Charles R. Crisp, Congressman John S. Wood, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sirs: During the present session of Congress newspapers from time to time carried statements of discussions in Congress of the great need for farm relief. To the best of my knowledge, no real farm relief is in evidence so far, and, as the session of the present Congress is drawing to a close, and since undoubtedly it is the desire of Congress to really provide farm relief, I respectfully submit the following suggestion and hope that it meets with your approval, and that you will interest the present Congress in this plan in enacting same as a law.

I realize in submitting my plan that it is a very brief one, but I am sure that the details can be worked out to make it a workable and stable plan.

PLAN TO PERMANENTLY FINANCE AMERICAN FARMERS

1. The United States Government should create and sell a bond issue sufficient to refinance mortgage-distressed farms which are likely to be lost to the owner farmers by foreclosure or otherwise, the proceeds from the bond issue to be loaned to farmers on a long-time basis (possibly 50 years) at a low rate of interest, or the same that the Government will pay on its bonds, plus an additional one-half per cent to be paid by the farmers and to be placed into a sinking fund to take care of any losses the Government into a sinking fund to take care of any losses the Government might sustain on some of the loans.

In that way, the bond issue sold by the Government will be self-liquidating and self-sustaining, as the interest that the Government would collect on the farm loans would pay the interest on the bonds, and the annual amortization of 2 per cent paid by the farmers on the loan would likewise be the amount of money with which the Government could amortize its bonds.

For an example, Farmer Jones in Iowa owns a farm that is reasonably valued at $10,000. Jones should be able to secure a loan of at least 80 per cent of the value of the farm lands and 60 per cent of the insurable buildings and improvements, or in all $7,500. Assuming that Farmer Jones owes $6,000 to a bank, mortgage company, insurance company, or some individual, he would be able to pay off his mortgage and have enough left for crop production and at the same time be properly and permanently financed with the Government loan at a low rate of interest, and at a small annual rate of amortization to retire of interest, and at a small annual rate of amortization to retire

The benefits of this plan would be numerous and permanent in contrast to the present unstable financial condition and the great predicament and suffering to which the American farmers are now subject.

2. The bond issue which will aggregate several billion dollars should be in long-time bonds (possibly 50 years) and bear rate

THE BENEFITS

1. Farmer Jones would be enabled to retain his farm, which may have been in the family for a long time, and he will be enabled to continue living on the farm, operate the same, and make a decent living. It will enable him to remain a good citizen in his community, support his family, as well as civic and municipal institutions, besides being a producer of food and raw material needed by the American people for their sustenance and manufacturing operations.

2. As the farmers would be able to pay off their present mort-gage indebtedness to the banks, mortgage companies, insurance companies, or individuals, this would release these institutions from holding frozen assets, present over-due and maturing farm mortgages, and enable them to use this released capital in industrial channels, more quickly revolving than farm mortgages.

3. By the release of this enormous sum from frozen assets (farm mortgages), banks, mortgage companies, insurance companies, or individuals would be enabled to use their funds in newer channels for developing and carrying on home and foreign commerce.

4. It would enable banks, insurance companies, mortgage companies, and other institutions to collect the principal and over-due interest (on farm mortgages) and become solvent institutions in which the public would again have the confidence they once enjoyed.

5. The proceeds from the bonds sold by the Government would draw a considerable part of funds that are now hoarded, hidden and unused, unprofitable both to the people at large and the people who are hoarding this great amount of money. In other words, untold millions of dollars would be put back into circulation by the above plan or instrumentality.

6. The Government takes very little, if any chance of losing money by this undertaking to permanently finance American agriculture, and it is better to carry the above plan by simply lending the Government's credit to the farmers to create a dole system or the Government's credit to the larmers to create a dole system or stand by and see every respectable American farmer lose his farm and become a burden to the community. This would be especially true in the large cities where most of them flock or will do so, and so compete with the city people for the now almost non-existent jobs or employment. Since the plan is self-sustaining, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to put this plan into operation at the earliest possible moment.

SAFEGUARDS

1. One-half of 1 per cent, or any other sum that would reasonably insure a sinking fund, should be paid by the farmers in addition to the low rate of interest which would create a sinking fund to take care of such losses as the Government might sustain crops, or of reducing the same below the cost or investment necessary to prepare or make the crop, by the many unforeseen occurrences, such as (a) late spring or early fall frosts, (b) drought, (c) hail and windstorms, (d) floods.

The insurance should merely cover the actual investments of the crop making for that year, and a reasonable premium should be paid by each and every farmer being refinanced under this plan. As the hazards would be so widely scattered, the premium for the insurance would be very nominal, at the same time giving the farmer a chance to recoup the money invested in the attempt to make the crop should he fail for any of the above reasons. This would enable him to make a new start for the crop making the next year without being compelled to further incur additional indebtedness as heretofore.

the next year without being compelled to further incur additional indebtedness as heretofore.

The only hazard in the undertaking is the possibility that Farmer Jones, having borrowed $7,500 on his farm, is removed by death, is unable or is unwilling to pay the annual amount to reduce the loan and the small amount of interest on his loan. In that case the Government or the agency representing the Government could easily sell the property to some capable farmer that might be looking for a place exactly like that. Since the terms of payment for the property are so nominal and the rate of interest so low, it is believed that the Government would have no trouble to transfer the property or contract to some other capable farmer. capable farmer.

That the Government can not lose anything under this plan is shown by the following:

For example, the total loans made by the Government amount to $5,000,000,000. If the farmers will pay to the Government one-half of 1 per cent of this amount during the next 50 years, the amount the Government would collect in the sinking fund to take care of losses would be as follows:

to take care of losses would be as follows:

One-half of 1 per cent annually for 50 years would aggregate a total of $1,250,000,000, or 25 per cent of the total original loan. I do not think the Government would lose that much money in refinancing the American farmers.

Since the plan of permanently financing the American farmers is to amortize 2 per cent annually, each year the security to be held by the Government will increase in value. Besides the natural increment of property values when properly financed, uniformly operated, by self-respecting farmers owning the farms, and having no worry as to the indebtedness because of the small annual amortization, it would be a great inducement to each and every farmer to improve his place for himself and for his children's tuture.

In the past most farmers were financed under heavy annual interest charges, plus heavy annual amortization, and were under a constant financial strain to the detriment of his property operating and managing his farm property.

ONE HUNDRED PER CENT FARM RELIEF ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY FOR PERMANENT SUCCES

The colossal growth of this country began with the energetic efforts of the American farmer that built a prosperity and fortune in this country unparalleled in the history of man in any other country in the world.

It being true that the prosperity of this country started with the farmer, why not repeat this successful and positive past? Rehabilitate 100 per cent financially the American farmer to make a sound new start and when this is carried through, financial progress and stability will come to all lines of endeavor.

sound new start and when this is carried through, hnancial progress and stability will come to all lines of endeavor.

Many were the attempts made prior to and after the panic to rehabilitate the American farmers' financial condition, but of what did most of these undertakings consist? Nothing but patchwork, and the result has been accordingly a mass of confused uncoordinated efforts such as land banks, intermediate banks, Farm Board, and Reconstruction Finance Corporations to rehabilitate the financial chaos of this great country with practically no tate the financial chaos of this great country with practically no satisfactory, definite, or permanent results.

The present mortgage indebtedness of the American farm property is approximately $11,000,000,000. This is a large sum of money, but only a fraction of the real value of the farm property money, but only a fraction of the real value of the farm property mortgaged.

The mortgages are held principally by the farm-mortgage companies, insurance companies, banks, etc. All of these institutions have already foreclosed or are contemplating foreclosure that would practically place in their control the majority of the farming property of this country, and by this process leave millions of individual farmers paupers and beggars, and without a home or a visible plan of support for themselves and their dependents.

If this was all, it might be said, "It is just too bad for these millions of individuals who have for years and years been the mainstay and backbone of this country and made up the rural community that has provided the main purchasing power of the American manufacturers of needful and even articles of luxury." But the catastrophe does not end there.

The very mortgage company, insurance company, bank, and other ably insure a sinking fund, should be paid by the farmers in addition to the low rate of interest which would create a sinking fund to take care of such losses as the Government might sustain in the handling of these farm loans.

2. The Government should create a mutual insurance company where all the buildings subject to fire hazards would be insured and the insurance policy assigned to the Government, together with the mortgage.

3. In that way the farmers would receive a low rate of insurance, and as the hazard would be scattered all over the country, the rate of insurance would be very low.

4. The Government should create a crop-insurance company to protect the farmers from the hazards of losing all or part of their mortgage foreclosure.

But the catastrophe does not end there.

The very mortgage company, insurance company, bank, and other institutions holding these mortgages who are taking or will take possession of the millions of acres of farm lands and improvements thereon are just as bad off as the individual whose property they have confiscated by legal process, perhaps unwillingly but believed the mortgage company, insurance company, or bank have loaned money not belonging to themselves, but money belonging to stockholders, policyholders, and depositors, it immediately drags down to a par these people who lose their greatest savings intrusted to the mortgage company, insurance company, bank, and other institutions holding these mortgages who are taking or will take possession of the millions of acres of farm lands and improvements thereon are just as bad off as the individual whose property they have confiscated by legal process, perhaps unwillingly but believed in it necessary to do so in order to protect themselves. Since the mortgage company, insurance company, or bank have loaned money not belonging to themselves, bolders, policyholders, and depositors, it immediately drags down are taking or will take possession of the millions of acres of farm lands and improvements thereon are just as bad off

Here we have not mere millions of farmers made to become paupers but millions of other people who, by economy and self-sacrifice, saved and then intrusted their savings to these institutions to finance the farm mortgages.

If the verdict was that the American farmer has squandered the borrowed money, $11,000,000,000, in nothingness, then they should be left to their present state. But did they do that? No. The $11,000,000,000 was used intelligently and economically to improve the farm property, but because the farmer was never intelligently, economically, and sufficiently financed, he was defeated in his endeavors to maintain the mainstay of this great country by operating his farm under handicaps such as: ing his farm under handicaps such as:
1. Lack of proper and intelligent financing.
2. High rate of interest.

High annual reduction of his borrowing.
 High rate of taxes.

5. High cost of everything he bought.
6. High freight rates.
The spasmodic attempts to assist the farmer have done nothing

6. High freight rates.

The spasmodic attempts to assist the farmer have done nothing but lead the farmer to beggary. What the American farmer needs is a chance to save himself and leave him to his own resourcefulness of farm production with unhampered financial conditions and obliterate the greatest crime committed against the American farmer, which I now set forth.

When Congress passed the first bill authorizing the organization of national banking system, it said to the national banks "You are authorized to receive deposits from anybody and everybody and by no means overlook the deposits from the American farmer." It further said to the national banking system, "After you have taken the deposits from the farmer, do not lend him any money but you are at liberty with a free hand to lend money to every scheme, including the financing of so-called Wall Street speculation. It was then that the American farmer was doomed. It is a fact that ever since that period the American farmer was humbugged, tricked, and kept down to a point of slavery, because of the lack of proper financial credit to farmers.

He was compelled to purchase his supplies at a high cost and borrow his permanent and operating funds from whatever source possible, except from the protected banking system under the Government's control.

JUSTIFICATION OF PLAN POR SOUND AND PERMANENT REFINANCING OF

JUSTIFICATION OF PLAN FOR SOUND AND PERMANENT REFINANCING OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

Ambassador Mellon, while Secretary of the Treasury and head of the Debt Funding Commission, made the following statement before the House of Representatives Committee on Ways and Means January 4, 1926:

"Europe is our largest customer. Unless the finances of Europe can be restored, her currency placed on a sound basis, and her people able to earn and to spend, this country will not be able to dispose of its surplus products of food, materials, and goods."

Then he added:

Then he added:

"The entire foreign debt is not worth as much to the American people in dollars and cents as a prosperous Europe as a customer."

This being true, what is it worth to the United States to have the American farmer properly, permanently, and soundly financed, as the American farmer was and can be made again the best and largest customer of the American manufacturer, and bring about a change in the present deplorable condition of industry, unemployment, yes, even starvation and suffering of many millions of American citizens. In cents and dollars the American farmer is a much better and larger customer to United States commerce and is worth several times Europe's trade. And besides there is nothing like a home customer. ing like a home customer.

LOANS TO FOREIGN AGRICULTURE-WHY NOT TO THE AMERICAN FARMER?

In an essay published in 1927 in the American quarterly known as Foreign Affairs by the late Dwight W. Morrow, former United States Senator and at one time partner in the international banking house of J. P. Morgan Co., after careful investigation Mr. Morrow found that 128 bond issues of foreign governmental subdivisions, cities, corporations, and for agricultural enterprises, aggregating $15,000,000,000, were sold to the American investor in the space of a few years. (This exclusive of loans made by the United States Government to foreign countries and subdivisions thereof.) thereof.)

These loans were made to countries scattered the world over. Some of the names of these countries are known only to a few Americans and there was no security for these loans except the moral obligations of these cities, states, and governments. In fact, a great portion of the $15,000,000,000 was taken from the American investor and a great share from the American farmers, who are now in the greatest plight, to help agriculture in these foreign countries. That is why American surplus agricultural products can not be sold since we furnished money to produce wheat, cotton, and other products to these foreign countries and they compete with our American farmers. This stopped the sale and exports of our surplus of wheat, cotton, and other farm products. products.

Are the American people, through their Congress, going to vacil-Are the American people, through their Congress, going to vacilate for a moment in the fact of the above loans to foreign countries with no security whatsoever of their repayment to provide a small amount of loans to American farmers with an absolute 100 per cent security? And by doing so start the wheel of commerce in every line of industry in this country because the purchasing power of the American farmers of 30,000,000 people, according to our authoritative published figures, is approximately $25,000,000,000 annually. This is over twice the amount of money suggested in the positive plan to rehabilitate American agriculture. Not only for the farmer but for every American citizen, and a permanent help at no cost to the American taxpayers, as the plan of refinancing the American farmer is self-liquidating and a permanent neip at no cost the plan of refinancing the American farmer is self-liquidating and self-sustaining.

The loans we have accorded to foreign countries were not only for improving the pressing financial structures as balancing their annual budgets; I recall a loan granted to the Dutch East Indies of $150,000,000. To do what? To pay off its floating debt. It is not necessary to enumerate all the other loans made to help agriculture, but not to the American farmer. In fact, help was given to foreign agriculture to compete with American agriculture.

It is hard to comprehend the American Government and American bankers combining to lend large sums of American credit for the purpose of extending, improving, and financing Europe's agriculture when our own was, and is, in such distressful need.

If that was proper and good business, certainly it is even better business to extend the same credit to the American farmer, who is the best customer for American commerce. In fact, without the American farmer, commerce is what it is to-day—dead.

The purchasing power of 30,000,000 American farmers is our stake. For every conceivable article of home manufacture that can be sold to farmers in turn will have every whistle and every factory calling the unemployed back to work. This is what sound factory calling the unemployed back to work. This is what sound financing rehabilitation to the American farmer means to this Inhancing renabilitation to the American farmer means to this country!

The proposed refinancing of the American farmer is for productive purposes, with a constant recurring wealth to be produced from American acres for man and animal sustenance, as well as raw materials for the mills and factories. And if every American farmer was refinanced and rescued from his present hopeless plight, it would only require some $11,000,000,000.

In the words of Lloyd George, when the American people joined with European nations who "stumbled and staggered" in the World War, we find the United States spent $28,000,000,000,000 in money and more than 100,000 American lives and 200,000 wounded. The above was America's part in a destructive undertaking. Can it be possible that this great country would hesitate to help itself by refinancing on a positive-repayment basis with legal interest and mortgage protection for every penny advanced in mortgage loans to the major industry of American agriculture the beggarly amount of $11,000,000,000 in comparison to the extravagant, wasteful, and destructive expenditure of $28,000,000,000,000 plus the loans made to European countries which, perhaps, we will never collect, as we have no security. And for the proposed loans to American farmers, we will obtain excellent security.

CONSTRUCTIVE BUSINESS PROPOSITION

Reduced to a strictly business conservative proposition, all that is proposed in this plan is for the United States Government to assemble every available unemployed dollar through the means of an obligation to be issued and sold to the public in the open market that will carry a fair rate of interest to those who buy and invest in these bonds, and the proceeds from the bond-issue loan on a conservative basis and in a safe manner to rehabilitate the first and greatest and most necessary industry—agriculture. In on a conservative basis and in a safe manner to rehabilitate the first and greatest and most necessary industry—agriculture. In this plan no gifts, doles, no favoritism is contemplated, nor is there the remotest chance in evidence that one single dollar will be lost by our Government. Outside of the human consideration in the matter, it is a sound and businesslike proposition that will not only place the American farmer on a sound and self-respecting basis but will immediately open wide the flow of purchasing power of our manufactures, our trade, and our commerce in every conceivable line of industry that is now idle, stagnant, discouraged, and hopelessly at a standstill.

I am sure our Congress will see the wisdom of this plan enacted and hopelessly at a standstill.

I am sure our Congress will see the wisdom of this plan enacted into law, and many of the present ills will vaporize, and we will find ourselves a prosperous and busy Nation as before. It is absolutely vital to this country that the farmer be restored and the farming industry be made prosperous, secure, and self-reliant. Since the American farming industry is the backbone of the country, why not start rehabilitating that fundamental and major industry first in a substantial 100 per cent way?

Assuring you in advance of my appreciation of your efforts in this matter, and, too, you will have the appreciation of many millions of distressed farmers. With personal regards, I am, Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS B. MAGID.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Simpson B. Daugherty, D. D., pastor of the National Memorial United Brethren Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, we thank Thee that in spite of all of the testing circumstances through which we are passing this day Thou art still on Thy throne; Thou art still calling out the great hearts of men and women to carry forward that program that shall bring confidence and renew faith in the principles of our Nation, and in our lawmakers and in this great body in particular.

We pray, O God, that Thou wilt be in this session; that Thou will lead these, Thy servants, in the way of Thy choosing, and that out of their great work there shall come that plan that shall bring us out of darkness into the light, and that we shall be encouraged and challenged to go forth and bring the hand of the Great Physician to the fevered pulse of the world, and bring order out of chaos, and usher in a reign of righteousness and peace. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Clerk read the Journal of the proceedings of yes-

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, before the Journal is approved, I would like to have the Record show something with reference to yesterday's RECORD. A part of yesterday's RECORD is not correct as to what took place. I refer to page 11780 of the RECORD, in connection with the bill H. R. 491. I tried to explain that bill yesterday and was not permitted to do it. There is a lot of stuff that appears in the Record that was not said on the floor yesterday. I asked my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas, the Democratic leader, for an opportunity to explain it. He chopped me off. That was his privilege. I asked the gentleman if he had read the hearings and, consciously or unconsciously, he said that he had not. Now the RECORD shows that the gentleman said he read a 23-page report. Then, without giving me an opportunity to explain the bill, the gentleman said he would have to object because of the amount involved, and now I find a lot of stuff about taxes. I find stuff about 15-cent picture shows and 3-cent postage that was not said on the floor at all. I want the RECORD to show that if a bill is to be objected to, without opportunity to explain to this House, there are 20,000 people in my State that are interested, and if the Democratic leader from Texas wants to take that responsibility, it is his, but I want to say the RECORD is not correct in the above particulars.

I was denied the privilege by the distinguished Democratic leader from Texas of telling the Members of this House something about the bill and explaining the merits of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in order to show my reasons for objecting to that and other bills, I asked and obtained unanimous consent to extend my remarks on same.

Mr. PITTENGER. I did not hear it.

Mr. BLANTON. That is granted in the Record and is so shown on page 11771 in the Record, as follows:

Mr. Blanton. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record made to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows that the gentleman asked and received unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. I did it to explain my reason for objecting to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES AT TOMB OF UNKNOWN SOLDIER

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the Record a speech delivered by Hon. J. H. Shepherd, an employee of the House, at the memorial exercises held at Arlington Cemetery on

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what was the address and where was it delivered?

Mr. SANDLIN. It is an address delivered by Hon. J. H. Shepherd, an employee of the House, an ex-Union soldier, and was delivered at Arlington Cemetery at the memorial services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. J. H. Shepherd, of Berwyn, Md., over the National Broadcasting Co., on the occasion of memorial exercises at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery on May 30, 1932:

My fellow countrymen, it is a blessed privilege to give a message from this hallowed spot where thousands who served their country in her hour of need have their final resting place, in sight of the Capitol and under the flag of the Republic. It is fitting that the Nation should honor on this day not only those who gave "their full measure of devotion" on the battlefield, but also the survivors of the years of weary marches under burning suns who suffered hunger and cold, heard the thundering artillery, the shrieking shell, and the whistling bullet.

An English historian, describing a memorial monument erected by a city whose people had suffered a loss of 4,000 out of 7,000

An English historian, describing a memorial monument erected by a city whose people had suffered a loss of 4,000 out of 7,000 people by withstanding an enemy through siege and battle, said:

"A people which takes no pride in the achievement of remote ancestors will not achieve anything worthy to be remembered by remote descendants." The English people have received their greatest inspiration for great accomplishments in military, scientific, and literary excellence and their long struggle for liberty from that temple of silence and reconciliation, Westminster Abbey, where for centuries a grateful people have honored, in marble, their noble and great. The inspiration from the contemplation of these worthles has steeled the nerves and inspired the souls of her sons in the stress of battle to die for the glory of the empire.

Thousands have received inspiration for patriotic service to country from the contemplation of the noble shaft on Bunker Hill, which commemorates the spot where 1,500 American farmers repulsed again and again thrice their number with a loss of but 450, while 1,050 trained British regulars fell, in the first battle for freedom.

After more than 100 years of neglect the National Government

After more than 100 years of neglect the National Government has erected a shaft in commemoration of Jackson's victory, on January 8, 1815, over Wellington's veteran infantry, trained in conflicts with Napoleon's battalions in Spain. The British losses were 700 killed, with the commander, and a frightful loss of officers, 1,400 wounded, and 500 prisoners. The American losses were 8 killed and 13 wounded. Thousands who visit the beautiful city of New Orleans can now see this shrine of victory. But a few years are Tayas took over the Alegne for a persetual monument.

of New Orleans can how see this shrine of victory. But a few years ago Texas took over the Alamo for a perpetual monument, where 150 Americans held at bay for weeks an army of 6,000 Mexicans and laid down their lives to insure Texas independence.

Mount Vernon and the Lincoln Memorial receive a constantly increasing number of visitors who can not fall to be impressed with the debt we owe to the father and to the preserver of the With the dept we owe to the lather and to the preserver of the Union. As they read the words carved in marble of Lincoln's first inaugural they will now realize that his prophecy has been fulfilled. "We are not enemies but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

As the great war neared its close in 1865, with all its bitterness, with a near triumph in view, he says, "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

The fame of Abraham Lincoln has widened with the circling

The fame of Abraham Lincoln has widened with the circling years; more books have been written about him than any other man who ever trod this earth, more monuments erected by people of other lands than to any other man, honored for the noble sentiments which touched the hearts of the struggling masses seeking government by the people.

ments which touched the hearts of the struggling masses seeking government by the people.

Reconciliation between the people who expended four weary years and their best blood and treasure in that mighty conflict is now complete. The generation of sixty-one inherited the bitter controversies which began in the dawn of the Republic. The great armies, who displayed their dauntless courage, their patience, their suffering, melted back among their people and exercised their mighty influence in building a nobler and stronger Nation to bless not only their future generations but all mankind.

Let it never be forgotten that the war was fought by volunteers—a goodly number of boys in their teens. Those in the North utilized that training in obedience, reverence for law, ability to endure hardships and misery of body and soul to the building of a greater nation by a conquest of the prairies and mountains of the West. Thousands took up the trail to the West. The homestead act of 1862, signed by Lincoln, offered free lands to all who had the courage to brave the perils of the savage who ranged over this vast domain, and who, by tomahawk and scalping knife, determined to retain it. In covered wagons, with naught but the plough and a trusty rifie, in the course of 40 years they reduced the fertile prairies into productive farms. Great railroads were built. Cities sprang into active life. Public schools multiplied. They delved into the mountains and converted their treasures of gold, silver, and other minerals into use for man. These veterrans were the pioneers of the 10 flourishing States added to the Union. They delved into the mountains and converted their treasures of gold, silver, and other minerals into use for man. These veterans were the pioneers of the 10 flourishing States added to the Union. The men who followed the leadership of the incomparable Lee and Jackson returned to wasted homes, their entire labor system destroyed, the social system completely disorganized. Trained to obedience, reverence for authority, to look beyond the clouds and never despair, they took up the mighty task of a reconstruction made more difficult by legislation arbitrarily imposed on them and denied any voice in the Government by an arrogant and powerful majority. majority.

Robert E. Lee, recognized among military critics of other lands as one of the greatest military commanders in all ages, was offered the presidency of an insurance company at a large salary. Duty had been his guide in his stainless life. He took up the nobler task of the presidency of a university at a mere pittance to train young men. The keynote of his efforts to build character for patience, loyalty to truth, and an integrity which could withstand temptations of every sort, with unselfish consecration to labor for the common good. The few years, too few for the task but long enough to point the way to the people whose undying affection made his word as great in peace and as ready to obey as his order at the head of a great army. The veterans of the Confederacy by many thousands, in covered wagons with a few scant belongings, poured into that empire State of Texas and which has become one of the brightest stars of the Union.

North Carolina, availing itself of the privilege of placing two statues of its most illustrious men in Statuary Hall of the Capitol filled its long vacant place with the statue of Governor Aycock, son of a Confederate soldier. He gave his State a life of devotion to the cause of education. Robert E. Lee, recognized among military critics of other lands filled its long vacant place with the statue of Governor Aycock, son of a Confederate soldier. He gave his State a life of devotion to the cause of education.

After years of labor he overcame the prejudice of his people against public education and placed on its statutes laws providing for the education and taxation for it of both races. It was North Carolina's spirit of resurrection from poverty to prosperity. Alabama placed in the same hall a brave Confederate soldier, J. L. M. Currey, honored, not for his valor in war but for the patriotic and unselfish devotion of his great organizing ability and intellect to the cause of public education of both races from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. He was an orator, statesman, and educator.

The Woman's Relief Corps of Washington, a few months ago, presented to Vice President Curris and Speaker Garner a silk flag of our country. The first a son of a Union veteran, the second that of a Confederate, each reared in the hard school of poverty, but taught by work at an early age self-reliance, endurance, loyalty to truth, courage to stand by their convictions at all hazards. Both taught in the home the principles of the Divine Master as the surest guide in life, and the immortal life beyond. Each by continued contact with the common people and in the school of experience and by 30 years of actual service in Congress knows the practical needs in every department of this great Government. Each a thorough master of parliamentary rules of procedure, although opposed in politics. Each by absolute fairness and impartiality and by their genuine sincerity and amiability are today not only the best qualified for their often complicated and onerous duties but the most beloved presiding officers of both Houses of Congress in the past 50 years.

The mania of denouncing the Government, especially Congress, has been with us from the first session of the first one held.

There never was a more intelligent, sober, industrious, and patricic body than the present one now sitting day and night, wrestling with the gravest problems that ever confronted a people. Do not expect the Government to cure all your afflictions. Get busy at home to suppress lawlessness, spend the evening with your children, studying the history of your fathers, who, by courage, patience, and self-reliance, wrought out their own salvation and conquered for you the many blessings you enjoy.

Let the veterans of the late wars cherish Memorial Day, not as a day for sports but a day for honoring the glorious men of the past. A day of reconsecration to the principles of justice and of righteous living. To those veterans we of the Grand Army of the Republic commit the sacred duty of keeping Memorial Day sacred to holy memories of their illustrious fathers, who, by their blood and sacrifices, built this glorious fathers, who, by their blood and sacrifices huilt this glorious fathers, who, by their blood and sacrifices of peace will be greater than those of war, and you will leave as a heritage to your children something more worthy of remembrance than silver and gold.

Let us in the language of Pope's Universal Prayer be guided in this hour of sorrow by his appeal:

"Let not this weak unknowing hand

"Let not this weak unknowing hand Presume thy bolts to throw, And deal damnation round the land, On each I judge thy foe.

Teach me to feel for others' woes, To hide the faults I see, That mercy I to others show. That mercy show to me.

"If I am right, thy grace impart,
Still in the right to stay,
If I am wrong, Oh! teach my heart
To find the better way."

COST OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of economy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the question of a reduction of the cost of government is of such vital importance that it should challenge the interest and best thought of every Member of this body in order that the burdens now so heavily pressing upon the backs of the American taxpayers may be lessened.

I say to you, Members of Congress, there is no justification for the present enormous governmental deficit which necessitates an increase of the tax burdens of the people. Such deficit is solely the result of a mad orgy of wild spending of the people's money by those having charge of the Government.

The cost to the American taxpayer of the present bureaucratic government has become so burdensome that it is unbearable. Useless and extravagant bureaus, which have accomplished nothing but the expenditure of public funds, must be abolished. There must be a consolidation of departments to prevent the ever-present overlapping and duplication of activities.

A comparison of certain items of expenditure of public funds by the Sixty-seventh Congress, in 1923, with appropriations made by Congress under the present Hoover administration for 1931, reveals a vast increase in the cost of Government. I submit the following as a fair example of such increase:

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

(a)	Salaries to the Secretary of the President and personal services in the office of the President: Sixty-seventh Congress Appropriations, 1931	$74, 280 126, 120
	Increase	51, 840
(b)	Contingent expenses of President, including stationery, etc.:
	Sixty-seventh Congress	36,000
	Appropriations, 1931	43,500
	Increase	7, 500
(c)	Salaries of White House police:
	Sixty-seventh Congress	55, 540
	Appropriations, 1931	103, 200
5	Increase	47,660

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

(a) Salaries and other personal services in the District of Columbia;
Sixty-seventh Congress Appropriations, 1931	201, 250 348, 095
Increase	146, 845
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE	BRX IN
(a) Salaries and personal services in the District of Columbia:
Sixty-seventh CongressAppropriations, 1931	472, 520 736, 000
Increase	263, 480
(b) Miscellaneous expenses:
Sixty-seventh Congress
Appropriations, 1931	198, 000
Increase	42,000

Under the last Congress of President Wilson's administration the total appropriation for the Department of Agriculture amounted to $31,475,386, but under the present administration, in 1931, the Department of Agriculture received appropriations in the total sum of $220,288,164, an increase of $188,812,796. The farmer has received practically no benefit from this enormous increase, for he is now receiving only about one-sixth as much for his products as he received under the Wilson administration.

The following is a comparison between certain appropriations for the years 1925 and 1931:

	1925	1931	Increase
Legislative establishment Independent offices Department of Commerce Department of Justice Department of State Department of the Treasury	$14, 648, 136 411, 216, 020 24, 123, 472 24, 277, 141 15, 246, 097 269, 354, 848	$29, 520, 710 1, 169, 249, 797 61, 300, 936 42, 247, 989 18, 778, 462 372, 556, 973	$14, 872, 574 758, 033, 777 37, 177, 464 18, 020, 848 3, 532, 365 103, 202, 125
Increase of the 6 departments under the Hoover administration			934, 839, 153

The total appropriations by Congress for 1931 for the various governmental organization units, exclusive of appropriations for interest on the public-debt retirement, amounted to $4,129,015,062.95. It has been estimated if the cost of local and State governments be added it would make a total of more than $12,000,000,000 which the people are compelled annually to pay to support the various arms of the Government. That means that the per capita expenditure for governmental expenses in 1931 was $100 for each of our 120,000,000 of people, or $400 for each average American

It is thus seen that the sum of $380 was expended by the American people during every second, night and day, in 1931 for the purpose of maintaining and supporting government.

The fact is that the administrators of our Government have ruthlessly and unnecessarily expended the people's money. In the last four decades our population has increased 100 per cent, the national wealth has increased 450 per cent, but the cost of government has increased 1,000 per cent.

The public was shocked by the recent announcement that 11 luxurious limousines had been purchased with the people's money for the use of the White House.

When the new Department of Commerce Building was constructed, without reason or justification, the Government provided a private elevator for the exclusive use of the Secretary of Commerce to keep him from coming into contact with the people. The public is now paying a girl to operate and a guard to protect this private elevator. It has been stated that this building contains 12 bronze doors alleged to have cost $5,000 each, or a total of $60,000. There are 60,000,000 of people in our land each of whom is worth less than the cost of one of these doors. I say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, the people are justly aroused and they will not longer stand this unjustifiable expenditure of their money.

Thus the reason for the present deficit and the necessary tax increase is explained by the enormous increase of the cost of government under the present administration.

THE ECONOMY BILL

In a sincere effort to effect economies in the Government and to reduce the burdens of the people, the Democrats in the House introduced the economy bill recently passed by Congress.

Personally, I believe this question which so vitally affects the welfare of the Nation should be considered by the people as Americans rather than as politicians, and it is to be regretted that the President has seen fit to make a political football out of this tragedy he brought upon the Nation. By misleading statements he would confuse the minds of the people in an effort to divert their attention from the present terrible distress into which they have been plunged by his administration of the Government, but the people will not be fooled.

When Congress convened the first of December, the President appealed for the cooperation of both political parties in passing legislation providing for a moratorium on foreign debts and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation sponsored by him. At the time of the passage of the moratorium act, the President failed to advise Congress of the critical condition of the Treasury. I voted against the moratorium because I felt that it was solely for the benefit of the international bankers, and that the amount of such debts would be saddled upon the American taxpayers.

The President later informed Congress that his administration of the Nation's business had caused a governmental deficit for the fiscal year ending June, 1931, of over $900,-000,000; for the year ending June, 1932, a deficit of more than $2,000,000,000; and for the year ending June, 1933, an estimated deficit of slightly less than $2,000,000,000. The deficits for 1931 and 1932 were fixed and could not in any way be changed by the present Congress. They had been caused solely by previous Congresses under the present administration, and the present Congress had nothing whatever to do with causing them. Notwithstanding the President's party had complete control of both branches of Congress and all departments when the deficits for 1931 and 1932 were caused, no effort was made to provide for such deficits nor to cut appropriations to prevent the further mounting of such deficits. Not one word was ever uttered about balancing the Budget until the Democrats had obtained a bare paper majority of only one House of Congress. The President merely placed the deficits for 1931 and 1932, which he had been three years in creating by his extravagance, at the door of this Congress without any concrete suggestions and asked it in one month to rectify his three years' mistakes.

Under an act of Congress of June, 1921, there was created what is known as the Bureau of the Budget. This law gives to the President the authority to request the bureau to make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling him to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made. Saturday morning, May 7, 1932, I called Col. J. Clawson Roop, Director of the Budget, and he informed me that President Hoover had never called on the bureau for any such study and report. It is at once apparent that his plea for economy coming after Congress had already passed on appropriation and economy bills is nothing but a political gesture.

Although there was nothing that could be done to change the enormous deficits for 1931 and 1932, the Democratic House determined to hold the 1933 deficit as low as possible. The law requires the President, through the Budget, to make an estimate and request for the various appropriations. The appropriation for the Department of Agriculture was the first considered. The amount requested by the President called for an appropriation of $186,264,405. The committee began to cut out items that might be dispensed with in times of stress like the present. When the committee began to make these reductions, the President's Secretary of Agriculture protested.

In spite of this opposition the House reduced this appropriation $14,171,120 below the amount asked by the President in the Budget. The Congressional Record, May 6, 1932, page 10018, contains a detailed report showing the savings effected on each of the appropriation bills thus far considered by the House. The appropriations by this Congress in the bills already passed have been over one-half billion dollars less than 1931 and over $200,000,000 less than President Hoover requested in his Budget.

These reductions were made over the opposition of the President's official family. If Congress had given just the departments already considered the amount President Hoover requested, it would have cost the people $200,000,000 more. The present administration has caused the largest deficit and the present Congress has reduced appropriations in the largest amounts in the history of the Nation.

I was, of course, disappointed that certain major economies in the economy bill were defeated. The largest item of economy in the bill—the consolidation of the Army and Navy Departments—was strenuously opposed by President Hoover and the Republican leaders in the House, who worked against, voted against, and secured its defeat. This was the major proposal of the economy bill, carrying with it savings of more than $100,000,000. In this crisis it was a tragedy for the President and his party, in the first attempt of Congress to effect real and permanent economy by consolidation of departments, to defeat such effort.

Since the President in his political message given to the press seeks to blame Congress for failure to pass the economy bill, it might be elucidating to look at the vote of the members of the President's party on this major economy in the bill. The record shows that 150 Republicans and 60 Democrats voted against this consolidation with a saving of over $100,000,000, and 109 Democrats and 48 Republicans and Progressives voted for same. I am glad to say that the record shows that the 12 Democratic Congressmen from Missouri, namely, Barton, Cochran, Lozier, Dickinson, Johnson, Romjue, Fulbright, Williams, Shannon, Milligan, Cannon, and Nelson, all fought and voted for this, the greatest saving in the bill, as well as for the many other economies in such bill.

I and the other Missouri Democrats voted for the law passed by this Congress reducing our own salaries as Congressmen. I thought that we should evidence a desire on our own part to economize.

The Hoover administration proposes to continue its wild orgy of spending of the people's money by obnoxious taxes upon the people including an increase in postage, a stamp tax on bank checks, and other burdensome taxes. I am opposed to, and voted against, these taxes. Personally, I believe that what the country needs is a wise reduction in governmental expenditures rather than an increase in taxes.

The Democrats have only a bare paper majority in the House, and in order to effect economies or pass remedial legislation they must have the cooperation of the Hoover administration, which controls the Senate and all other departments of the Government. The record shows that it is not receiving such cooperation. The tariff bill passed by both Houses of this Congress for the purpose of removing some of the iniquitous provisions of the present tariff law to revive commerce met with a presidential veto, and the bill passed by the House to restore commodity prices is now threatened with similar final defeat.

I say the time has come when we must apply the axe at the very root of governmental extravagance and stop all useless activities. For my part, I intend to vote for measures to effect such results regardless of what course others may pursue.

Let us return to a plain, simple, judicious, economical administration of the Government in the interest of the people.

Mr. Speaker, may I say it is to be regretted that it has been necessary for Congress to consume so much time in an effort to efface the deficit caused by the present administration, for there are many other serious conditions facing the country which must be remedied.

It is said by some that if remedial legislation were passed, it would meet the same fate and defeat as the tariff law passed by this Congress. Let us pass such legislation and let the President answer to the country for his veto. Our farmers, our laborers, and the average business man are in ruin and despair, and it is our duty now to enact legislation which will relieve them in their terrible distress.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to discuss, if possible, the Glass substitute for the Goldsborough stabilization bill; and with that in view, and also in view of my desire not to interfere with the Private Calendar, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on that subject to-morrow afternoon after 4 o'clock, at which time the consideration of the Private Calendar will probably be concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that the custom has been not to grant unanimous consent for a future date to address the House. The Chair feels confident that if the gentleman will ask that permission to-morrow morning it will undoubtedly be granted to him.

Mr. SNELL. I agree to what the Speaker has said. There will be no objection to doing that to-morrow.

FRANK P. ROSS AND EARL A. ROSS

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from consideration of the bills H. R. 12065 and H. R. 12066, and that these bills be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the chairman and the ranking member of each committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I have consulted the chairman and the ranking members, and it is agreeable to them

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire what the subject matter with reference to these two bills is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They are minor bills with reference to claims of two young men, in an effort to correct some homesteading errors. The bills were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, because the text would make it appear that it had to do with forest-reserve lands. The Senate is changing the bill to make it public lands, which would naturally go to the other committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HON. CHARLES NEWELL FOWLER

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the membership of this House the death of the Hon. Charles Newell Fowler, a former Representative of the fifth congressional district of New Jersey.

Mr. Fowler served as a Member of the Fifty-fourth and seven succeeding Congresses, his service covering a period of 16 years. Mr. Fowler was a distinguished member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and served as its chairman.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present two privileged resolutions electing minority members to committees.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 246

Resolved, That Hugh I. Shorr, of West Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Joint Standing Committee on Printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a further privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 245

Resolved, That JOHN E. WEEKS, of Vermont, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee on Patents.

The resolution was agreed to.

HON. FRANK MURPHY

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the constituency of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Frank Murphy, something which I consider one of the finest things which has come to my attention since I have been in Congress.

Mr. Murphy called me about 20 minutes ago from his hotel, where he has been very sick for the past few weeks, and he said the doctor had allowed him to dress, and he was able to get downstairs this morning and telephone. He said: "If you need my name to complete that petition for the soldiers' bonus, I will be glad if you will give me an hour's notice to get out of my sick bed and come down and sign the petition."

Now, I want to say to the membership of this House that I was not surprised at Mr. Murphy's attitude, because I know his fine courage and gameness as well as his interest in the veterans. He has always been in favor of the bonus. I want the veterans in his district particularly to know that he is willing to get out of his sick bed to come down and help them.

Mr. BLANTON. FRANK MURPHY, of Ohio, is for everything that is good. I indorse every word the gentleman has said about him.

CLYDE SHELDON

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Private Calendar. The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5053, for the relief of Clyde Sheldon.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250 to Cldye Sheldon, the same being remission of a fine paid by the said Clyde Sheldon on October 9, 1929, for fishing in a closed area contrary to the form of the statute whereas it was not discovered until too late that there was no fish stream in the closed area and consequently the facts charged in the information did not constitute a crime.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANTHONY PETER DE YOUNG

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1185, for the relief of Anthony Peter De Young.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Anthony Peter De Young, formerly a water tender, United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a water tender on the 25th day of September, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GEORGE DEWEY HILDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1190, to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of George Dewey Hilding.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who reported the bill that I have objected to other bills of similar purport even from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and also from the committee on which I have the honor to serve.

Unless there is some special merit in this case I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Wisconsin would ask the gentleman from Michigan who introduced the bill to give him the reasons behind the bill, I feel quite certain he can do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not concerned as to who gives the information. I have objected to similar bills. I would like to give the gentleman an opportunity to advance any reasons why a bill of this character should pass. Otherwise I shall object.

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection and give the gentleman from Michigan an opportunity to explain the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take up the time of the House if the gentleman is going to object to the bill. The facts are fully and clearly set out in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

FRANK E. EVANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2087, for the relief of Col. Frank E. Evans, United States Marine Corps. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AGNES C. REDER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9004, for the relief of Agnes C. Reder.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to Agnes C. Reder for lands embraced in her enlarged homestead entry, Billings 029518, and her stock-raising homestead entry, Billings 029541, upon fulfillment of the usual requirements, but without reference to the limitations of the act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 391).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HARVEY COLLINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2213, for the relief of Harvey Collins.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harvey Collins, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States: Provided, That no pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "held and considered to have been honorably," and insert the words "deemed to have been."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "discharged," insert the words "under honorable conditions."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ELMO K. GORDON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2844, for the relief of Elmo K. Gordon.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elmo K. Gordon, former seaman, first class, the sum of $648, being the amount due him for salary for one year at the rate of $54 per month, and said amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due because of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LAKE B. MORRISON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4166, to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Lake B. Morrison, late of Captain Horner's company, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 29th day of September, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HELEN H. TAFT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5385, granting a pension to Helen H. Taft.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have consistently objected to bills granting pensions to the widow of Theodore Roosevelt and to the widow of Woodrow Wilson, although the Congress did finally pass them, and I object to this bill. I think it is a bad practice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If the House is willing; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Texas that he has been opposed to the granting of a pension of $5,000—

Mr. BLANTON. Five thousand dollars each year for life. Mr. STAFFORD. To the widows of former Presidents—Mr. BLANTON. She not being indigent and not in necessitous circumstances.

Mr. STAFFORD. Notwithstanding that, we have granted a pension to the widow of former President Roosevelt, and during a Republican administration, to its credit, we granted a pension to Edith Bolling Galt Wilson. It is generally known that Mrs. Wilson was not in the position Mrs. Taft is, that she had an estate of her own and is interested in a large jewelry store on the Avenue; yet, carrying out the established policy of the Government, we granted her that honorarium. Now, as to the widow of President Taft, it is well known that when he ran for the Presidency of the United States his half-brother, Charles P. Taft, financed his campaign. It is well known that after he had been defeated for the Presidency he had to undertake private employment, and that he left no large estate.

Mr. BLANTON. His brother, Charles P. Taft, has one of the large landed estates in Texas, down in the district of the Speaker, in the Rio Grande Valley, some of the finest property in the world.

Mr. STAFFORD. But Mrs. Helen Taft and the former Chief Justice were not the recipients of that inheritance.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but this widow of our former distinguished Chief Justice is in comfortable circumstances.

Mr. STAFFORD. On what does the gentleman base that statement?

Mr. BLANTON. Just on my investigation; and I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very pleased to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of granting a pension of $5,000 a year as long as they may live to every good widow in the State of Wisconsin? If the gentleman is in favor of that, I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Regular order, Mr. Speaker! Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather unfair for the gentleman to demand the regular order on a proposition of this kind. It is only fair, in view of the precedents already established, that we have a little discussion of the matter.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I withdraw the demand for the regular order, if we are going to have general debate.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as I am concerned, I want the gentleman to put everything in the Record he can to support this unwarranted proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I realize that my advocacy of this proposal, perhaps, is not popular in my district but when the Government of the United States has established a policy, as we have with respect to the widows and near relatives of Members of Congress, granting them an honorarium of $10.000—

Mr. BLANTON. I am against that, too, and I hope it soon will be stopped.

Mr. STAFFORD. Nevertheless, we have adopted such a policy, and it is not fair to single out one widow for disadvantageous consideration, as we are doing in this case. We have adopted the policy—and it is a commendable policy—of granting such a pension. The gentleman from Texas does not wish any widow of a former President of the United States to live in want.

Mr. BLANTON. And I do not want any widow in Wisconsin to live in want.

Mr. STAFFORD. That has no application here.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to treat all widows in the United States alike.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then extend to Mrs. Taft the same allowance as Congress has to Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Wilson.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

PUBLIC SERVICE COORDINATED TRANSPORT OF NEWARK, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 259, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves $122,442.43, which is too large a sum to be passed on by unanimous consent. This bill passed the Senate on January 20, 1932; and if we pass it now by unanimous consent in the House, it will cause the said sum of $122,442.43 to be taken out of the Public Treasury and paid to the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J. This bill was originally introduced for the sum of $137,442.43, and the claim at first was for the sum of $152,442.43, for alleged cost of restoring main-line tracks, car house and storage tracks. The railway company itself removed and reconstructed the car house. It kept no cost records. Representatives of the War Department who audited the account for removing the main-line tracks and distribution system asserted that the amount claimed for this work was excessive. Under the circumstances I can not permit this $122,442.43 to be taken out of the Treasury by unanimous consent. Therefore I object.

SETH B. SIMMONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5450, for the relief of Seth B. Simmons.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Seth B. Simmons, who was a member of Company M, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 19th day of December, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CON MURPHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 611, for the relief of Con Murphy.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I would like to be recognized to offer two amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire whether this inquiry occurred prior to the enactment of the employees' compensation act.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Yes; it occurred prior to the enactment of that act. The injury occurred in 1910 or 1912, and the act was passed in 1919, and for that reason the claimant could not take advantage of the provisions of the act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it has been the consistent penses. I am concerned policy of this Congress not to extend the provisions of the construction of the door.

employees' compensation act to injuries that occurred prior to the date of such enactment, and therefore I am constrained to object.

NEWARK CONCRETE PIPE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 689, for the relief of Newark Concrete Pipe Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and there is hereby appropriated for such payment, to Newark Concrete Pipe Co. the sum of $1,824.41, in full settlement for damage due to explosions at naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926,

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$1,824.41" and insert "$656.20."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JULIA KERR O'BLENESS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1222, for the relief of Julia Kerr O'Bleness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Ohio. In my judgment, this amount ought to be reduced to the amount of her expenses.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. There is no objection to that. It is my purpose to ask to substitute the Senate bill, where the amount is reduced to $2,500, and that is approximately the amount that was expended.

This old lady was injured by a revolving door.

Mr. MOUSER. What is the number of the Senate bill?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. S. 326.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman wherein was the Government at fault when this old lady was injured?

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. The door was so constructed that it was dangerous. There was a step just outside of this revolving door. There were others injured by the door in minor accidents. This is all set out in the statement of the custodian of the building and the Treasury Department. It appears there was fault on the part of the Government in the construction of the door and the placing of it so near the step. The door was removed and another constructed very shortly after the accident.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is difficult for me to conceive that the Government would place a revolving door in such a way that it would be injurious to life.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit, the building has been constructed a number of years, and probably a revolving door was not contemplated at the time it was built. A revolving door may not have been contemplated in the original construction. The step was close to the door, so that made it dangerous.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not conceive that the Government would establish a revolving door in a place that would be injurious to life. I can conceive that this old lady, in her decrepitude, ought not to have been there without an attendant or in the custody of some other person.

Mr. MOUSER. As a matter of fact, the door was constructed in a faulty way, so that it did not revolve, but came back against her and knocked her over, down the steps. It was a faulty construction, and was immediately replaced by a new door.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. The gentleman from Wisconsin speaks of the decrepitude of the old lady. If she could walk, she had a right to be there.

Mr. MOUSER. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the gentleman from Ohio has agreed to accept an amendment reducing the amount to actual expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not concerned about the expenses. I am concerned about the allegation of the faulty construction of the door.

Mr. MOUSER. The door was so constructed that it did not go around, but came back and knocked her down the

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with the statement made by my colleague, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there is a similar bill on the calendar, and, without objection, the Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 326

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Abram G. O'Bleness, of Marietta, Ohio, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States on account of injuries received by his wife, Julia Kerr O'Bleness, now deceased, on November 6, 1928, caused by being struck down by a revolving door in the Federal building at Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorneyfee amendment to the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

HARRISON SIMPSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1903) for the relief of Harrison Simpson,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I ask the author of the bill if this complainant was entitled to compensation?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, this is not my bill and I have no interest in it. The claimant is not a resident of my district. This is a bill that was introduced by the late Mr. VESTAL, and that is my only interest in it. He was vitally interested in this claim. This boy was injured in the House Office Building. He got a splinter in his eye that at first seemed not serious but which later necessitated the removal of the eye. He did not file his claim within the year. The purpose of this bill is to permit him to file his claim for compensation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then there will be no objection to having the usual form for that type of claim substituted for the bill, with the proviso that no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of the act?

Mr. PURNELL. That is customary, is it not?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to waive the statute of limitations in the application filed by Harrison Simpson, a former employee in the House Office Building, Washington, D. C., for compensation under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, in order that he may receive the same consideration as though he had applied within the specified time required by law. by law.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Earon of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Harrison Simpson in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Harrison Simpson had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MINOR CHILDREN OF JAMES P. CONWAY, DECEASED

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2684) to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act to the widow and minor children of James P. Conway, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is their objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I ask the author of the bill whether he is willing to have a substitute therefor in the usual form?

Mr. BLANTON. Is this one of those bills that goes back of that act?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman is mistaken about that. I am sure it is not one of those that go back. I do agree that the form of the bill should be changed so that it will be a waiver.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Why did this man wait 6 years and 15 days before he made any application? It occurs to me that that is a long time for a man to make up his mind as to whether or not he is injured and entitled to compensation from the Government.

Mr. SWING. He was injured on the leg and subsequently the scar developed into a growth, and when it was operated upon it was found to be of a cancerous nature. He died. He was only 15 days over the statute of limitations.

Mr. BLANTON. It was 6 years and 15 days after the

Mr. SWING. I am sure the gentleman is familiar with the origin of cancer, and that a bruise is one of the recognized origins of cancer. We do not pass upon the merits of the claim here. That has all to be proven before the commission which we have set up for the purpose of making the determination. They have doctors and experts of their own who will examine the matter and make certain the Government is protected.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from California can not accuse anyone of his colleagues of not having gone along with him on big propositions, because they have helped him out wonderfully, but I can not go along with him where a man is injured 6 years and 15 days before a claim is ever filed against the Government for compensation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Here is the case of an employee of the Government who does not file a claim for compensation because he believes that his injury is slight. He does not make any demand upon the Government because he figures that he has not received much of an injury and he does not put the Government to any expense because of that. Subsequently, years later, it is found that he has a cancer. This man ought to get consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. I guarantee to both gentlemen that if they will get some medical works and some medical experts' testimony, they will find that a bruise occurring six years and 15 days before the discovery of cancer is not the producing cause of the cancer.

Mr. BLACK. The evidence here is that it was the cause of the cancer.

Mr. BLANTON. Was it the evidence of laymen or of expert doctors?

Mr. BLACK. Of medical experts. Does not the gentleman think that a man who does not file a claim for a slight injury should have that much consideration shown him if it is subsequently found that he had a real injury?

Mr. BLANTON. The Government is an easy mark. Many people wait and wait, and finally when they need money they begin to file claims against the Government.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman certainly does not want to close the door against this widow having her day in court?

Mr. BLANTON. I want the Government to pay its honest debts. This is a gratuity at most.

Mr. SWING. No, no.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government owes honest debts. What is the gentleman doing to get this petition signed to pay the soldiers what the Government owes them? Is the gentleman doing anything to get that petition signed?

Mr. SWING. I want them to have their day in court.

Mr. BLANTON. They had their day in court when they were fighting in the trenches in France, and they ought to have been paid in cash when they came back.

Mr. SWING. The commission says they have not yet passed upon the merits of this. We can trust them to do so. They are not easy marks.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, regular order! Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FRANK A. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2685, to extend the benefit of the United States employees' compensation act to Frank A. Smith.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the author of this bill if he will ask to have the bill changed by substituting after the enacting clause the form used for compensation cases?

Mr. SWING. I am willing to do that. I thought what was in here was a mere waiver of the statute of limitations.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is shown that this injury, if there were an injury caused under such circumstances, occurred back in 1922. That is 10 years ago, and it is now too archaic. It has moss on it, and I object.

ELLEN N. NOLAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3414, for the relief of Ellen N. Nolan.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, with the understanding that the gentleman from Massachusetts will accept an amendment reducing the amount from $5,000 to $2,500, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ellen N. Nolan the sum of $5,000 as compensation for the injuries sustained by being knocked down and injured by an automobile owned and operated by the Post Office Department.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

Page 1, line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of $150 shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of $150 on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mouses: Page 1, line 6, after the amount "$2,500" insert a comma and the following: "in full settlement of all claims and demands against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARTHUR RICHTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3790, for the relief of Arthur Richter.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object. This injury is alleged to have occurred on August 18, 1916, before the enactment of the employees' compensation act. At the time he was injured he was paid $840 by the Labor Department. This is one of the class of cases that we have universally objected to, Members on both sides of the aisle, and I object to this bill.

CHARLES L. BARBER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3845, for the relief of Charles L. Barber.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether this injury occurred in service?

Mr. DOXEY. I appreciate the gentleman's right to object, and I wish to say that this bill is a bill of my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Coller], who is unavoidably detained and can not be here.

This injury did occur in service, while the man was acting in the capacity of a superintendent of concrete work, where they were doing revetment work in Vicksburg, Miss. There is no question about it. It is recommended by all departments, by the Secretary of War, Mr. Hurley, by the Judge Advocate General's office, and by Gen. Lytle Brown, Chief of Engineers, and it is a meritorious bill, and I am sure the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is this difference, that here we establish a law known as the employees' compensation act to provide for civilian employees injured in line of duty. This claimant filed his application to gain the benefits of that law, but it was rejected because it was not filed in time. We have proceeded on the policy not to pay lump-sum appropriations to persons injured if they had a civilian status to come under the purview of that act. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, unless the gentleman from Mississippi is a member of that committee and can perhaps inform us, why in this instance the committee reports in favor of a lump-sum appropriation, while in all other instances the policy is to bring the claims under the benefit of the employees' compensation act.

Mr. DOXEY. I will be delighted to answer the gentleman if he will permit. We all appreciate the work of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and he and I worked together on these claims while I was a member of the Committee on Claims.

This accident occurred by reason of a Stillson wrench being dropped 110 feet by a workman and striking this man.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming he has a claim against the Government, why does he not attempt to avail himself of the Employees' Compensation Commission?

Mr. DOXEY. Simply because he did not want anything except to continue in his employment, and as an employee of the Government he felt he was temporarily injured, and he never filed any claim or did anything until he became totally disabled.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi does not understand the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman seems to be of the mind that this bill ought to be referred to the Compensation Commission for its regular action, and to waive any right by not having filed the claim on time. Why not submit this to them and let them pass upon this as they do all other cases?

Mr. DOXEY. This man is a total invalid.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the Compensation Commission is familiar with this case; the chairman says in the report here that he knows him personally. The man's rights will not be jeopardized by submitting the case to the Compensation Commission. Let us pass the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin and go on with the bill.

Mr. BLACK. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what rule the committee follows in this character of cases? In this case the committee reports a lump-sum appropriation as compensatory damages for the injury received. In many instances the committee recommends that claimants have the benefits of the employees' compensation act. What rule does the committee follow in doing it one way in one case and another way in another

Mr. BLACK. The committee has adopted no set policy in the handling of these cases. Each case is considered on its own merits.

The Member introducing this bill wanted a lump-sum settlement. The lump-sum settlement seemed to be fair enough, so the committee reported the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the age of the person making the claim?

Mr. BLACK. He is a pretty old man. Mr. DOXEY. He has a wife and three children.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is his age?

Mr. DOXEY. I could not say.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for the claimant to have payment of a little every month in the form of an allowance rather than to receive a lump-sum payment of $5,000?

Mr. DOXEY. Those who know the facts say this is a most meritorious claim and they recommended it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not talking about the merits of the claim.

Mr. DOXEY. It is most reasonable, and if he is to receive any benefits, they will have to be given him soon.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman insists on sending it to the Employees' Compensation Commission, I think it would be perfectly agreeable to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collier], and I know it would be agreeable to the

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, Mr. Speak-

Mr. BLANTON. The understanding is the gentleman from Wisconsin is going to offer an amendment which will be accepted by the committee?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to give the gentleman from Wisconsin time in which to prepare his amendment I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the result of the session yesterday and of the session thus far to-day demonstrates clearly the fact that you can not improve much on the old rules of the House. It took but one session, under the new consent rule, to show the House it was nonworkable. In a whole afternoon, under the operation of the new rule, but three bills were passed, whereas yesterday in a session of less than half a day many good bills on the Private Calendar were passed and more have been passed this morning. The House has done well to abandon the new rule and return to the old one under which we can operate.

The gentleman has his amendment ready, so I yield the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out all after the enacting clause of H. R. 3845 and insert in lieu thereof the

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Charles L. Barber, who purports to have suffered injury while employed at Vicksburg, Miss., for an injury sustained July 6, 1923, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Charles L. Barber had made application for the benefits of said act within the oneyear period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALFRED H. JACOBSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4309, for the relief of Alfred H. Jacobson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MOUSER. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I think when the House hears the statement of facts in connection with this case it will believe it is a most meritorious case and will use its influence on the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MOUSER. I am objecting on the ground of giving $2,000 for a secondhand Buick. I am not taking into consideration the liquor question at all. If the gentleman, in behalf of the proponent of the bill, Mrs. Owen, who is unavoidably absent in Florida, will consent to an amendment making the amount $750, I shall not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from New York advance any good reason why this claimant did not accept the Buick when it was offered

Mr. MOUSER. As a matter of fact, although you can gather the inference that the Buick which was confiscated had liquor in it, the accused was acquitted and the court ordered the car returned to him. However, the claim is that the car offered to be returned was not his car, and that somebody in the service got rid of the Buick which was confiscated.

Mr. BLACK. Here is the case of a man who was arrested by prohibition agents and his car seized. He was charged with a violation of the law.

Mr. MOUSER. Let us leave the liquor question out of it. Mr. BLACK. He was tried, he was acquitted, and the car was ordered returned to him. However, the car was never put in the Federal warehouse. It was used for a long time by Federal agents, and they wanted to return to him an old Buick. Now, here are the equities in this case: First of all, he was tried and he was acquitted. He had to go to the expense and through the mental distress of a trial, and he had a new car taken away from him.

Mr. MOUSER. It was not a new car.

Mr. BLACK. It was practically a new car. The Government officials, instead of keeping it in a safe place, used the car for a long time. In view of all these circumstances, the man not being properly arrested, being acquitted, and the car ordered returned to him, I think this relief should be accorded him.

Mr. MOUSER. It appears there was cause for his arrest, but a jury of his peers refused to convict him.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The Treasury Department, which had charge of this matter at the time, makes this statement: That the record shows the agents actually found six bags of contraband whisky in the car at the time of seizure, which fact would justify the seizure and lawful custody from the time of seizure until the time of the defendant's trial. They further state that every effort was made by the prohibition administrator's office to return the car to him, but that he refused to accept it on account of its condition, and they report the condition was due to storage while they were holding it lawfully, and I object. Bootleggers and citizens must quit carrying six bags of contraband liquor in their cars, and if they do not the Government has the right to confiscate their cars.

Mr. MOUSER. We can not go back of the jury's verdict. Mr. BLANTON. I do not care what the jury's verdict was. In my lifetime I have represented men charged with murder. Probably they should have been hanged, but some of them were acquitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS FOR ADVERTISING SERVICES RENDERED THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4948, for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill seeks to pay $2,989.17 to newspapers in Chicago. New York, and Houston, Tex. Some of those who usually object seem to have cold feet, because this is a newspapers' bill, and it happens that one is a newspaper in my own State. I am as reluctant as any other Member to have them hit me because I stop their bills. I do not get much from the press boys, anyway. They rarely ever give me a square deal. That, however, has nothing to do with my objection. I do not believe that it is just to pay them this $2,989.17 out of the Public Treasury. Therefore, I object.

MRS. JOHNNIE SCHLEY GATEWOOD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5059, for the relief of Mrs. Johnnie Schley Gatewood.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me we are going pretty far afield when we recognize liability on the part of the Government for the accidental discharge of some weapon that injures one of the audience who has gone there for her own edification. I think the amount is altogether out of keeping with the circumstances of the case. This is to pay $5,000 to a person who is still living and who appears to have been accidentally injured while observing some demonstration.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, in May, 1928, what is commonly known as a sham battle was largely advertised in the local papers to occur at Fort Benning, Ga. An invitation was extended to the public to witness the battle. A grand stand was erected for the guests. This lady, who lived at Columbus, Ga., some 8 miles from Fort Benning, attended the sham battle, together with thousands of others. Many thousand people were there upon invitation, and while this lady was seated in the grand stand something like a hand grenade or a block of T. N. T. was thrown out in front of the grand stand by some of the soldiers engaged in the demonstration. It exploded, and a part of the shell struck her on the right cheek and caused a compound fracture of her cheek and tore her jaw all to pieces and made a wreck of this poor woman.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the gentleman say about the finding by the Hon. Patrick J. Hurley, commonly known as the Secretary of War, who says:

The board is of the opinion that all commissioned and enlisted personnel observed all safety precautions, and the accident was not due to the negligence of anyone concerned.

Mr. WRIGHT. They were trying to exonerate the Army. They had a board, and they examined the matter to see whether these things were permissible to be used in a sham

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just one minute, if the gentleman will permit. Some years ago, perhaps more than 10 years ago, the Congress was presented with numerous claims for damages to those who witnessesd these exhibition drills, and if my memory serves me right we passed a law banning the War Department from giving such maneuvers in the presence of the public for the purpose of safeguarding the Treasury. This performance was largely for the benefit of the audience and was of no real benefit so far as military maneuvers were concerned, and I am wondering whether this law is applicable to this character of maneuvers.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know of any law that bans these demonstrations.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I have seen the gentleman's panorama picture exhibited here, and it is very convincing, but there are many people who are hurt by private corporations and who are still in pretty good shape, except for some disfigurement of their looks, who get less than $2,500 from juries in the courthouses. I think this woman probably ought to have something. I submit to the gentleman from Georgia, who is fair about everything, that $2,500 ought to be the full amount of the compensation paid by the Government, especially when the Government was not at fault, and if the gentleman will accept that amendment I am sure the House will pass his bill.

Mr. MOUSER. If the gentleman will permit, clearly at this demonstration of warfare, this woman was not there as a trespasser, but was there as a guest of the Army, seated in a grand stand erected for the purpose of viewing the maneuvers.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is true. Mr. MOUSER. There is a legal liability there, in addition to the moral obligation, and the sole question, as the gentleman from Texas suggests, is the extent of her damage, and I would like to hear from the gentleman from Georgia on that question.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, when the gentleman states there is a legal liability, the gentleman is in error. The United States Government in law is not responsible for any tort of any of its agents or employees. That is a fundamental proposition of law.

Mr. MOUSER. If the gentleman will permit, just because the Government is a sovereignty and can not be sued, that does not mean that an agent of the Government can not be negligent.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, as a matter of gratuity, we do pay for torts.

Mr. MOUSER. Not as a gratuity.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, a gratuity; but as a legal proposition the courts have held time and time again that the Government is not responsible.

Mr. MOUSER. You can not sue the Government without the Government's consent. That is why we bring in these private bills.

Mr. BLANTON. This was a tort of an agent of the United States, if a tort at all.

Mr. MOUSER. May I ask that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] be given three minutes? I am interested in this matter, and I think it is very important.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have already explained the circumstances of the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am more interested as to the equitable mood that the gentleman from Georgia finds himself in with respect to the amount of damages.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am going to touch on that now. have already explained the circumstances under which the accident occurred. This lady was taken immediately to the post hospital, where she remained for about 10 days under treatment. She was under treatment afterwards for many months. She suffered the most excruciating pain. Her whole system was shocked, and she is a nervous wreck. These photographs taken in December show that before this accident occurred in May she was a fine-looking lady.

Mr. BLANTON. I am convinced that this woman ought to have something, but what is troubling me is the amount. I think $2,500 would be more than she would recover if the suit was against a private corporation.

Mr. WRIGHT. If this case went to a jury, they would have awarded not less than twelve to fifteen thousand dollars. She is simply a wreck, and her health is gone. I do not want to be put in the attitude of trading, but I will accept an amendment reducing the sum to $3,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Johnnie Schley Gatewood, of Columbus, Ga., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of personal injuries sustained by the said Mrs. Gatewood on the 25th day of April, 1928, at Fort Benning, Ga. While a guest at a firing demonstration conducted by United States military authorities and officers at said Fort Benning, and while occupying a seat provided for guests by said authorities and officers, an explosion occurred which caused the said Mrs. Gatewood to be struck by a large piece of metal, or other hard substance, and which metal or other substance struck the right jaw of said Mrs. Gatewood, breaking the same in two places, and knocking out four of her lower teeth, causing her great pain and suffering and resulting in her being permanently disfigured and injured.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stafford: Beginning in line 10, strike out the remainder of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1.000. $1.000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. A. W. PEARSON AND PEABODY HOSPITAL

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5538, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Dr. A. W. Pearson, of Peever, S. Dak., and the Peabody Hospital, at Webster, S. Dak., for medical services and supplies furnished to Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GRISWOLD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some one if these Indians hold their property in fee simple?

Mr. BLACK. That I do not know. The Government owes money for taking care of these Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Indians, as the report shows, are indigent Indians. I was going to ask some member of the committee whether they had any tribal funds from which this money could be paid, rather than from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRISWOLD. From an examination of the report, one would infer that they held these lands in fee simple.

Mr. BLANTON. If this had been a proper charge, there would have been a way for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to have paid all just claims against them for services rendered. As they were not paid by the Indian administration, we have a right to assume that in this claim of Doctor Pearson for $4,764.40, and the Peabody Hospital, at Webster, S. Dak., for $11,675.97, are improper charges. They are charges made without the law, and that being the case, I do not think the bill ought to be passed by unanimous consent. I am going to object. I object.

MARY ELIZABETH O'BRIEN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6191) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Mary Elizabeth O'Brien, a former employee of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this is another compensation case. I expect there will be no objection to substituting for the text of the bill the text now used?

Mr. BLACK. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Mary Elizabeth O'Brien, a former employee of the United States Veterans' Bureau, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That section 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Mary Elizabeth O'Brien, a former employee of the United States Veterans' Bureau."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the committee amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Eaton of Colorado as a substitute for ne committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Mary Elizabeth O'Brien in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Mary Elizabeth O'Brien had made application for the benefits of the employees' compensation act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits hall account price to the approval of this eat." shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to inform the House why he believes this is the proper form for these bills?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the form now under consideration was drafted by me last year after it was called to my attention that the form that had been adopted by the Committee on Claims granted to the claimant damages from the time of the injury. When bills in that form were under consideration during the last Congress I took occasion to ask the then chairman of the Committee on Claims. Doctor Irwin, as to whether he considered the claimant would be paid retroactively for the injury, and he stated unequivocally that it was his understanding that the claims dated only from the time of the passage of the act. Yet during the summer recess we learned from the Employees' Compensation Commission in one or two instances where the claimant, against the established policy of the Government in all similar instances, had received an allowance dating back to the time of the injury. One Doctor Reed received a nice large sum at the expense of the taxpayers because of that interpretation. Since then the Congress has taken the precaution to place the saving clause in the bill that no compensation shall accrue prior to the enactment of the act.

Then there is another form sometimes used where there is a question as to whether the claimant really suffered injury in the employ of the Government, and we place the responsibility of determining that fact upon the Employees' Compensation Commission, because we are not constituted, even the Committee on Claims, to determine whether an injury itself was the direct result of the employment. We should leave that to the constituted authorities. I hope the gentleman will follow the form, especially as to the saving clause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to, the committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary Elizabeth O'Brien."

ALEX BREMER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7411) for the relief of Alex Bremer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $700 to Alex Bremer in full settlement of all claims which the said Alex Bremer has against the Government of the United States, under the terms of sale agreement dated June 30, 1919, being the price agreed to be paid by the Government for 35 acres of land at the price of $20

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

D. M. LEYPOLDT CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8306) for the relief of D. M. Leypoldt Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of D. M. Leyboldt Co. for certain oats delivered to Fort Crook and Fort Robinson, Nebr., and to allow in full and final settlement of the said claim a sum of not to exceed $966.39. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $966.39, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "Leypoldt" be corrected, in line 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EUSTACE PARKS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8468) for the relief of Eustace Parks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MOUSER. I object.

JOHN N. BROOKS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9225) for the relief of John N. Brooks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BENJAMIN BRAZNELL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 468) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin Braznell. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

KLIZABETH B. EDDY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1214) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STILLWELL BROS. (INC.)

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1683) for the relief of Stillwell Bros. (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on this for a moment. I am not the author of the bill, but I am conversant to some extent with it. I think if the gentleman will turn back to No. 189, he will find that we passed a companion bill to this one on all fours with this bill.

This is a bill that was first introduced in the last session of Congress. It passed the Senate and died in the House. Now it is being considered at this session of Congress. It carries with it all the merit in the world. I am sure the gentleman must admit this, because it is merely giving to this subcontractor the right that was given to the general contractor. In other words, reimbursements were given the general contractor on contracts entered into with the Navy Department prior to the declaration of war, where wages, through no fault of the contractor, had been increased. You gave this right to the contractor by an act of Congress in the Sixty-eighth session. In the interpretation of this act by the Navy Department, the department would not permit the subcontractor to receive the thing that you gave the general contractor. If the gentleman will turn back to Calendar No. 189 on this calendar which is being considered to-day, he will find that identical relief was given that is asked in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall not enter into any invidious comparisons, but the case is not identical at all. I well remember the other case. The other case had the favorable recommendation of the department. In the first place, this has not. Further, even the principal contractor in this case did not have his claim recognized, the Government found on two occasions that the claim was weak, both in the case of the principal contractor and the subcontractor.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the gentleman's attention to what the Secretary of the Navy has stated, as follows:

It was admitted that at the time the public-works officer gave instructions to complete the north end first, no objection to this method of procedure was raised, and no protest, either verbal or written, was made. It was also admitted that no specific claim for extra compensation was made until the work was practically completed.

They were informed by the bureau that their case was weak and were given no assurance of relief.

Mr. HORR. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, if the gentleman will remember, this claim was originally presented for some $27,000. Part of that was for wage increase, and the other part was for a condition prevailing in construction, which was the weak part of the claim referred to in the report. The department did recommend payment of $5,986.92, the amount of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This is from the Department of the Navy, a recent report on the case, and it goes directly to the merits of the case; not to the amount but to the merits of the entire claim.

Mr. HORR. But there were two particular things in mind in the merits of the case. One was the claim for construction and the other for wage increase, and the report does show that the general contractor was awarded $42,865.73.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is doing a patriotic act in objecting.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLARENCE G. YOUNG

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2697, for the relief of Clarence G. Young.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HERMAN INGMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2698, for the relief of Herman Ingman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Herman Ingman, assistant postmaster at Marysville, Mont., the sum of $230 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for services rendered in hauling the mails between Marysville and Silver City, Mont., from May 5 to June 30, 1930, both dates inclusive.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES HAMMERED PISTON RING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2325, for the relief of the United States Hammered Piston Ring Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the appropriation Aviation, Navy, 1929, act of May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 636), is hereby made available in such sum as may be necessary, but not exceeding $4,492.73, for settlement by the Comptroller General of the United States, on principles of equity and justice, the claims of the United States Hammered Piston Ring Co., under contract with the Navy Department No. N-156-a-4703, dated June 10, 1929.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GROVER CLEVELAND BALLARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5971, for the relief of Grover Cleveland Ballard.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to raise the point with the gentleman from Mississippi as to whether or not in passing this bill we will establish a precedent whereby any veteran who obtains private treatment will later on ask the Government to reimburse his physician for the treatment given. There are many emergency cases in which the local doctor should be paid for the care of the veterans, where it is impossible to get them to a Government hospital in time to save their lives by an emergency operation. I have a great deal of sympathy with this claim, but I want it understood that until the law is changed, bringing within its provisions the thousands of veterans who must have treatment from local doctors, this shall not be considered a precedent to pay other claims of this nature.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi to offer an explanation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this will not establish a precedent, and because we did not want to make it a precedent, we did not introduce a general bill.

These are the facts: This boy had his foot shot off in the war. He lay on the battlefield for a good long time, I think possibly 12 hours or longer. He was finally taken to the rear and his leg was amputated. It gave him a great deal of trouble and he suffered intensely with it after he came back home. He went to a Veterans' Bureau hospital and had it amputated again, and the information I get from him is that they went off and left him while he was under the influence of ether, and while he was coming out from under the ether he fell off the bed. Whether he hurt his leg or not I do not know, but I do know it continued to grow worse. and the Veterans' Bureau advised against another operation The leading physicians of the country told him if he did not have it attended to he was going to die. He went to Doctor Campbell, of Memphis, one of the best surgeons in the country, had it amputated, and what we are asking is for the payment of the actual expenses of the amputation. It will not be a precedent for other cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us have a clear understanding as to what obligation is going to be put upon the Government in cases like this where a World War veteran presents himself for hospitalization attention in a Government hospital, becomes dissatisfied with the recommendation of the Government surgeons, and thereupon goes to a private surgeon for relief. Are we going to have claims presented for the reimbursement of the charges made by the private surgeon?

Mr. RANKIN. No. It was just stated this would not establish a precedent.

Mr. STAFFORD. The statement is not sufficient. The question is whether the facts will not make a precedent. Just a moment ago we had the gentleman from Washington citing a private subcontractor's bill as a precedent.

In this case I am not considering the amount. I am considering whether it would establish a precedent.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. I do not think the gentleman need have any fear of the bill establishing a precedent in view of the gentleman's explanation, because in this case this veteran went to a veterans' hospital and the doctors, after examination, refused to operate. His leg got in a serious condition back home. There was no alternative for him other than to accept the advice of his family doctor or this specialist in Memphis, Doctor Campbell, that a further amputation would be necessary in order to save his life. That certainly is not creating a precedent. The claimant received the injury in line of duty overseas, and this is the aftermath of it. It is not an appendix case or a case of gall bladder trouble which might not be service connected. I am not trying to oppose the gentleman; I am simply explaining the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. This was down in Louisiana?

Mr. MOUSER. No; he got his leg shot off in battle.

Mr. RANKIN. His leg was shot off on the western front. Mr. MOUSER. The facts of the case are the Veterans' Bureau hospital refused to amputate or operate, and he went to the other doctor and got relief; is that right?

Mr. RANKIN. The Veterans' Bureau advised against another operation.

Mr. MOUSER. But he got relief from the other operation.
Mr. RANKIN. His family physician advised that another operation was necessary if he was to live.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will be here to help us in cases where there may be abuses of the privilege of the Government where World War veterans refuse the hospitalization or medical services accorded them by the Government.

I shall not press the objection, because, perchance, he may have been in critical condition that necessitated private employment, but let no one here use this as a precedent for other cases.

Mr. RANKIN. Nobody is going to have his leg shot off for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but they may have an appendix taken out or some little peewee ailment.

Mr. RANKIN. Well, I would not call it a "peewee" ailment for a man to have his leg shot off and injured so that he had to have it amputated three times.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $246.75 to reimburse Grover Cleveland Ballard, an ex-service man of the World War, for money expended for medical and surgical service in reamputating his leg, which was shot off below the knee during the World War.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I am glad the gentleman from Mississippi has presented this bill to the House to-day.

The Veterans' Bureau, because of the technicalities of the law, has no authority to pay for medical or hospital care unless the veteran files an application in duplicate for hospitalization, and finally he is granted the hospitalization. There is no way whatsoever for a veteran who may be in destitute circumstances to receive medical treatment in emergency cases requiring operations without going through red tape and the technicalities required. I know of cases where there have been gangrene appendices and acute gall-bladder trouble. The doctors have called the Cleveland regional office, in my district, asking authority to take the soldier to the hospital, stating it was an emergency case requiring an operation in order to save life, and they wanted to know if a reasonable fee would be paid. The Veterans' Bureau advised the physicians and the surgeons, as they had to under the law, that there was no authority to pay them for their services. I hope we will cut out this red tape and that the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi is chairman, will broaden the provisions of the present law so that when a doctor by affidavit states that it is an emergency case, a reputable surgeon in a community may be reimbursed at least nominally for his skill in saving lives of veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. Yes. Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am personally acquainted with this boy and he has suffered the anguish of the damned practically ever since he was wounded.

Mr. MOUSER. I do not doubt that. Mr. RANKIN. But if he had gone to a veterans' hospital it would have cost more than this amount if he had stayed there the average length of time that a fellow stays, under such circumstances. If this boy had wanted to do so, he could have been in a hospital from that day to this at Government expense, and that expense would not have been less than $5 a day. The truth of the business is that by going to Memphis and taking the risk of having to pay this entire bill this young man has saved the Government money, instead of costing the Government money.

Mr. MOUSER. I would like to have the gentleman state his attitude in reference to establishing a policy in the law whereby doctors in the future-not making it retroactivecan be paid for treating veterans of the several wars in emergency cases.

Mr. RANKIN. When men receive wounds in battle and are suffering from them now and it becomes necessary for them to go to an expert. I am not willing to quibble about the cost, and I am not willing to force them to be operated on by a political doctor, when they realize it is a case of life or death, and they prefer to have it done by the most skilled surgeon.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOUSER. Yes.
Mr. CONNERY. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that last night I saw an example of what the gentleman has been speaking about. Last night I went out to Mount Alto Hospital to see a man from my district who had been shot in action in France. The doctor explained what they had to do in his case under the present law. They had to discharge him from the hospital and bring him over to the Emergency Hospital for a particular operation due to the facilities of the Emergency Hospital. They had to discharge him in order to have this operation performed and then they brought him back to Mount Alto. Because of that the veteran had to pay $24 for anesthetic services and other services. This was no fault of the doctors or authorities at Mount Alto. They wanted to give the disabled veteran the best possible care. But with the present law they had no choice.

Mr. MOUSER. And while going through that red tape the veteran may die.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I want to say to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that if his committee wants to be of great help to the exservice man, and at the same time save much money for the Government, the first thing they ought to do is to abolish all of these regional offices that at great expense are scattered all over the United States with useless overhead duplicated in every State. All of these regional offices should again be concentrated in the Veterans' Administration in Washington, so that we may eliminate all duplications and useless overhead. Much of the graft, much of the waste, and much of the extravagance connected with the Veterans' Administration is in connection with the regional offices. There are 2 in my State, 1 in Dallas and 1 at San Antonio, Tex.

If an ex-service man from the southern part of my district writes me here for hospitalization or assistance, it takes four days for his letter to come here. Then I have to write all the way back to San Antonio, to the regional office, as it has exclusive jurisdiction over his file, and that takes four more days, making eight days before the sick man's case gets started. If he is from the northern or eastern part of my district I have to take his business up with the regional office at Dallas, as it has exclusive jurisdiction over his file, and that takes four days each way. It would save an immense amount of money to have local physicians make all examinations.

Recently I received communications from two different American Legion posts, one at Legion, Tex., and also a resolution from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War at Legion, Tex., telling me that they were dissatisfied with the action of Gen. Frank T. Hines in reinstating Dr. M. W. DeBerry in the San Antonio office and asking me to investigate same. They claimed that he had been fired for malfeasance in office and properly fired, but that recently he had been put back on the pay roll by the Veterans' Bureau at San Antonio. They asked me to obtain for them the facts of that case and report to them. I made a complete investigation of it; and, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include some excerpts in connection with this investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by General Hines that such records are confidential and should not be made public. He is in error. Any record in his office that affects only the individual is confidential and should not be made public, but where an employee of this Government has been guilty of malfeasance in office and of improper conduct that was deemed sufficient to try him and remove him from office, every person in the United States is vitally interested and concerned, and his record is not confidential but should be made public.

If such records were kept confidential and not made public, it would result in all sorts of evil practices and corruption. And while I am in Congress I shall demand of all departments that such records shall be public. At the head of the rating board in the San Antonio regional office was this Dr. Marvin W. DeBerry. He is the one who makes the ratings for all ex-service men living in half of my big district. The regional manager went in there one day and found him seated at his table signing up ratings for exsoldiers, if you please, and testified that Doctor DeBerry was so drunk he did not recognize the regional manager; and the officials there also testified before a hearing in Washington that this man has repeatedly been so drunk on the golf course that he had to be put in his automobile and sent home.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. I happen to be interested in this particular case, and I think I saw the records, too. The testimony in the case could be taken either way, in my opinion.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to my friend that I am going to put in the RECORD what the officials who passed on his case actually testified, to show what they stated under oath, and then let the American Legion posts and the Disabled Veterans of the World War there pass on whether or not there is any merit in it.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman be fair enough to put in the RECORD, with the testimony that he inserts, certain testimony that I shall give him?

Mr. BLANTON. I presume my good friend would want me to put in the political statement, as I call it-

Mr. KLEBERG. No; not at all.

Mr. BLANTON (continuing). Which was made by the former secretary of our good friend Harry Wurzbach. This man is the attorney for this doctor now on a claim for retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act, and that kind of a statement from the attorney for this man is not entitled to as much credence as the statement of the regional manager.

The following is the letter that I received from the adjutant of the Dr. Millard P. Wilkins Chapter No. 8, at the United States Veterans' Hospital, at Legion, Tex., together with the resolution he sent me:

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,

Whereas Dr. W. M. DeBerry was separated from the service of the Veterans' Administration on January 26, 1932, by reason of his misconduct; he has since—through political influence, we pre-sume—been reinstated to his former position; and Whereas at the time of dismissal of the above-named person

Veterans' Administration evidently based its action upon the charges preferred, and assessed the usual penalty in such cases; the evidence on which the charges were based has been, it seems, put aside and the matter now stands as prior to January 26, 1932: Therefore be it

> Louis Halphen Post, No. 379, UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL AMERICAN LEGION, Legion, Tex., May 3, 1932.

Hon. TOM BLANTON,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: I am inclosing herewith some correspondence relative to the records of Dr. W. M. DeBerry, medical member of the San Antonio regional office rating board. It appears that this man is being shielded by the administrator. The conduct of this man, if investigated, would be akin to that of William Wolff Smith, whom you have so gloriously prosecuted.

If the misconduct of veteran employees is so confidential and privileged, as stated by the administrator, we are curious to know how you obtained so much corrupt practices in the general counhow you obtained so much corrupt practices in the general counsel's office. Believing that you can and will obtain the specific charge against this man and forward to us, I am taking this privilege of soliciting your support in obtaining same; also, why General Hines did not cause an investigation to be made.

With very best wishes and kindest regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

D. F. MCLAURINE.

Mr. Speaker, the official records disclose that Dr. Marvin W. DeBerry, physician, regional office, Veterans' Administration at San Antonio, Tex., was notified by L. C. Chapman, regional manager, that, pursuant to the act of August 4, 1912, a charge of intoxication had been preferred against him to the effect that he appeared for duty November 12, 1931, on or about 1 p. m. at the Veterans Administration, San Antonio, while under the influence of liquor to the extent that he was unable to perform his official duties; that he would be allowed 10 days within which to file his answer and so forth.

In a letter which said Regional Manager L. C. Chapman wrote the administrator November 12, 1931, he stated that when Doctor DeBerry reported at 1.30 p. m., that date he was not in fit condition to take care of his official duties; that he had Doctor DeBerry to come to his office. "Immediately upon his entering the room I was distinctly conscious of liquor of some sort, that in talking Doctor DeBerry was incoherent, his tongue was thick, his eyes bleary, and he was most assuredly under the influence of some intoxicant at that time. He said that he would not let him remain on duty at that time and instructed him to go home and report to him at the beginning of duty the next morning. He did not report to duty next morning, but called the regional manager, stating that he was not well. The next morning (Saturday) his wife telephoned the regional manager that the doctor had been to see Doctor DeBerry the day before and advised him to remain in bed. DeBerry reported to duty Monday morning and the regional manager had a conference with him which is not unlike conferences I have had with him in the past on the same subject. Regional Manager L. C. Chapman said that he was personally able to testify that on this particular occasion Doctor DeBerry was, due to alcoholic beverages, unable to perform his official duties."

In a letter which said Regional Manager L. C. Chapman wrote Maj. O. W. Clark, an official of the Veterans' Administration at Washington, on April 28, 1931, he states:

DeBerry has been with the bureau for many years; for a major portion of that time he has periodically had the same trouble with which he is now afflicted—mainly drinking to excess at times and being unable to perform his official duties for varying periods as a result thereof. Since my talk to him in 1930, it appears that he either can not control himself or has decided that appears that he either can not control himself or has decided that I didn't mean what I said, because these periods have become more frequent. On Sunday, April 26, 1931, I happened to be playing golf on the same course with DeBerry in the foursome just ahead of him, and it was called to my attention by other people on the course that DeBerry seemed to be drinking. I noticed that he was actually staggering. His eyes were glassy and I doubt very seriously if he even recognized me. I got him into his car. He did not report for duty Monday.

In his answer to the charge, dated December 16, 1931, Doctor DeBerry shows that he affiliated with the bureau in Dallas in 1922, and has served continuously. He says:

I took repeated doses of [some drug] and aspirin and had some hot wine during the night, and about 11.30 I dressed and had another drink of hot wine. When I arrived at the office the lobby was apparently vacant. I signed a number of ratings. I realize the best interest of this institution can not be served with the odor of intoxicating liquor on one's breath while performing official duties, and I realize I made a grave error by coming to this office on November 12 for that reason.

The matter was referred to a committee here in Washington, which on January 22, 1932, after hearing evidence, found that the charges that he appeared for duty on November 12, 1931, while under the influence of liquor to the extent that he was unable to perform official duties, was sustained and that committee recommended that he be removed from service with prejudice. The following officials composed this committee: H. S. Chick, Leonard Nelson, Dr. C. D. Todd, and J. E. Price. That opinion and decision were approved by Assistant Administrator O. W. Clark.

Before this committee, at its hearing here in Washington. Regional Adjudication Officer J. H. Skinker testified that:

On November 12, 1931, Mr. Sherry, chairman of the rating board, told him that Doctor DeBerry had arrived during lunch in no condition to work because he was intoxicated. I sent for DeBerry at 1.05. I noticed something out of the ordinary. It was obvious to me from the moment that he stepped into my office that he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor. His face was very red, his eyes were bloodshot, and as soon as he began his conversation it was evident that it was not Doctor DeBerry in his normal condition talking to me. I arrived at the conclusion that he was condition talking to me. I arrived at the conclusion that he was in no fit condition to sit as a member of the rating board. After Congressman Wurzbach's death DeBerry came to my office and said that he just wanted to talk to me about appealing his retirement claim and he asked that Mr. Haberkorn, secretary to Wurzbach, handle it for him and Haberkorn said that he was there for that purpose. Doctor DeBerry struck out both arms, making a gesture, and said substantially as follows, "It is wide open—we are all for you. It became embarrassing for me to hear Doctor DeBerry talk in the presence of an outsider. I told Manager Chapman that Doctor DeBerry was not in any condition to perform his duties as a member of the rating board. And he made a plea that Doctor DeBerry be not dismissed from service, but to be granted leniency.

Also, Cameron B. Sherry, who is chairman of the regional rating board at San Antonio, testified before this committee at its hearing in Washington that—

On November 12, 1931, while DeBerry was sitting at the table where ratings are signed he noticed a very marked alcoholic odor, and he noticed that others present were convinced that DeBerry's condition was not normal. Glancing at the rating sheets DeBerry was signing, I noticed his signature was not being subscribed as usual, and I convinced myself that he was not in any condition to be attending his official duties, and I went to the regional adjudication officer to request that DeBerry be excused for the afternoon. Later, going back to the board room I found DeBerry at the table and Dr. Robert E. Parrish, part-time eye, ear, nose, and throat specialist, came in for a rating on hearing on eye disabilities, and engaged Doctor DeBerry in a conversation, and after the first few remarks it was apparent that DeBerry was in no condition to carry on an intelligent conversation. It was very apparent that the alcoholic odor was very perceptible, and it was evident that he could not carry on a coordinated conversation. That was evident by both incoherent speech and by thickening speech. His eyes had the appearance of one who had partaken of alcoholic beverages.

Dr. J. C. Smith, who is general medical officer and surgeon at this regional office in San Antonio, testified that—

On that date he had a conversation with DeBerry, and that he had had intoxicating liquor to drink because of his action and the way he talked. It would have been impossible for him to have functioned efficiently.

On January 22, 1932, G. H. Sweet, chief of personnel, notified Doctor DeBerry, through the regional manager at San Antonio, in writing:

Your services as a physician, grade B, at a salary of $4,000 per annum, P and S grade service 4 and 5, has been discontinued with prejudice at the close of business, January 26, 1932.

Preceding the said letter, Chief Sweet, on January 25, 1932, personally wired the regional manager at San Antonio that charges had been sustained dismissing Doctor DeBerry, effective January 26. Then Regional Manager Chapman, on January 26, sent a 20-line telegram, Government collect, to General Hines, stating:

After careful deliberation I have come to the conclusion that it is incumbent upon me to make the following report to recommend to you that since preferment of charges against this employee, his conduct, attitude, and work have been entirely satisfactory. Both his and his wife's saving were lost recently in local bank failure. His wife is now confined to her bed, paralytic stroke. He has responsibility re several of his near relatives. He is also a disabled ex-service man. In view of these things and his long period of service, I feel constrained to submit these facts to you with request for reconsideration and recommend that some penalty less than dismissal be inflicted.

General Hines refused to suspend the dismissal order, holding that the charge had been sustained. Thereafter Doctor DeBerry appeared in Washington before the same committee of four heretofore mentioned and submitted statements, one from C. R. Quinn, an attorney, Veterans' Administration, San Antonio; one by Miss Ina B. Hill, formerly medical clerk, Veterans' Administration; one by Harry A. Haberknorg, former secretary to Wurzbach (who was then DeBerry's attorney on his claim for retired pay); one by Dr. R. E. Parrish; one by Frank L. Chapper, assistant State officer; one by Wynn S. Goode, department service officer of the American Legion, and one by Dr. J. B. Webb, of Donna, Tex., and after carefully considering all of said affidavits, the board reported:

These statements were carefully considered as well as the personal statement of Doctor DeBerry. At no time did Doctor DeBerry deny the correctness of the charge. After full hearing, the committee confirms its finding of its original report.

Signed by the same Chick, Todd, Price, and Nelson, committee.

And thus for the second time this board after due hearing held that Doctor DeBerry should be dismissed.

Veterans' Bureau Attorney Quinn's affidavit has no probative force or effect whatever but is merely negative in its character. It deserved no consideration.

Doctor Parrish testifies-

During my conversation with Doctor DeBerry I noticed the odor of alcohol on his breath, his eyes were red but his conversation was coherent.

Hence it really supported the charge.

Goode, department service officer of the American Legion, Department of Texas, gave no evidence of value, and his affidavit is of no probative force or effect, being merely negative in character, and the board at its hearing rightfully gave it little consideration.

Harry A. Haberkorn, Doctor DeBerry's said attorney, wrote a letter February 10, 1932, and admitted that Dr. J. M. Skinker in his presence told Doctor DeBerry to go to Manager Chapman's office, said Attorney Haberkorn stating:

I then told Skinker that I did not notice anything intoxicating. I am not attempting to say that Skinker or Chapman did not smell evidence of the doctor having had a drink.

Naturally the board gave little weight to this letter, of no probative force and effect whatever.

All Ina B. Hill said was that from his general reputation she was sure that hasty action had been taken in this case without proper investigation. And her letter was addressed to an official here asking him to use his influence, and so forth. Naturally, the board at its hearing disregarded her letter.

Frank L. Chapper, assistant State service officer, offered no evidence of any value, his statement is negative in character, and of no probative force and effect.

The statement by Doctor Webb, of Donna, is likewise of no value. He was wholly unfamiliar with what went on in San Antonio at this time.

On February 18, 1931, Manager Chapman sent an 18-line telegram, Government collect, from San Antonio to General Hines insisting on recision of the dismissal and reinstatement on reprimand, stating:

This information has become generally known to the ex-service men and service organizations in this locality. I do not know what their reaction will be. I would say that his reinstatement here would be in the interest of the service, but do not feel that it would be acceptable to the above reaction, which may be negative in this locality.

W. O. Tuttle, from San Antonio, February 19, 1932, wired:

Chairman states return of Doctor DeBerry to his office would be satisfactory, but it is possible ex-service men here might prevent action. Have wired General Hines I am past commander of American Legion. It is my opinion that service men will favor reconsideration of Doctor DeBerry.

On February 19, 1932, Assistant Administrator O. W. Clark recommended that DeBerry be reinstated. On March 22, 1932, the reinstatement certificate was issued and on March 26, 1932, he was notified of his reinstatement, and he was thus reinstated.

It is thus clearly shown by the official record in the Veterans' Administration that after a board of four officials had twice held a hearing and had twice found Dr. DeBerry guilty of conduct requiring dismissal, and after General Hines had refused to reinstate him a few ex parte statements from interested persons wholly unfamiliar with the facts that caused his dismissal interceded for him, and that without holding another hearing Doctor DeBerry was reinstated on the same evidence which had been carefully considered by the board that convicted him.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that high officials in the American Legion are not serving the best interests of the rank and file of American Legion members, or of ex-service men generally, or of the people of the United States, in interceding and having a man like Doctor DeBerry reinstated when he had been convicted after due hearing of "drunkenness on duty" and of being incapable of transacting business when exservice men must depend upon him for their ratings.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CLARENCE G. YOUNG

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 360, the bill (S. 2697) for the relief of Clarence G. Young. The gentleman who objected to the bill, I think, objected to it under a misapprehension.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, that bill was objected to by Mr. EVANS of Montana. Notwithstanding that, one of the gentlemen told me he objected under a misapprehension and I would like to return to it in order to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NED BISHOP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1931, for the relief of Ned Bishop.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to have an explanation made as to how the Government may be involved in a private contract between a contractor and a railroad company in the furnishing of ties and the giving of a Liberty bond as security.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I can explain the matter very easily to the gentleman. This man, Ned Bishop, was a laborer making ties for the Alaska Railroad and they required these tie men to give bond. This man gave a bond, along with a lot of other men, but instead of giving personal security he put up this Liberty bond of $1,000. Conditions arose under which all of these contractors failed to perform their contract as provided, and they were all turned in and exonerated except this one. He had put up his Liberty bond to the railroad company, which is a Government function up there, and instead of bringing suit or doing something to get the right to take the bond, they sold it and turned the money into the Alaska Railroad. This is an application to take it out of the Alaska Railroad funds.

Mr. MOUSER. I understand that; but the railroad company sold the bond.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Therefore the bond is redeemable by the Government, and in turn this contractor who gave the bond as security wants another bond.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, no; he does not. He wants them to pay the money.

Mr. BLACK. All these contracts were modified, and in case of all the other guarantors they were released by reason of modifications made in the contract by the Government; but this man happened to guarantee himself and was not included.

Mr. MOUSER. What happened to the other contractors who gave similar security?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. This was the only man who gave such security.

Mr. BLACK. And all the guarantors for the other contractors were released because of the modifications made in the contract by the Government.

Mr. MOUSER. But the Government did not enter into the modification of the contract between the contractor and the railroad company.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I think my colleague has been misled in his idea that this is a contract with a railroad company, and is not considering that the railroad company is owned and operated by the United States and that the appropriation for its deficit is furnished to the Secretary of the Interior and the form of this bill would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to take such funds as he has in connection with the railroad and settle this claim.

Mr. MOUSER. Does the Government own this Alaska Railroad?

Mr. WICKERSHAM, Absolutely.

Mr. MOUSER. Then I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the funds of the Alaska Railroad, the sum of $1,009.10 to Ned Bishop, in refund for his Liberty bond forfeited to the Alaska Railroad in connection with a contract between said Ned Bishop and the Alaska Railroad for furnishing railroad ties in the year 1922.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NATHAN HALE, REVOLUTIONARY HERO

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, June 6, 1932, is the one hundred and seventy-seventh anniversary of the birth of Nathan Hale, Connecticut's noblest son, martyr, and patriot, whose one regret, when about to make the great sacrifice for his native land, was that he had "but one life to give" for it.

Although a native of Connecticut, educated at Yale, that State realizes that in the contemplation of the character and service of the patriot Nathan Hale mere imaginary lines of statehood disappear, and he is essentially American, beloved and revered by all States in the Nation which he served so well. He was born in Coventry, Tolland County, June 6, 1755.

The perilous exploits of Captain Hale need no recitation here. The story of the 21-year-old youth who at the instance of General Washington left Connecticut to venture into the enemy's lines on Long Island forms one of the most heroic pages in American history. On previous occasions on this anniversary I have stated before this body the account of his courage and daring. In the Congressional Record of the Sixty-third Congress, third session, page 816, I have reviewed the story of his adventure, of his eventual capture, and subsequent death on the gibbet on September 22, 1776.

In the Record of the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, page 303, is a testimony from the pages of the Hartford Times to the esteem and reverence in which the young hero is held by the citizens of his native State. The schoolhouse in which he taught in East Haddam, Conn., has been preserved. It is a shrine to his spirit of self-sacrifice, maintained and preserved by the Connecticut Society, Sons of the American Revolution. The Congressional Records of the Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, page 461, and of the Sixty-sixth Congress, page 8845, include similar encomiums to the self-poise, nobility of character, and dauntless courage of this youth.

His final words—"I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country"—have been on the lips of every American schoolboy since the annals of the Revolutionary War were recorded. What an inspiration to the youth of this Nation this deed of devotion and service to the cause of his country in its hour of trial! Alone, single-handed, into the face of almost certain death, he ventured where others more circumspect dared not go.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the life and sacrifice of Hale, particularly his devotion to duty, his unfaltering courage, and his ringing words of patriotism even at the moment of death, must we not admit that this martyr of the Revolution richly deserves the honor of a monument to his memory on the public grounds of the National Capitol of the country which he loved and died for, when the finances of the Nation warrant.

From the sacrifices of Nathan Hale and his copatriots a lesson can be drawn in this present-day crisis. They were men of courage and iron will who loved their country. There was nothing flabby about their patriotism. They gave willingly of their lives and fortunes to make possible the birth of a new nation where all men would be equal under the law. After the establishment of the United States Government these men continued in patriotic service. They were followed by the pioneers who blazed the trail—the brave men and women of the covered-wagon period—and the men and women who showed such great fortitude in the reconstruction days.

Similarly during the World War the people of the United States displayed the spirit of Nathan Hale and emulated his fortitude in the time of adversity. So in this depression we can rely upon them to courageously deal with the trying problems of the times and to solve them. The times call for patience, faith, and cooperation. Hard as it is to be without employment, to witness the efforts of a lifetime shrink or pass away, we must remember our comforts and the advantages of modern life and that we live in the greatest Nation on earth. We are fighting an economic war. Some sacrifices are necessary. The courage of America always triumphs. Let us face a rising sun and carry on with the spirit of '76. The proceedings of both branches of Congress open with prayer, giving evidence that the American people look for guidance to and place their faith in our Heavenly Father. With this belief they can not fail.

UNION FERRY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, S. 6, an act for the relief of the Union Ferry Co., owners of the ferryboat Montauk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this bill seeks authority for the owners of the ferryboat Montauk to go into court and determine the amount of damages that may have been incurred by reason of a collision with a United States Navy tug. The Secretary of the Navy finds that there was no fault on the part of the navy tug. I must confess that my memory is a little vague as to what the law of damages is in courts of admiralty. I am at present under the impression that the court awards that amount of damages, which if both parties were in fault, to the one who suffered the most. I have not examined the law for a good many years.

I was wondering whether the gentleman would be willing to place the Government in the same position for relief, in case the court should find that the Government is entitled to damages, as he is attempting to do on behalf of the ferry company.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand it, if the Government thought that the owners of the ferryboat were at fault, the Government would have sued the ferryboat company. The Government did not want to go into court because it knew where the responsibility lay. If the Secretary of the Navy thought that the ferry company was responsible, in the exercise of his duty he would have sued the ferryboat owners.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; sometimes they are not as litigious as are private parties. I have an amendment to offer, and if that is acceptable, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Union Ferry Co. of New York and Brooklyn, owners of the ferryboat Montauk, alleged to have been injured in a collision with the United States Navy tug Mohave, which occurred in the East River on the 27th day of December, 1918, for and on account of the alleged damage to said ferryboat Montauk, by reason of said collision, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due said owners, on the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of said court; and that it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That the libel in the suit herein authorized shall be filed not later than four months after the passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "sustained," insert "either by the Government or the said Union Ferry Co.," and in line 6, page 2, after the word "parties," insert "but with no allowance for injuries or claim for damages by reason of the delay in considering said action prior to the rendering of judgment herein and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN HEFFRON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 922) for the relief of John Heffron.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy John Heffron shall be held and considered to have served honorably as a cook (first class). United States Navy, for more than 90 days during the war with Spain: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHANNA ARMSTRONG

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 278 on the calendar, H. R. 1553, for the relief of Johanna Armstrong, in view of the fact that a moment ago on a similar bill favorable action was taken. While not exactly similar, the bill has almost the exact phraseology.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to prefer his request to-morrow, so that we may have that bill before us.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to object to the request of the gentleman from Michigan, but there is a difference and a very great dissimilarity between the two bills he mentions. The case passed here was where there was a defect in the revolving door entering a post-office in which the Government was at fault in not remedying, and an old lady was hurt. In the gentleman's case it was where a decrepit old lady was going through one of these revolving doors that was in good shape and the crowd pushed her through. The Government had no control over the crowd, the Government was not at fault, the Government could not help it. It is one of those assumptions of risk that every American citizen must take in going through a revolving door.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. I object.

NORMAN C. BRADY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8343) for the relief of Norman C. Brady.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BEN D. SHOWALTER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9599) for the relief of Ben D. Showalter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN Z. LOWE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9076) for the relief of John Z. Lowe, former collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to inquire whether this is for the relief of a surety company or for the collector himself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, for the former collector himself, as I understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was this former collector under bond? Of course the gentleman realizes that we are not inclined to relieve surety companies of an obligation on a defalcation or irregularity that occurred in the performance of the work. I am quite satisfied that the collector was not directly responsible for this defalcation; but if he was under bond and the surety company has paid the indebtedness, I can see no reason why the Government should come to the rescue of the surety company.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have never heard that any surety company was involved in any way in the matter. That is all that I can say to the gentleman. I know Mr. Lowe, and I understood it was a personal thing, that he was personally liable, and was attempting to relieve himself of this personal

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under the statement that there is no surety company to be reimbursed, I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the revenue account of John Z. Lowe as collector of internal revenue the second district of New York for a period ending April 3, 1917, and to allow credit in the settlement of said account for the sum of $3,500, being the amount of an alleged shortage in the count of stamps charged as having been sent to and received by him during the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I stepped out for a moment and did not hear the point where the Speaker asked whether there was any objection. If it is not too late, I must object

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point is passed. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Mouser: Line 8, strike out the figures "$3,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$250."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This bill was introduced by me, I think, in the last Congress. The amount involved is $3,500. There is no basis for inserting any other amount in the bill except to kill the bill. The gentleman may as well offer an amendment to insert 5 cents instead of $250. The collector had $3,500 worth of 50-cent documentary stamps stolen from his office through no fault of his own for which he is held liable. There never has been any dispute as to the fact.

Mr. MOUSER. It seems to me that the report certainly shows disputed facts. This fairy tale told about the disappearance of the stamps, which is not corroborated, certainly raises the question of whether or not there should be any reimbursement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In all the investigation by the department there was no issue raised as to the fact that the stamps were stolen and that the employees who stole them were discharged.

Mr. MOUSER. The claimant claims that he bought the stamps off a man on the street.

Now, it is certainly strange to say that a person would buy that many stamps on the street from an unknown person without questioning the transaction. I do not want to be arbitrary, but I am sorry the stage has passed for me to object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is just an arbitrary amendment that the gentleman has offered. I will accept no compro-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mouser) there were ayes 2 and noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILBUR J. SCOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4148, authorizing issuance of a patent in fee to Wilbur J. Scott for certain

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the author of the bill explain the reason why he does not agree with the position of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who recommends adversely to this bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. Instead of agreeing with him fully the committee agreed to an amendment that was suggested, cutting out authority to issue patent on the irrigated land.

This bill was introduced at the request of the young man in question and is one of those hair-line decisions of judgment as to whether authority should be given to issue patent in fee for the remainder of the land or not. Since it is entirely in the discretion of the Secretary, I feel very sure that no patent in fee would be issued unless conditions were entirely proper, on his further investigation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not think that the mere passage of this bill will mean much to the Secretary of the Interior; that he will not regard a declaration of policy on the part of Congress as being entitled to much

Mr. LEAVITT. I would not say that. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says that the Secretary of the Interior has authority to refuse to grant title in fee. He has a right to do that to-day without any declaration by Congress.

Mr. LEAVITT. No; not on the Crow Indian Reservation. He has on some Indian reservations, but under the act of 1920 all such discretion is taken away, and it requires an act in each individual case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection, though I question whether it is good policy, but the gentleman from Montana is very considerate of his wards.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent in fee to Wilbur J. Scott, Crow allottee No. 1769, for land allotted to him under the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 751), and described as the northeast quarter northeast quarter, south half northeast quarter, south half northeast quarter, southwest quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 32 east, and lot 4 of section 18, township 4 south, range 33 east, Montana meridian comprising 397.86 acres. ian, comprising 397.86 acres.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "and lot 4 of section 18, On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "and lot 4 of section 18, township 4 south, range 33 east," and on page 2, line 3, after the word "comprising," strike out the words "three hundred and ninety-seven and eighty-six one-hundredths" and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred and sixty."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. M'DONALD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4368, for the relief of George W. McDonald.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers George W. McDonald, who was a member of Company C, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, mustered in on June 1, 1862, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 1st day of October, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JERRY V. CRANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5367, for the relief of Jerry V. Crane.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CARDEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. CARDEN. This old man was taken sick and left the Army with the consent of his captain. They told him that when he recovered he could come back or they would send him his discharge if he never recovered. That was proved by a number of witnesses. Even the report says it was understood that he had died. He was carried to the hospital and carried to his home, and for eight months he was there with typhoid fever, and the Army disbanded or left, and he never came back. He is a very old man, past 80 years of age.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Jerry V. Crane, who was a member of Company K, Thirty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 5th day of March, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARENCE G. YOUNG

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 360, for the relief of Clarence G. Young (S. 2697), and pending that I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection pending that request, that the gentleman be granted three minutes to make an explanation.

Mr. MOUSER. Did not the gentleman make that request just a few moments ago?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I did.

Mr. MOUSER. And did not the gentleman from New York, Mr. Black, object to the request?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. He did.

Mr. MOUSER. The gentleman from New York is not present in the Chamber just now, and I suggest that the gentleman defer his request until the gentleman from New York returns to the Chamber.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I do not care to defer my request. I have made it twice.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. If I can not be courteously treated on a little thing like this, you will have a quorum or you will not pass any more bills to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the gentleman from New York, Mr. Black, I object at this time. If the gentleman will make his request when the gentleman from New York returns, I shall not object.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, at least.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. That is all I have asked for, and I have asked for that twice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Will the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum? Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, when the bill Calendar No. 360 was called my attention was temporarily diverted, and I think two Members objected. I spoke to one of them, and he said he did not understand it. I spoke to the other objector, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black], who replied:

We will try to take care of the matter.

My bill is a $50 claim. The Forest Service last year hired a man's horse, put him in charge of some inexperienced fellow, and the horse was killed the first night out.

The bill involves a sum of $50. The bill was reported out of the committee, the chairman of which now objects to my even making a statement about it.

I think we ought to return to the calendar number and call the bill. I shall have no criticism of anyone who really wants to object to a meritorious bill. For the second time now I have asked to make a statement on this little bill, and I now make the request that we return to Calendar No. 360.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not the gentleman from Montana defer his request until the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black] is here?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I shall be pleased to defer my request until the gentleman who made the objection returns to the House.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I have no objection to the gentleman from Montana making any statement he wants to, but in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black], I can not consent to take up the bill.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I will defer my request until the gentleman from New York comes in. If I can not get a hearing then, we will have a quorum to do business with this afternoon.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sorry the gentleman made that statement. We are trying to cooperate with him.

ROBERT E. EDGECUMBE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3670, for the relief of Robert E. Edgecumbe.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I question the amount involved in this claim. I do not question the facts. I think the operator of the airplane was negligent, but I question the payment of $5,000 when there is no proof that the minor children of the deceased were dependent upon her. The basis of damage is dependency.

Therefore, at the present time, I must insist that this amount be reduced to $2,000.

I am not objecting to the merits of the claim; I am objecting to the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ascertain from some member of the committee reporting the bill why in this instance it recommends $5,000, which is to be paid to the estate, whereas in the following bill they seek to compensate for a similar injury arising out of the same accident to the amount of only $1,000.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The difference, if the gentleman pleases, is this: The woman in the bill H. R. 3670 was killed and the committee thought it wise to amend the bill and make it payable to the estate so the children would get the benefit of it. In the next bill the gentleman refers to there was simply an injury, a broken hip, and the committee felt that $1,000 was sufficient to compensate the man for the injury and for his hospital expenses.

Mr. MOUSER. How many children are left in the case of the first bill where the woman was killed?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There were five children, and their ages at the time of the accident ran all the way down to 11 months.

Mr. MOUSER. It is not disputed that the husband of this woman was the wage earner of the family and was supporting his family.

I raise the question as to what basis there is to pay $5,000 when there is no evidence of record that these children were dependent upon their mother for support. The measure of damages in a wrongful death case involving such circumstances as are involved in this case hinges upon the dependency of those who claim damages because of wrongful death.

I suggest that the amount be reduced to what the children might possibly expect their mother could provide for them in case the husband did not.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think it is unquestionably true the father was the main support; but as I understand the facts, this woman did contribute to the support of the family; and while there is no definite evidence along that line, of course, the taking away of this woman has entailed an expense for the balance of the lives of these children which must be assumed by the husband.

Mr. MOUSER. She gave the children a mother's care.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman who is interested in this bill to a bill introduced by our late beloved colleague, Sam Rutherford, seeking to compensate the widow of a man who had been killed by reason of the too-free use of a gun by a prohibition-enforcement officer in one of the southern cities.

There the deceased had left a number of minor childrenfive or six-by a prior marriage. The deceased had recently married this woman. I proposed an amendment, which I thought would have met the approval of Mr. Rutherford, to grant to the widow $1,000 and providing for the payment of $4,000 to the guardian of the minor children. This bill would award the money to the estate.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I will say to the gentleman that I would not object to an amendment of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. We wish to have the children looked after rather than to provide for the debts of their father or mother. I think in cases like these, where we are seeking to take care of the children because of death resulting through the fault of the Government, it would be far better to provide that the money be paid to the guardian of the minor children of Robert E. Edgecumbe.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. It seems to me that would be invading the prerogatives of the court in that case. As a matter of fact, this kind of suit is brought by the administrator of the estate, probably the husband, and also as the next friend of the children. After the debts are paid out of this amount, if any, then it is distributed according to the laws of descent and distribution, and in that event the court would have to appoint a guardian to handle the funds of the minor children.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman think we should appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury to pay any part of the debts of the deceased?

Mr. MOUSER. No; but that money has to be distributed through the probate court or a similar court, and it is according to the laws of the particular State involved.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you make it payable to a guardian, then a guardian will have to be appointed, and the amount will not be subject to the debts of the decedent.

Mr. MOUSER. That comes afterwards.

Mr. GREEN. Speaking for my colleague, I will accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, by which each of these five small children who are left would obtain $1,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I feel this is a very reasonable amount, only $5,000. when this mother, in the prime of her life, left these children, who were dependent upon her for support.

Mr. MOUSER. There is no evidence that they were dependent upon her for any support whatsoever. I suggest that the amount be made $2,000, otherwise I intend to object.

Mr. GREEN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MOUSER. I will reserve it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us do justice. There is no question whatsoever but what this man left minor children, as the report shows, of the respective ages of 9, 7, 5, and 3 years.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And one of 11 months. Mr. STAFFORD. Five children. The accident was the fault of the Government. Two thousand dollars would not go very far for the support of five children of those tender ages. We have invariably paid $5,000 to estates of decedents Government. I have been in sympathy with the position the gentleman generally takes, but I think in this case, where the Government has been the cause of taking away the bread earner of these minor children, that we should vote the $5,000 to the guardian for the benefit of these minor children. In this case the Government is at fault; and how far would $5,000 go for the support of these minor children? The Government was at fault, and we have established the policy that where the Government kills a person through the fault of its agent we will allow damages to the extent of $5,000 and no more.

Mr. MOUSER. It is not a question of sympathy. We are all sympathetic toward these children. It is a question of the measure of damages. There is not one scintilla of evidence in this report showing that this mother contributed to the support of these children or that they were dependent upon her. If the father had lost his life, that would be a different question.

Mr. STAFFORD. The father did lose his life by reason of this accident, and that is the basis of the claim. As I understand, it was the father who was killed.

Mr. MOUSER. No; it was the mother. The Committee on Claims should differentiate between the head of a family who supports his family and the widow who does not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to apologize to the gentleman from Ohio, because my argument was predicated upon the idea that the father had been killed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2437 will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Annie Lee Edgecumbe, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as full compensation for the death of Annie Lee Edgecumbe, on October 17, 1930, on account of having been struck by a United States Navy plane in Penescelle Rev Ele plane in Pensacola Bay, Fia.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Mouser: Page 1, line 6, strike out $5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I hope the House will not accept this amendment. All Members of the House will realize that if a mother is taken away from her children when they are the ages of 11 months up to 8 or 9 years, the father in rearing these children will expend a great deal more than $5,000 as a result of such loss. Also I would admonish my colleagues that the officers of the Navy admit that one of the Navy seaplanes killed the mother, and I am assuming that this mother was fishing to obtain food and support for her children. I am assuming this, because otherwise she would not have been there. I do not think she would have been there on a pleasure trip. I believe she was trying to augment the income of her husband to feed her children, one of them being only 11 months old. The Navy officials admit that her small fishing boat was lawfully in that portion of Pensacola Harbor.

Under these circumstances a plane operated by one of the officers of the Navy unfortunately struck the boat and killed her and severely injured her fishing companion.

My colleagues, under such circumstances do you think that $5,000 is excessive when you consider the necessary care of a child 11 months old, the employment of a nurse and of attendants to take the place of a mother, as far as anyone else can possibly take her place? Do you believe that $5,000 is excessive under circumstances of this character? There were also four other small children left for the father to care for. His earning power was lessened.

If this case had been in the courts of my State, and if I were representing this estate, surely $25,000 would not be a where the death has occurred through the fault of the large amount for which to sue. However, they have asked the small amount of $5,000 to help to educate and rear these children, and it does seem to me that considering the facts in the case, the Congress should not cut the amount down to two or three thousand dollars, and I hope you will not accept the amendment. We are approving bills for large amounts for cases, in my opinion, far less worthy. Therefore stand with me against the amendment and for $5,000 allowance.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of the amendment, and I realize that perhaps I should have preceded the gentleman from Florida.

The gentleman from Florida waxes eloquent about the facts concerning this death. It is conceded by everyone that this woman suffered a wrongful death. The gentleman states that these minor children, with whom we all sympathize, were dependent upon their mother for support, because, forsooth, she was out fishing in order to get them something to eat. Certainly this House is going to base its judgment upon more substantial grounds. I am advised by a member of the Committee on Claims that in these cases it is always customary to report a bill in the sum of $5,000.

I am serious in calling the attention of this House to the fact that if we are going to proceed orderly we must consider the measure of damages just as that would be considered in a court of law, and the measure of damages in the case of death is based, not upon sympathy, but upon the loss of those who claim damages; and in this case it is the mother, not the father, who has been killed. If it were the father, who was the bread winner and head of the family, $5,000 would not be out of place.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is it not true that in the case of people of small means, generally, the woman in the family contributes to the support of the family?

Mr. MOUSER. How small were the means of this family?

The gentleman is going outside the record.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am frank to state that the evidence does not disclose, but I am satisfied in my own mind that they were not people of any wealth.

Mr. MOUSER. I want to say to the Speaker, and through him to the membership of the House, that this is the first time, when we have had a friendly discussion with a view to a compromise, in a spirit of helpfulness, based upon good argument, that any gentleman who has acquiesced by his silence has later voiced any opposition to an amendment. I certainly do not think we want to put ourselves in the position where we have to object to a bill without giving the proponent of the measure an opportunity to explain it.

I think the gentleman from Florida should not oppose the amendment for this reason, and if he does, the gentleman will jeopardize every bill about which there is any doubt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Green) there were—aves 41, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the customary attorney's fee clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ALFRED G. SIMMONS, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3671, for the relief of Alfred G. Simmons, jr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill S. 2436, a similar Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alfred G. Simmons, jr., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 as full compensation for injuries received and suffered by him on account of having been struck on October 17, 1930, by a United States Navy plane in Pensacola Bay, Fla.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table. The House bill was laid on the table.

LUCY STEWART

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5906, for the relief of Lucy Stewart.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I may say that in the last Congress the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported an omnibus bill for various claimants carrying the same idea. I felt impelled as to all those bills to object, and that is the position I now take. I will yield to my good friend from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am personally and intensely interested in this case. It is a bill to give the widow of a consul general one year's salary. The Government has pursued that policy since 1892. There is a long list of precedents for it, and the State Department recommends the passage of the bill.

I may say to you that the beneficiary of this bill is a lady in my home town and that I have known her from childhood. She is about 60 years of age and has nothing to live on. She is the granddaughter of Gen. Howell Cobb, who at one time was Speaker of this House and at another time Secretary of the Treasury.

This lady has gone all over the world with her husband, into out-of-the-way places, and many of the Members of this House have visited places where they were stationed and have received many kindnesses at their hands.

The State Department said to me that in many places they had to perform the functions that ordinarily would be performed by an ambassador or a minister in entertaining Americans. They had no Government funds to pay for that purpose, and they paid it out of their own pocket.

When the horrible earthquake took place in Japan very few were anxious to go into that area. Mr. Stewart was stationed in Washington at that time in the State Department. One or two consuls who were suggested found excuses to prevent them from accepting the position. Mr. Stewart volunteered, and in a few days he and his wife went to Japan. She lived with him for three years in a tent in Japan assisting her husband in the performance of his duties.

Gentlemen, these are the facts in the case.

Mr. ARENTZ. I think the gentleman should speak in the same terms regarding the two bills which follow, because they are identical in purpose, to pay one year's salary to men who have served their country well abroad, and all that the gentleman has said in regard to Calendar No. 375 applies equally to Calendar Nos. 366 and 377.

Mr. CRISP. I do not know anything about those bills. I was engaged in a conference committee, trying to expedite agreements on the tax bill, a matter of the greatest importance to the Nation. I felt so intensely interested in this bill, for the reasons I have outlined, that when I was here to Washington and was in a hospital here, and died notified that this bill was about to be reached I excused myself to come here for a short time to make a personal statement on behalf of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I introduced Calendar No. 377, H. R. 1942, for the relief of Mary T. Deane, which bill involves exactly the same principle. In the report on No. 377 the Committee on Foreign Affairs say that they have 30 precedents for doing the very same thing. I join with the gentleman in urging the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAF-FORD], in view of the fact that there are numerous precedents for this, to withdraw his objection.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have a similar bill, No. 376, H. R. 924, for the relief of Sophie de Sota. The husband of this widow served for 35 years continuously. I believe when he entered this service he had a right to assume that upon his death his widow would receive the same amount as the widows of these 30 other men received. If we do not pass this bill now, it would be a retroactive act, in my opinion, because we would change the law as it exists to-day. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection, for some years prior to 1924 the State Department was seeking to place upon the retired list all of our consular representatives and pay them retired pay after they reached a certain age. The first draft of the so-called Rogers bill passed the House in 1921 but did not pass the Senate. In 1924 the Congress adopted the policy, under recommendation of Secretary of State Hughes, the present Chief Justice, granting to all of our consular officers upon their attaining a certain age a liberal retirement pay. In that bill, which was prepared by the State Department under the tutelage of the eminent Secretary of State, no provision was carried at any time providing for a year's salary to be paid to the widow. Prior to that time the Congress had voted in many instances, as referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, the grant of a year's salary, particularly where the husbands died abroad, because the Government believed that it would be rather an undue burden upon these persons serving in foreign climes, with inadequate salaries and no provision for retirement, not to receive some compensation; but since we passed the act of 1924 only one such bill has been passed, although the Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported many, many such bills.

In the instant bill I call attention to the fact that this consular officer died here in Washington while on temporary service, November 14, 1930. There is no reason whatsoever, in view of the fact we have established a policy of retirement, and liberal retirement, more liberal in case of consular officers than in any other branch of the national service, why we should now establish a policy of granting, in addition thereto, a year's salary to the widow.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment. During the last Congress it was my unhappy task to object to a bill introduced by my colleague, Mr. Schafer, a case in which the widow lives in an adjoining suburb to my district. During the recess friends of mine arranged for an interview with her. I explained to the widow the reason. She had a valuable estate of some $30,000 or more. Why should we in this character of service, just because it is a select character of service, grant a year's salary to the widow of a deceased consular officer? If we are going to do that, let us bring in a general law and not do it by special preferment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. In answer to one of the gentleman's statements that the consul died here, he did die here. He had been in bed in Barcelona, Spain, for four months, where he broke down serving his country. As soon as he was able he was taken on a stretcher, placed on a train in Spain, transported over the railroad to the ship, in each instance of change being transported on a stretcher. He was brought after an illness of at least eight months, continuously bedridden.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the Government during that time provided for his transportation, for his hospitalization, and his compensation up to the time of his death.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is in error. The Government did not pay his hospital bill. I suppose the Government did pay his transportation bill, as it does in the case of all officers. It did not pay the doctor's bill or the hospital bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is to be any such policy, let it be established by law and not by special act.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the distinguished attachés of the Foreign Service, first to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and then to the gentleman from Long Island [Mr. Bacon], whom I see on his feet.

Mr. ALDRICH. But I am not appearing in that capacity. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman creditably fills the rôle.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thank the gentleman. In the case of Mary M. Deane, in whose behalf I introduced this bill, her husband died in Montreal. At the time of his death he had never received any retirement pay. The retirement pay had been in effect for a very short time. If he had retired under the terms of the bill, he would have received practically nothing. In this particular case the widow has a crippled child. She wants this money to have an operation performed upon this child. Unless she gets the money, she will be unable to have that operation performed. I admit that particular argument does not apply to the general principle, but I do not see, on the other hand, how the fact that we have a retirement pay under the Rogers bill affects the merits of this case.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather passing strange that when we were passing a general retirement act when it would have been proper to consider this retirement pay no such proposal was given. It was tentatively accepted then that that was to be virtually in lieu of this policy and we have virtually followed it. If Congress wants to adopt a different policy, bring in a general bill.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I think there is a distinction between retirement pay and a case where a man dies in service. The retirement pay does not go to his widow at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many in civilian life, commercial attachés and clerks in Foreign Service, if we adopt this policy, will be entitled to it? Certainly just because they occupy high positions is no reason why they should be singled out for preferment.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made by including the precedents for this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 924, for the relief of Sophie de Sota.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARY P. DEANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1942, for the relief of Mary P. Deane. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLARENCE G. YOUNG

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 360, for the relief of Clarence G. Young (S. 2697).

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the order under which we are proceeding, that request would be in order to-morrow, because an order was made last Friday evening that these days would be given to consideration of bills following a certain number, and it would be privileged to make that request. The gentleman from New York is temporarily absent—

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The gentlemen from New York has assured me that he has no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, if the gentleman has given the gentleman that assurance, I will not interpose any objection to returning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Clarence G. Young, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50 in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for the loss of a horse hired to the United States Forest Service on August 13, 1929.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JEANNETTE S. JEWELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4057, for the relief of Jeannette S. Jewell.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN A. RAPELYE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1256, for the relief of John A. Rapelye.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to what the Post Office Department reports on this bill. It reports as follows:

No indication of a forcible entry was found, and the condition in which the safe was left rendered it probable that the theft was committed by some one familiar with the manner in which funds were deposited in the safe overnight. It developed that four of the station employees had keys to the station and knew the combination of the safe. Each of these employees was closely questioned by post-office inspectors and one of them, who has since been dismissed from the service, was strongly suspected, but no evidence justifying prosecution could be obtained.

Under these circumstances, I doubt whether the bill ought to be passed, but in view of the fact that the department does not recommend against its passage, further than making that statement, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of John A. Rapelye, postmaster at Flushing, N. Y., with the sum of $1,249.08 to reimburse him for money-order and postal funds stolen from the Jackson Heights station of the Flushing post office on the night of March 3, 1927.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, in these days when there is a tendency to direct criticism at the Congress, I notice at least one newspaper has not overlooked the fact that the House yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow considers bills on the Private Calendar.

The article which I read referred to one or two private bills that had been passed by the House. I think it only fair that the Record show the necessity for considering bills of this character in the House and Senate.

The Government can not be sued without its consent, and therefore the citizens of this country have no alternative other than to appeal to the Congress when they have been injured by the act of a Government employee or a Government vehicle.

Bills on the Private Calendar are introduced by the thousands at each session of Congress. They are referred in the House to four committee, the Committee on Claims, Committee on War Claims, Committee on Military Affairs, and Committee on Naval Affairs. Now and then a private bill goes to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. All the committees named consider a private bill on the evidence submitted by the claimant, together with the views of the department under whose jurisdiction the employees responsible are a part of the personnel.

Probably not 1 in 10 bills introduced is favorably reported. Many of the bills, meritorious, have been before the Congress for years.

After a subcommittee makes its report to the full committee a private bill is voted upon by the full committee and if reported favorably is placed on the Private Calendar. Both the Democratic and Republican leaders appoint Members to give special attention to the Private Calendar. Each side has no less than three Members, and they prevent passage of bills where there is the least doubt that the responsibility rests with the claimant and not with the Government.

There is no railroading of bills through the House, as some would make the public believe. The fact is that more serious consideration is given to this private legislation than some of the more important public bills that have been passed.

Of course, the House checks the Senate and likewise the Senate checks the House on private bills. Then there is the right of the President to veto, if in his judgment the Congress has saddled an expense upon the Government that should have been borne by the citizen.

Take some of the bills on the calendar to-day. A woman rowing peacefully in a boat is killed by a Navy seaplane. She leaves five children, the youngest 11 months and the oldest 10 years. The scaplane failed to function and the Navy pilot could not control the machine, striking the boat and killing the occupant. A horse borrowed by the Department of Agriculture is killed while in possession of the Government. A private yacht destroyed by the Coast Guard and the evidence shows no violation of the law on the part of the citizen. A bill to take care of lost or stolen bonds, the bank under the terms of the bill required to file a bond so the Government runs no risk of loss. A man serving in the Marine Corps was denied the right to visit his mother who was critically ill. He left his command and was present at the bedside of his mother when she passed away. Immediately thereafter, instead of returning to the Marine Corps, he joined the Army, serving three years throughout the period of the Spanish War with a fine record. He wanted an honorable discharge from the marines so he would have a complete honorable record.

A boy is standing on the sidewalk of a large city and prohibition agents pour confiscated alcohol in the gutter. Some one throws a match in the gutter and the boy, 100 feet from the corner where the agents poured the alcohol, is burned, suffering injuries that make him an invalid for life. The agents violated all rules and regulations in pouring alcohol into a public gutter.

This is a sample of the bills that Congress is asked to consider because we have failed to set up any agency and extend to that agency the right to consider claims against the Government where the Government is at fault.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, my only purpose in rising is to let the Record show that despite the criticism that is directed at Congress for, as some papers say, wasting its time, nevertheless the Members are discharging their public duty, and those who criticize would be the first to demand that they be reimbursed if they suffered personal injury or property damage.

When a citizen is struck by an Army truck or a maildelivery wagon through no fault of his own he should have the same right to claim damages as if struck by your automobile. tion of claims against the Government through a proper Government agency clothed with proper jurisdiction, and if that bill is enacted into law, which I hope it will be in the near future, then thousands of the bills now introduced will be unnecessary, as the claims could be handled in another way. While our citizens suffer millions of dollars in damages annually as a result of property damage and personal injuries by Government employees and Government vehicles, only a few thousand dollars in damages are paid.

In these days when we have millions of motor vehicles going over the country and on the city streets, as well as airplanes and sea planes, many thousands of which belong to the Government of the United States, and no insurance being carried, it is only reasonable that accidents will occur from time to time wherein a citizen will be injured or will lose his or her life. The Government of the United States and the States provide laws whereby a citizen can sue a corporation or an individual for personal damages or property damage. It seems only fair that the citizens of the country should have the right to be heard by Congress until ways and means are provided to have their claims considered before a proper tribunal. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH MOSSEW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3822, for the relief of Joseph Mossew.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Mossew, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, the amount of a fine paid by Joseph Mossew in pursuance of a judgment entered upon a plea nolo contendere under certain provisions of the so-called Lever Act previous to the time that the Supreme Court of the United States held such provisions void, the said plea and said payment being made under a stipulation as follows: "In consideration that the Attorney General and this court shall accept the plea nolo contendere which I hereby tender to the above-entitled indictment, I do hereby waive any and all fines which the court may see fit to impose upon me upon such plea, except in the event that the so-called Lever Act under which said indictment is found shall be declared unconstitutional by said indictment is found shall be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States and that no prosecution could be sustained upon the facts stated in said indictment."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BARNEY RIEKE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6208, for the relief of Barney Rieke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the facts found in this case. The report shows that one of our Coast Guard patrol boats overhauled this Barney Google motor boat and gave it orders to stand by so they could board her and search for contraband. The owner of the boat, who was then under the influence of liquor, cursed and abused the Coast Guard took him back to land.

I have introduced a bill which provides for the considera- officers and interfered with their boarding the craft. The Barney Google finally got away from the Coast Guard boat and it was necessary to overhaul the Barney Google a second time. The Coast Guard boat finally took the Barney Google in tow. The line broke or became unfastened, and the Barney Google sank.

Now, it occurs to me that the men in charge of the Barney Google were to blame themselves. If they had cooperated, or, at least, had not obstructed the United States Coast Guard in the proper discharge of its duty, probably there would have been no disaster.

I reserve the right to object, in order that the gentleman from Ohio may make a statement about the bill if he wants to.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, first of all let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury himself said that the department is not in position to deny the justice of this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. The Secretary of the Treasury was a very poor hand at several things, one of which was enforcing the liquor laws, although at one time he was in charge of the Coast Guard. The Government has seen fit now to take him away from that position and send him abroad, where he will be virtually harmless.

Mr. CROSSER. The reason I call the attention of the gentleman to the report is because the gentleman has been asking for the department's attitude on these different bills, and in this case the different officers upheld this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking of the findings of fact of the officers of the Coast Guard who investigated the case.

Mr. CROSSER. Let me say that I am not one of those who berate the Coast Guard on account of their work. I am not complaining about that. I do say, however, that I can understand the attitude of persons who operate motor boats on the lakes near Cleveland, Buffalo, and other large cities, because frequently those who order them to stop are not officers; sometimes they are people who have no right to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. But when a United States officer hails them and tells them to stand by and tells them that he is a Federal officer of the law and he wants to come aboard and search them for contraband, it is their duty to stand by and let him do it.

Mr. CROSSER. But people have been asked to do this by those who were not officers at all right in our neighbor-

Mr. BLANTON. Why, the Coast Guard flag and the flag of the United States were flying on this boat.

Mr. CROSSER. This was at night.
Mr. BLANTON. They got away from the Coast Guard boat twice.

Mr. CROSSER. This was at night.
Mr. BLANTON. Here is what the findings state.

Mr. CROSSER. Wait a minute. They state that the boat started away in the first instance.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the finding of the Government officer:

That the owner of the motor boat Barney Google, Mr. B. H. Rieke, was under the influence of intoxicants on the night the boat was boarded by the CG-120, as evidenced by the testimony

2. That the occupants of the motor boat Barney Google refused to comply with a reasonable request of the officer in charge of patrol boat CG-120, who was acting in the regular course of his

Mr. CROSSER. It is not very unreasonable, is it, to assume that these men would find, for example, that this man was drinking, while he denies it? The board recommended that the member of the Coast Guard who was charged with negligence in handling the motor boat should be discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. They pulled him out of the water onto the patrol boat.

Mr. CROSSER. No. Mr. Rieke says he took him out of the water.

Mr. BLANTON. The patrol boat took care of him and

Mr. CROSSER. No. Mr. Berger was thrown into the water. Mr. Rieke, himself, threw a life preserver out to him and the patrol boat picked him up.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think this case ought to pass by unanimous consent. It ought to come up some time when we can carefully consider it on its merits.

Mr. CROSSER. Let it come to a vote of the House now.
Mr. BLANTON. If you allow a bill like this to go beyond the objection stage, every man here is responsible for its passage; and if it should pass by unanimous consent, the responsibility is on each individual Member's shoulders, and

I do not want that responsibility on mine.

Mr. CROSSER. I am perfectly willing to take it.

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately, the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object to this kind of a case; it is too wet for him to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I must rely on the dry proclivities of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CROSSER. There is a conflict of testimony in this case. Mr. Rieke solemnly swears he was not drinking.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows I hate to object to his bill; but it is a matter of duty, and the question of duty is above friendship. I therefore object.

ANDREW H. MILLS AND WILLIAM M. MILLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7815, to reimburse Andrew H. Mills and William M. Mills, copartners carrying on business under the firm name and style of Mills Bros., owners of the steamship Squantum, for damage to said vessel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I can not see any reason why the Government of the United States should be responsible for the lack of knowledge as to the proper court in which to file a claim of this kind, especially after an act of Congress authorized the suit to be filed and in a certain court. I would like to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black] explain the dereliction of duty and laches on the part of his clients.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman from New York is temporarily out of the Chamber, and I am unable to give the gentleman the explanation he desires. I have no personal knowledge of the case.

Mr. MOUSER. Without such explanation, I am obliged to object.

WILLIAM J. RYAN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 659, for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROY W. FARRELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 809, for the relief of Roy W. Farrell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman state his objection to this bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will give the gentleman my reason for objecting to the bill. This man had his rights under the retirement act as a reserve officer in 1921. He did not see fit to avail himself of those rights and now he says he did not know about them. However, after those rights had expired he again had relief coming to him under the 1928 act.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. The gentleman means the emergency officers' act?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. He did make application under that act, but they did not give him the 30 per cent rating which is necessary under that act.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is what I am getting to. He had the right under that act to go before a board and be examined. He went before a board and was examined. That board found he only had a 16 per cent disability. He is now asking Congress to cure his defect of sleeping on his rights for nine years and in addition to say that the board which examined him was wrong. Therefore I object.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Did the gentleman read the report in which it appears he was advised by officers in the Navy that he did not have that right and that he did not know he had it until he came before the committee last year?

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman must realize the mental caliber of an officer with the rank of junior lieutenant in the Navy. He is supposed to be familiar with existing law, and it is unbelievable that a man of his mental caliber would rely absolutely upon such advice.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. This simply gives him the right to appear before the retiring board. If he is not injured, no damage will be done. It does not cost a cent unless they find in his favor.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I think he has had ample recourse and ample examination, the same to which all other men were entitled under the retirement act. I will have to object.

VICTOR OSCAR GOKEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2254, for the relief of Victor Oscar Gokey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman give me an opportunity to answer his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve my right to object and permit the gentleman to make a statement showing why this man's record should be changed.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This is one of the many cases that occurred in the early days of the war, when grossly excessive sentences were imposed for comparatively trivial crimes. It was a plain case of absence without leave for 10 days. The man returned voluntarily. He was given a sentence of two years in prison and dishonorably discharged. Everyone who served in the Army knows that in the early days of the war the members of courts-martial were young, inexperienced, and overzealous officers, and many very excessive sentences were imposed. This, I think, is a most flagrant example. The circumstances, briefly, were these: The man was at the receiving ship in New York City. He was one of four sons who enlisted and joined the Army or the Navy. He left at home a widowed mother and one young sister. The mother became desperately ill and the young sister telegraphed him to come home. He was unable to get leave, but his commanding officer told him to go ahead and he would protect him in every possible way. At the very worst it was a case of absence without leave. The man went to his home to visit his mother. He was the nearest of four sons, all of whom were in the Navy or Army. He returned to his ship of his own free will, and was thrown into jail because of absence without leave, and given this excessive sentence. At the court-martial he was not represented by counsel and he was unable to produce any evidence except his own statement; and, as the gentleman knows, stories of this kind are always regarded with suspicion by officers of the Army and Navy. The evidence before the Naval Affairs Committee shows conclusively that this man's story was true.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The man, certainly, was not tried before a general court-martial without counsel, because the law is mandatory that he shall be provided with counsel.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Nevertheless, it is a fact that in this case the man had no counsel.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman evidently has been listening to what has been told this man by a guardhouse lawyer, but since this man only wants to clear his record, will the gentleman accept an amendment that under no circumstances shall any bounty, back pay, or allowance ever be paid to this man on account of the passage of this act?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If that is a necessary condition precedent, but it seems to me unfair.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. All the gentleman is trying to do is to put this man in a position to get a pension.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think he is entitled to it. I will say to the gentleman that I do not pose as a guardhouse lawyer, but I have had a great deal of experience in court-martial work as a summary court officer, as a trial judge advocate, and as an acting division judge advocate, and I do know about these cases.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Where a man has been absent three weeks, what difference would it make whether he had counsel or not?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The circumstances surrounding his going away and his voluntary return could have been shown to the court, and I will say to the gentleman that in many, many cases that have come before me and have received my personal attention, never was any such severe penalty as this inflicted. This offense was not committed in the face of the enemy. The gentleman understands human emotions. In this case there were four men in this one family who were taking part in the war with a widowed mother at home and it was a perfectly human thing for this man to obey this summons to come home.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think that the Judge Advocate General who attended to this case and the members of the court were just as fair as the gentleman?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. No; I am sure they were not.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And that the reason for the excessive sentence the gentleman has mentioned was on account of some things that neither the gentleman nor I know anything about?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I know all about the case, and I know that in the early days of the war the courtsmartial were composed of young officers who were overzealous and had an exaggerated idea about the seriousness of things. Every man in this Chamber who served in the Army or in the Navy knows this to be true.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Gladly.

Mr. MOUSER. As a matter of fact, unlike civil courts or criminal courts, the judge advocate, especially in the early part of the war, did not notify the accused of his right to have counsel.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. And there are many instances where the Judge Advocate General reversed the lower court-martial on the ground the accused was not given proper opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is true.

Mr. MOUSER. And that is the fact in this particular

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Under the statement of the gentleman from New York, who says he personally knows about this case, and also in view of the fact that this man returned voluntarily, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I thank the gentleman. There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws con-Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sallors, Victor Oscar Gokey, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on May 22, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out the word "honorably," and in line 7, after the word "discharged," insert "under honorable conditions."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LEWIS A. M'DERMOTT, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3644, for the relief of Lewis A. McDermott, deceased.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I reserve the objection.

Mr. COYLE. In the absence of my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DRANE], who reported this bill, I have assumed some responsibility as a member of the subcommittee that heard the testimony in this case.

The department advises that this man served honorably during the time he was in the Marine Corps. He left without permission, but he did not long remain in desertion. He subsequently enlisted in the Army and served two terms in the Philippines in war times and got honorable discharges on both occasions.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has rather made a rule for its own guidance-not for the guidance of this House, but for its own guidance—that where the intent to desert, if it existed, was cured by practically immediate reenlistment and honorable discharge after active service in the face of the enemy, the charge of desertion will be recommended for removal, particularly where the desertion or the dishonorable discharge did not involve any offense of moral turpitude. This man apparently cured his offense by subsequent service and his entire service during the three enlistments, except for this one offense, was apparently honorable. I do believe it is a case worthy of our consideration.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I withdraw

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give us the reason why the Committee on Naval Affairs have adopted the phraseology, different from what has been carried in prior Congresses, "discharge under honorable conditions" instead of "honorably discharged"? I ask that for the purpose of guidance of the Committee on Military Affairs in similar

Mr. COYLE. The phrase "under honorable conditions" was considered at the time by the Naval Affairs Committee as not being of the same import as issuing "an honorable discharge." Subsequently, however, they discovered that the two terms are practically synonymous, and no occasion exists for putting in "under honorable conditions."

The committee thought that if it was put in, ordering the issue of an honorable discharge, it might carry with it an obligation to change the discharge actually issued. whereas apparently it would not have that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is the policy of the Naval Affairs Committee to go back to the old phraseology?

Mr. COYLE. The Naval Affairs Committee will in the future consider the two terms synonymous.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman explain why the bill does not carry the proviso that no pension shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this

Mr. COYLE. I did not notice that that was omitted. It should carry that provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Lewis A. McDermott, deceased, late of the United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of the United States Marine Corps on the 25th day of April, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act. passage of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Lewis A. McDormott."

With the following committee amendments, which were agreed to:

Title, strike out the letter "e" after the letter "D" in Mc-Dermott, and insert in lieu thereof the letter "a."

Line 5, strike out the letter "e" after the letter "D" in Mc-Dermott, and insert in lieu thereof the letter "o." Line 7, strike out the word "honorably," and insert the words "under honorable conditions" after the word "discharged."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "pay," insert the word "pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BRENHAM, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3725, for the relief of the First National Bank of Brenham, Tex.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but I think it is strange that the report does not contain as usual the opinion of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know whether the committee requested a report from the Treasury Department or not, but I have a letter from the department which I will read.

The Treasury Department will oppose the passage of the bill H. R. 9349-

Which was the number of the bill at that time.

before the expiration of two years from the date of the reported

Now, it is three years and eight months from the loss of the bonds.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas has furnished a favorable report from the Secretary of the Treasury, and while it would have been better to have had the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in the report, the gentleman has virtually furnished the desired information, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem five 4½'s United States third Liberty bonds, Nos. 1163002, 1163003, 1163004, 1163005, and 1163006, of the denomination of $1,000 each, payable to bearer, and all unpaid interest due upon coupons on each of them, in favor of the First National Bank of Brenham, Tex., without presentation of said bonds or the coupons, which have been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment and that no payment shall be made hereunder for the coupons if they shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said the First National Bank of Brenham, Tex., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said bonds, and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed bonds or coupons herein described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FARMERS STATE BANK OF GEORGETOWN, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3726, for the relief of the Farmers State Bank of Georgetown, Tex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H. R. 3726

A bill for the relief of the Farmers State Bank of Georgetown, Tex. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem two 4½ s United States third Liberty bonds, numbered 4529791 and 4529792, of the denomination of $100 each, payable to bearer, and all unpaid interest due upon coupons on each of them from and after March 15, 1922, in favor of the Farmers State Bank of Georgetown, Tex., without presentation of said bonds or the coupons, which have been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment and that no payment shall be made hereunder for the coupons if they shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said Farmers State Bank of Georgetown, Tex., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said bonds, and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to A bill for the relief of the Farmers State Bank of Georgetown, Tex.

indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed bonds and coupons herein described.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GUST J. SCHWEITZER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill, H. R. 4910, for the relief of Gust J. Schweitzer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill is similar to two prior bills just considered, except that there is no protecting clause in the bill, as there was in those, safeguarding the interest of the Government in case the bonds should by any chance be presented for payment. I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] whether he is willing to incorporate the customary provisos.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that assurance, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400 to Gust J. Schweitzer, as compensation in full for the loss of Liberty loan bonds destroyed in a cyclone in the vicinity of Okarche, Okla., March 15, 1919, said bonds having been numbered 2849229 and 2849230 (third 4¼ issue) in the amount of $50 each; and numbered 1458809, 14558810, and 14558811 (fourth 4¼ issue) in the amount of $100 each.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 11, strike out "14558810" and insert "1458810," and strike out "14558811" and insert "1458811."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 12, page 1, insert "Provided, That said bonds shall not have been previously presented for payment and that no payment shall be made hereunder for the coupons, if they shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said Gust J. Schweitzer shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said bonds and the interest payable thereon in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of such stolen or destroyed bonds or coupons herein described. bonds or coupons herein described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

W. A. PETERS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5922) for the relief of W. A. Peters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of W. A. Peters, postmaster at Sallisaw, Okla., in the sum of $322.52. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the accounts of the said W. A. Peters caused by the loss by said W. A. Peters of postal funds deposited in the First National Bank of Sallisaw, Okla., which failed on November 22, 1027 22, 1927,

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out "$322.52" and insert "$614.80."

The committee amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN EVANS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5933) for the relief of John Evans.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, to John Evans, of St. Joseph, Mo., which sum was paid by him to the United States by reason of the forfeiture of the ball bond of John Waidner, who was later taken into custody by said Evans, at his own expense, and surrendered to the United States district court of St. Joseph, Mo., entered a plea of guilty, and sentenced to a term in jail.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,923.69," and on page 2, line 1, after the word "jaff," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ROBERT BENNETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 600) for the relief of Robert Bennett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Speaker, again I take some responsibility for Judge Drane, the gentleman from Florida, on this bill. It corrects a dishonorable-discharge record of a man who was only a boy at the time he enlisted in the service. He was 16 years old and had absented himself without leave long before he was 21 years old. Yet he carries the sting of that desertion through life, even though he subsequently went back and surrendered himself and got in return a discharge under dishonorable conditions. It seems to me there ought to be some court before which these boys can appear and get their citizenship rights back after they have committed an offense that would not have been punished by the removal of citizenship rights in any civil jurisdiction in view of their minority. This boy was only 17 or 18 years of age at the time he left the service.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in this case, as in several other like cases, there appears to be not one single word of extenuating circumstances. The statement is made that on account of the sickness of a relative he deserted, an ordinary statement, frequently true, but an easy excuse for an absence without leave. There is not another thing in this record to show why he should appear 29 years afterwards and ask to have his record cleared or why the record should be cleared now excepting that 29 years afterwards he comes in and says, "I was a boy and I want you, please, now to give me a clean record." I do not want to put into this Record, so that it will be publicly perpetuated, his actual record while he served as shown in the report from the Department of the Navy.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I was about to withdraw my objection. If the gentleman says that this is a proper case under all of the facts to grant this, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coyle] has had distinguished service as an officer in our Navy, I understand. I understand also that he has made recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy with regard to not giving dishonorable discharges to boys who have charges against them unless such charges involve moral turpitude.

How far has the gentleman gotten with such recommendations?

Mr. COYLE. The recommendations have been accepted by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BLANTON. Are they being put into execution now?

Mr. COYLE. I feel quite certain that they are in process of dissemination to the entire naval service at the present time. I think the situation really needs some action from within the Navy Department rather than coming from Congress, and I so endeavored to impress it upon the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that the gentleman has performed some service for the boys at Parris Island by addressing them on Thanksgiving Day. The gentleman will find among the bunch at Parris Island some splendid young fellows who have been court-martialed and given dishonorable discharges, when they have been guilty of no moral turpitude whatever. They have been guilty of some petty offense that did not involve moral turpitude, and I wish to commend the gentleman for his effort to have that condition remedied.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Robert Bennett, formerly of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of the United States Navy on the 9th day of June, 1899; Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAMUEL PUFF BAILEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5289, for the relief of Samuel Puff Bailey.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the author of this bill, Mr. Seiberling, has been absent for some days on account of illness. He should be back here by the first of next week, and I ask that this bill be placed on a lower place in the calendar where it may be reached when the gentleman can be present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that he understands objection must be made. The bill can not be passed by unanimous consent. It retains its place on the calendar.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I shall be compelled to object to this bill.

HAROLD I. JUNE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5594, for the relief of Harold I. June.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. TIERNEY. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. TIERNEY. This bill is for the purpose of allowing Harold I. June to transfer to the United States Fleet Naval Reserve. This bill is introduced at the request of Admiral Richard E. Byrd, who on his record flight over the South Pole, where he spent 22 months, was accompanied by Harold I. June, who was his chief aviation pilot. Mr. June would be able, after 16 years' service, to retire in 1935 by transfer to Fleet Naval Reserve. He has a credit of 22 months, during which he was absent on leave in order to make that trip to the South Pole, and Admiral Byrd would like very much to have his services this summer. We are in a peculiar position, where his three years are nearly taken up in service at the South Pole and in other services with Admiral Byrd for the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I understand the purpose of this bill is to credit this aviation pilot with the service that he gave in the expedition of Admiral Byrd and for the coming expedition?

Mr. TIERNEY. Well, if taken in that light he would deserve credit for 22 months out of the three years, and then he may have to have another leave next month in order to go with Admiral Byrd on another possible trip, which might extend nine months or might extend to a time well over three years. This officer to-day is receiving double the pay he would get if he was on the reserve list.

This bill is recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no danger of this being a precedent to grant credit for services not performed, in that he is given credit for service that he has performed with Admiral Byrd?

Mr. TIERNEY. No. It is not intended as a precedent. As I recall, he was acclaimed in the House when he appeared after the South Pole flight with Admiral Byrd, and he has received no recognition for his service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 432 be substituted in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Harold I. June, chief aviation pilot, United States Navy, shall, in recognition of the assistance rendered by him as an assistant to Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, United States Navy, in his nationally recognized record flight over the South Pole, be permitted to transfer to the Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy at such time as he may request, while he is serving in the regular Navy of the United States, and shall, after transfer in accordance with this provision, receive the same pay, allowance, or other compensation as is now or may hereafter be authorized by law for enlisted men of the United States Navy who are transferred after 16 years' service in the regular Navy of the United States.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Tierney: Page 2, line 3, after the words "sixteen years," insert "and one day."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ANDREW H. MILLS AND WILLIAM M. MILLS-

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 382, H. R. 7815, which is a bill that was called up in my absence.

Mr. MOUSER. That is the bill which I asked to go over, which I did not have the right to do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $900 to Mills Bros., owners of the steamship Squantum, in compensation for damage sustained by said steamship company by reason of the striking of the steamship Squantum by the steam lighter Thomas H. Timmins on January 27, 1919, while the former vessel was anchored at the foot of Bedloes Island, North River, N. Y.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAMUEL PUFF BAILEY

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 393, the bill (H. R. 5289) for the relief of Samuel Puff Bailey, for the purpose of having the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, or the gentleman from the Naval Affairs Committee, state whether or not there is any justification for this bill. If there is, in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Seiberling], I do not want to appear to be objecting to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have already passed that point on the calendar; and I object.

RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6637, authorizing the President to present a medal of honor to Richmond Pearson Hobson.

Mr. STAFFORD: Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I question whether there are many Members in the Chamber at the present time, certainly not among the Members of the present House, who served with the distinguished naval officer, Richmond Pearson Hobson.

I rise now largely to inquire of the gentleman, who is so well informed on naval matters, as to what the policy of the Navy Department is in the awarding of the various honors that are bestowed in the Navy?

The War Department bestows the congressional medal of honor, the distinguished-service cross, and the distinguished-service medal. In the Navy Department, I am informed, they have the distinguished Navy cross and the distinguished-service medal.

Mr. COYLE. And the flying cross.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the flying cross, which they have also in the Army.

In the military service we differentiate between the distinguished-service cross and the distinguished-service medal, conferring the distinguished-service cross upon those who have shown marked distinction in combat service, and the distinguished-service medal upon those in the employ of the Government in a civilian capacity who have performed some outstanding service.

I wish to inquire of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the policy pursued by the Navy Department in the award of these honors.

Mr. COYLE. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that all of the men who engaged in the exploit, which in large measure made this naval officer famous, have received medals, but the man who commanded the expedition and whose brains and ingenuity carried it through could not, under the law, receive a medal without an act of Congress, and has not yet received a medal for the sinking of that ship in Santiago Harbor. This is a belated act of justice.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Navy Department, if the gentleman's statement is correct, is more circumscribed in the award of honors than is the War Department.

Mr. COYLE. The Navy Department can award medals to enlisted men, but not to officers without an act of Con-

Mr. STAFFORD. And the War Department awards are made to officers as well.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his demand for a couple of minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the Navy a medal of honor?

Mr. COYLE. My impression is that the bill calls for a medal. It does not particularly say a medal of honor or a congressional medal of honor or Navy cross.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says:

In the name of Congress a medal of honor.

That makes it a congressional medal of honor.

I am inquiring of the gentleman whether the Navy Department recognizes that insignia and distinction?

Mr. COYLE. It is my impression they do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to present, in the name of Congress, a medal of honor to Richmond Pearson Hobson, formerly an officer of the United States Navy, for distinguishing himself conspicuously by extraordinary courage and intrepidity at the risk of his life on June 3, 1898, by entering the fortified harbor of Santiago, Cuba, and sinking the partially dismantled collier Merrimac in the channel under persistent fire from the enemy fleet and fortifications on shore.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLES C. BENNETT

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 191, H. R. 5235, a bill for the relief of Charles C. Bennett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that would culminate in a lot of similar requests, and I object.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection until I can explain my reason for making this request?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York has promised that he will move to adjourn when we reach Calendar No. 397. We are counting on that promise, because some of us want to get through.

Mr. MOUSER. May I say that this gentleman from North Carolina went to the trouble to pay his expenses and come up here to offer additional evidence in support of the bill. The Senate passed the bill yesterday.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not going to permit this bill to pass, even if we do return to it, is he?

Mr. MOUSER. I certainly am. I was the only one who objected to it, and I have changed my mind.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will have plenty of time to think it over to-night, and I object.

FLORENCE NORTHCOTT HANNAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6860, for the relief of Florence Northcott Hannas.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That Florence Northcott Hannas, mother of Walter William Northcott, late of the United States Navy, shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary and dependent of the late Walter William Northcott, under the act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 824; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 943).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RUSSELL N. BOARDMAN AND JOHN L. POLANDO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7939, to authorize the presentation of a distinguished-flying cross to Russell N. Boardman and John L. Polando.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the awarding of a proper medal to these two fliers, but I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that recently, in the Amelia Earhart Putnam bill, it was suggested to award her a distinguished-flying cross. The Committee on Military Affairs got in touch with the War Department and was advised that they felt they wanted to conserve that medal for men in the service and in the combat ranks, and the Committee on Military Affairs will offer an amendment to that bill providing for the awarding of a distinguished-service medal in place of a distinguished-flying cross. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will accept an amendment along those lines, in keeping with the policy of the department, I shall not object.

Mr. CONNERY. I will be glad to accept that amendment, but with the understanding that it is to be the policy of the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee that anything outside of the combat service in the future shall provide for a distinguished-service medal rather than a distinguished-flying cross. I do not want somebody else to come along next week and get a distinguished-flying cross when these two men made the longest nonstop flight ever made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to present, in the name of the Congress, a distinguished-flying cross to present, in the name of the Congress, a distinguished-flying cross to Russell N. Boardman, of Brookline, Mass., and John L. Polando, of Lynn, Mass., who achieved a 5,011.8-mile nonstop trans-Atlantic flight from the United States to Istanbul, Turkey.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. In line 4, after the word "Congress," strike out the words "a distinguished-flying cross" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a distinguished-service medal."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: In line 4, after the word "Congress," strike out the words "a distinguished-flying cross" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a distinguished-service medal.'

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 276, GIVING STATES THE RIGHT TO SUE THE UNITED STATES TO RECOVER DIRECT TAXES COLLECTED IN 1866, 1867, 1868

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing some remarks I made before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary on Resolution 296, and to insert the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, made some time ago before subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, I include the following resolution:

[H. J. Res. 276, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

Joint resolution consenting that certain States may sue the United States, and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the years 1868, 1867, 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own

Whereas the United States, under various acts of Congress, levied a tax against all kinds of manufactured goods and raw material, and collected it from many citizens, partnerships, and corporations in various States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868; and Whereas it was then and has ever since been contended by many

30, 1866, 1867, and 1868; and

Whereas it was then and has ever since been contended by many citizens that said taxes were levied in violation of the Federal Constitution because, as they alleged, they were direct taxes and were not apportioned among the States according to population as required by Article I, section 2, of the said Constitution; and

Whereas legislatures of many States have passed acts authorizing and directing their governors to propound to the United States their claims to all moneys heretofore illegally collected and covered into the Federal Treasury as a direct tax upon property situated in said States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the United States consents that suits to recover taxes hereafter mentioned may be brought against it and heard and determined in the Supreme Court or any district court of the United States by any and every State which has passed, or which within four years hereafter shall pass, an act authorizing and directing its governor or other representative to propound to the United States its claims for moneys alleged to have been heretofore illegally collected in that State and covered into the Treasury of the United States as a direct tax during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and providing for the repaying to the original taxpayers or their legal representatives, where payment and ownership have been properly established, and also providing for escheat to the State after a period of not less than two years from the time the moneys herein referred to shall have been received by the State. Where suit is filed in a district court, service shall be perfected as provided by title 28, section 63, United States Code.

That the right of action to recover in the Supreme Court or district court of the United States moneys alleged to have been illegally collected and covered into the Federal Treasury as direct taxes during the years before mentioned is hereby vested in each State in which such direct taxes were paid, and which has passed or shall provided.

That the United States shall contest such claims solely upon the That the United States shall contest such claims solely upon the ground of the legality of said tax, other defenses being hereby waived; and if the court shall decide that said taxes were illegally collected, the United States shall defend such suit or suits no further than for the purpose of determining the amounts of taxes collected in the respective States which may institute suit hereunder, provided no interest shall be allowed.

Mr. Hare. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, you have just heard the resolution.

Of course, it provides for action on the part of any of the States in the Supreme Court of the United States to determine whether the revenue acts of Congress in 1866 and 1867 were constitutional when they levied and collected taxes on certain raw materials. In when they levied and collected taxes on certain raw materials. In order to get the full import of the laws of 1866 and 1867 I think it will be advisable to refer to section 75 of the internal revenue act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. 465), which levied a tax on raw cotton, as I understand, and collected it in many of the various States of the United States. This act provided:

"On and after the certain day of October, 1862, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one-half of 1 cent per pound on all cotton held or owned by any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons, and such tax shall be a lien thereon in the possession of any person whomsoever. And further if any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall remove, carry, or transport the same from the place of its production before said tax shall have been paid such person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall forfeit and pay to the United States double the amount of such tax, to be recovered in any court having jurisdiction thereof."

I want to emphasize that part which attempts to prohibit the court having jurisdiction thereof."

I want to emphasize that part which attempts to prohibit the "removal" of cotton from the producer before the tax is paid, providing that the holder or owner thereof shall pay a double penalty in case of removal. I make this observation here because I think it shows conclusively that the intention was to place a direct tax on the producer of the commodity, the material, or the product, and that he was supposed to pay it. I am further convinced of the correctness of this opinion, because we find in the same act a provision to the effect that cotton found in the the same act a provision to the effect that cotton found in the hands of the manufacturer was exempt from the tax. In the hands of the producer it was to pay at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per pound; in the hands of the broker or, as we say in these more modern days, "the middleman," 2 cents per pound would be payable; and in the hands of the manufacturer it would be exempt from taxation.

would be exempt from taxation.

By the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. 308), a tax of 2 cents per pound was imposed on raw cotton; and by the act of July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. 98), this rate was amended to read 3 cents per pound, the act providing:

"That on and after the 1st day of August, 1866, in lieu of the taxes on unmanufactured cotton, as provided in 'An act, * * ',' approved June 30, 1864, as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, there shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all cotton produced within the United States, and upon which no tax has been levied, paid, or collected, a tax of 3 cents per pound, * * *."

Under the act of February 3, 1868 (15 Stat. 34), the law providing for a tax on raw cotton was virtually repealed. This act provided:

provided:
"That all cotton grown in the United States after the year 1867 shall be exempt from internal tax; and cotton imported from foreign countries on and after November 1, 1868, shall be exempt

Our contention is that this was a direct tax and therefore un-constitutional, for the reason that it was not apportioned among the several States according to population, as provided in Article I, section 2, of the Constitution.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Was this tax levied upon any other commodity than cotton? Mr. Hare. Yes.

CHRISTOPHERSON. What other commodities?

Mr. Harr. Among other things, it was levied on sugar, if I recall correctly, tobacco, calfskins, goatskins, and so forth.

Mr. Christopherson. By the same methods, which also raise that same question in the case of sugar?

Mr. Hare. Yes. I want to make it clear at the beginning that it is not the purpose of this resolution to confine the actions of the States to recover the tax on cotton alone, but other commodities coming within the same class, provided it is held to be a direct tax as contemplated by the Constitution.

Mr. Christopherson. The reason I ask is, of course, if we pass this resolution we would have to pass similar resolutions as to all other commodities, in fairness.

Mr. Hare. No; all other commodities are covered by this resolution. The resolution provides that any of the States may have the right to come into court to determine whether or not taxes levied and collected under the revenue act of 1866 amounted to a direct tax and therefore unconstitutional.

Mr. Christopherson. Has this proposal been before Congress on any other occasion heretofore?

Mr. Hare. It has been before Congress in various ways, since 1872, at more or less frequent intervals.

Mr. Christopherson. On a similar proposal as this, or has it been in the form of claims presented?

Mr. Hare. It has been, as a rule, in the form of claims.

Mr. Christopherson. And the Claims Committee, I suppose, rejected them?

jected them?
Mr. Hare. Yes.
Mr. Christopherson. Have you any information as to how much would be involved in the settlement of all these claims?
Mr. Hare. It is my understanding that approximately $200,000,000 were collected from the various States under the different revenue acts referred to. The total amount collected on cotton alone was approximately $64,679,000.
Mr. Dominick. As I understand, this bill does not refer only to cotton?

cotton?

Mr. HARE. No.

Mr. Hare. No.
Mr. Dominick. It refers to other direct taxes?
Mr. Hare. Yes; as I have just explained.
The Treasury Department has no record showing in detail the individuals from whom these direct taxes were collected. The records as to the amount collected for each State is a compilation of figures in the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, showing the total amount collected from the different States for the various articles are definite in that the figures are furnished by the Treasury Department.
This resolution presupposes that legislation has been enacted.

This resolution presupposes that legislation has been enacted or will be enacted in the various States which, in effect, would provide that the right or interest of any individual who could not show the amount of taxes paid would escheat to the State. For instance, if a State should bring an action in the Supreme Court or a district court and the court would find that that law was or a district court and the court would find that that law was unconstitutional, and then judgment should be obtained for the amount collected from that State, the individual taxpayers of the State would have the right to file their claims with the State for adjudication, and if sufficient proof could be shown, the claim would be recognized, approved, and paid. But in case the claim could not be substantiated by sufficient proof, the rights and interests of such individuals would escheat to the State and the State could then dispose of the funds as its legislature should see fit. see fit.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Hare, if I may make an inquiry at this point: It is your contention that the several States would have the right to sue for the individual taxpayers who paid those taxes?

Mr. Hare. The State would take the position that it was suing for all of the taxpayers in the State, collectively.

Mr. Sparks. For the purpose of avoiding a multiplicity of suits?

Mr. Hare. That is correct. I hope to get to that point a little

I might say that for many years this tax was thought to be constitutional, in that it was held to be a tax on personal property, the original idea being that direct taxes as contemplated in the Constitution applied only to taxes on land. This was the position taken, as I understand, when the matter was heard in 1873. However, in later years, in the case of Pollock v. The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S. 601), in the opinion rendered by Chief Justice Fuller, he said:

"The Constitution does not say that no direct tax shall be laid by apportionment on any other property than land; on the con-trary, it forbids all unapportioned direct taxes, and we know of no warrant for excepting personal property from the exercise of the power.

stated further in the same opinion, in summing up his conclusion:

He stated further in the same opinion, in summing up his conclusion:

"We are of opinion that taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes."

You will remember that this opinion was rendered after Congress passed the original income tax law. As already suggested, authority could be given individual claimants to bring action to recover the taxes sought to be reached, but the same thing can be accomplished under the proposed legislation and avoid a multiplicity of suits. At the same time, it will be much easier and less expensive for claimants to file their claims in their respective States than to file them with the Federal Government.

We take the position, however, that the State has a right to bring the suit in, that it has the right to protect its citizens from illegal tax assessments. I think this principle was enunciated and decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hamilton et al. v. Brown et al. (161 U. S. 256).

This is not an unprecedented action on the part of Congress, for similar action was taken by an act of Congress in 1912, when authority was granted individuals to bring suit to recover taxes assessed and collected under the revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The question as to whether or not the tax referred to was a direct tax or an excise tax is the crux of the whole situation, and that is the matter to be decided by the Supreme Court. My understanding of the difference between a direct tax and an excise tax is that a direct tax is one levied and imposed upon the property simply because of its ownership, whereas an excise tax would tax is that a direct tax is one levied and imposed upon the property simply because of its ownership, whereas an excise tax would be a tax upon the earnings, income, or revenues arising out of such property.

Property.

Referring particularly to cotton, the tax was not levied on the value of the cotton at all. It was not said that there shall be 1 per cent or 2 per cent or any other per cent of the value of cotton to be paid at the time it was being processed, but it said that 1 cent, 2 cents, and even 3 cents shall be paid, per pound, on cotton in the hands of the owner, showing conclusively that the tax was to be paid by a particular person. That is, ownership was a condition precedent to the collection of the tax, and I think it can be shown that ownership in this particular case had reference to the producer, or to the grower, as we have already indicated. producer, or to the grower, as we have already indicated.

Mr. Christopherson. How was this tax collected and paid? It as not at the time of sale. Did they go around and check up at different times and see how much cotton each man had? How

Mr. Hare. No; the man was required, as I understand it, to pay the tax on his cotton just as he paid the tax on his livestock, or on his land, or on any other property, except he paid the taxes on his livestock, and so forth, to his State government, whereas he paid the tax on his cotton to the Federal Government.

I might illustrate my idea of the difference between a direct and an indirect tax in this way: If I were a producer or a grower of cotton, and a tax, we will say, of 3 cents per pound is levied by the Federal Government, that would be a direct tax. But if I were a manufacturer of cotton, and a tax of so much per pound or so much on the value of the cotton were levied, then it would be an excise tax. Or, if the law had provided for a tax of 2 per cent on the value of the cotton at the time of sale, that would probably be an excise tax; but in this case the tax was so much per pound in the hands of the producer and, therefore, a direct tax.

Mr. Dominick. How do you draw that distinction, Mr. Hare?
Mr. Hare. The distinction is that a direct tax can not be passed on to the consumer, but must be paid by the producer, whereas the excise tax is one which may be passed on to the consumer. The direct tax becomes, in this illustration, a definite and certain tax to be paid by the individual producer or grower.

Justice Brown, in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust | Co. (39 L. E. 787; 157 U. S. 491), in making a distinction between and indirect taxes said:

"Direct taxes are paid by the taxpayer, both immediately and ultimately; while indirect taxes are paid immediately by the taxpayer and ultimately by some one else."

Mr. DOMINICK. You are not drawing a distinction, then, on the basis that the tax was so much on some certain unit or a per-centage of the price? There is no difference there so far as the principle of taxation is concerned, is there?

Mr. HARE. Yes; if I understand you correctly, there is a differ-nce. If it were based upon the value of the commodity, there would be this difference: It would be variable and would come in that class of what the courts have said to be, as I understand it, an excise tax. But when it is definite, certain, and unchangeable, as was the case in this instance, it is a direct tax. It is direct on the theory that at some time or other a direct tax may be confiscatory. For instance, there have been times when cotton confiscatory. For instance, there have been times when cotton would not be worth 3 cents a pound, which was the amount of the tax in one of the revenue acts referred to at the outset. I have known certain grades of cotton to bring less than 3 cents per pound on the market.

Mr. Sparks. In other words, a direct tax is a certain tax upon certain personal property, regardless of its valuation?

Mr. Hare. Yes; that is one distinction. It is the distinction I am trying to make. But it goes further and stipulates the person who shall pay the tax.

Mr. Dominick. Let us take a suppositious case. You would consider, for instance, a tax on gasoline of so much per gallon as a direct tax for that reason?

direct tax for that reason?

Mr. Hare, No; I do not think I would. If it were levied at the well, to be paid by the producer, that would be a different matter. You see, gasoline is a manufactured or a refined product. It has been processed. Whereas we are contending that direct taxes are on raw materials, unprocessed materials, in the hands of the original producer. If a tax were levied at the well at so much per barrel on the raw material before it is processed, to be paid before it leaves the hands of the producer or owner. I think paid before it leaves the hands of the producer or owner, I think that would be a direct tax.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. In other words, the proposed tax on gasoline is a sales tax?

Mr. Hare. Yes; as compared with the tax on raw material.
Mr. DOMINICK. What I can not get clear in my own mind is why there should be a difference in the element of the tax, as to why there should be a difference in the element of the tax, as to whether or not it is so much per unit or whether it is based upon a percentage of the value of the product.

Mr. Sparks. As I understood you a while ago, a tax upon certain personal property, regardless of its valuation, might equal the entire value of the property itself?

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. Dominick. You could come to the same result by levying

Mr. Dominick. You could come to the same result by levying a tax at a percentage of the value of the commodity?

Mr. Hare. Of course, we are making a further distinction in this, that the tax applies directly to the producer or the grower and when you get back to naming the individual, that is in violation of that part of the Constitution which says direct taxes shall not be levied except according to population.

Mr. Dominick. I understand that; but how are we going to get by with some of the taxes that we have levied and are proposing to levy to-day?

Mr. HARE. If we are levying any taxes that would come within this interpretation of a direct tax, I think it will be unconstitu-

Mr. Dominick. That is the thought in my mind.

Mr. Dominick. That is the thought in my mind.

Mr. Hars. I think a direct tax is still clearly unconstitutional.

Of course, it is not my purpose to argue at length or go into any great detail here as to the constitutionality of the law. That is a matter to be presented to the courts. However, I would like to make this further observation. I assume there can be no doubt but what a tax on land would be considered a direct tax and held to be unconstitutional. And, under our more modern construction or interpretation of the Constitution, there seems to be no question but what Congress has the right to levy and collect a tax on incomes arising from the sale of products of the soil, but it has not been settled whether it has the right to tax the crop or prodnot been settled whether it has the right to tax the crop or products themselves. It is our contention that a tax on farm crops, in place of a tax on the income from the sale of such crops, is a direct tax and, therefore, unconstitutional. This is particularly true of the tax in question, because at the time the law was enacted and the tax collected the grower or producer, in most cases, manufactured and consumed in his own household much of the cotton produced on his own farm. Therefore, to hold that such a law was constitutional would be equivalent to saying that Congress has the right to tax an article made and consumed by the individual. Upon such an interpretation Congress would have the individual. Upon such an interpretation Congress would have the right to levy and collect a tax on the pork, wheat, fruits, and vegetables grown and consumed by every farmer in the country which, I am sure, would be a principle or policy of government that would shock the conscience and good judgment of every American citizen.

I might go a little further and suggest that the law referred to is in effect a tax on land and I invite your attention to section 30 of the act of July 13, 1866, which provided:

"That in any case where goods, chattels, or effects sufficient to satisfy the taxes imposed by law upon any person liable to pay the same shall not be found by the collector or deputy collector whose duty it may be to collect the same, he is hereby authorized to collect the same by seizure and sale of real estate; and the officer making such seizure and sale shall give notice to the person whose estate is proposed to be sold, by giving him in hand, or leaving at his last or usual place of abode, if he has any such within the collection district where said estate is situated, a within the collection district where said estate is streated, a notice, in writing, stating what particular estate is proposed to be sold, describing the same with reasonable certainty, and the time when and place where said officer proposes to sell the same; which time shall not be less than 20 nor more than 40 days from which time shall not be less than 20 nor more than 40 days from the time of giving said notice."

It appears from this provision that in case the collector was unable to find the cotton grown by the producer, and the tax on same had not been paid, he would have the right to selze, give notice to the grower, and sell the land on which the cotton was grown, or any other land the producer may own or have in his ssion.

Gentlemen, for a long time this proposal of refunding this tax was considered a sectional question. For instance, in 1873, when the matter of refunding the cotton tax was seriously considered, I the matter of refunding the cotton tax was schouls; considered, I think it would have been adjusted if it had not been considered and interpreted as a sectional question. This was immediately following the Civil War. It was the opinion of those in authority that it applied only to the cotton-producing States.

Mr. Sparks. It also applied to the sugar-producing States and the States producing any other commodities that may have been to the sugar-producing states.

Mr. Hare. Yes. But the particular tax I am referring to is the cotton tax, and that is what they tried to have refunded. In order to show the attitude of those who opposed the refund, I want to read to the committee a statement furnished at the time by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, I believe it was, prepared by Mr. Kimball, who was then Chief of the Internal Revenue

Bureau. He states:

"That the southern people were wholly unrepresented in Congress when the internal tax bill, which imposed a tax on cotton, was passed is only too true."

Now, it was contended at that time that the tax ought to be refunded because when the law was enacted the Representatives from the Southern States were not present.

Proceeding further he says:

"But whose fault was it that they were unrepresented? It was not the fault of the States that were represented nor of the people of these States. It was not the fault of Congress, nor of the judicial or executive branches of the Government. It was not the fault of any one or all of these. It was the fault of the cotton States and the people of the cotton States. It was the fault of States and the people of the cotton States. It was the fault of their own Senators and Representatives. These, one after another, under instructions from those whom they represented, or self-impelled, resigned their seats in Congress and returned to their constituents to make war upon the United States, to disrupt the Federal Union, and to establish a Southern Confederacy out of the broken fragments. They were voluntary acts on the part of the Southern States and their Representatives. Gladly would I draw the veil of oblivion over this painful record; but where such a reason as this is put forth for the refunding of a tax made necessary by the very circumstances upon which the claim for refunding is based, the truth must be told. Had the Representatives of the South remained in allegiance to the National Government, had they retained their seats in Congress, and used the same amount of influence and persuasion to dissuade their people same amount of influence and persuasion to dissuade their people from entering into insurrection and rebellion as they did exert to push them into it, there would have been no rebellion, no war, no cotton tax, no internal-revenue tax of any kind. Having chosen their own course and taken it voluntarily, having committed the great wrong of resigning their seats in Congress, inaugurating war, and prosecuting it until hope was extinguished and all further efforts became vain and futile, we say, and we have a right to say, 'Gentleman, you can not now take advantage of your own errors, wrongs, and mistakes."

I read this simply for the purpose of showing the state of mind at the time the claim was presented in 1873. This attitude was assumed for many years. But, of course, it is a source of gratification to all of us that no one will longer subscribe to the suggestion made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Sparks. I do not think it will make any difference, and it should not make any difference, what the attitude of any of the States may have been in this matter in relation to the continuance of the Union. The question was whether or not under the Constitution these taxes could be rightfully imposed, and whether they were represented or not represented should not make any difference.

Mr. HARE. You are correct, and I fully agree with you. matter of fact, the direct taxes referred to in this resolution did not apply simply to the cotton-producing States, but applied to every State in the Union; and if the resolution is passed, practically every State will be entitled to a refund. If I am not mistaken, 26 States will be entitled to a refund of the cotton tax, whereas less than one-half of them are producers of cotton. For example, New York will be entitled to more than $700,000; Ohio about $250,000; Illinois $125,000; Vermont $168,000; Indiana over $80,000, none of which have ever been considered cotton-growing States and were represented in Congress when all the laws referred to were enacted.

One objection made in a hearing similar to this a few years ago was to the effect that the taxpayer himself, if he has a claim, should have the right to bring his own action, and not the State. Of course, they assume that the taxpayers who paid this tax are practically all dead. That is true. However, there has been no laches on the part of the people who may have had this right, because they have been coming to Congress in various ways, as I said, since 1872. I can possibly best illustrate the point I am endeavoring to make in this connection by making a personal reference. My father was a farmer who paid this tax. I can recall when he exhibited receipts for taxes he paid on his cotton. Of course, it would be impossible for me, his children, or any of his heirs to establish a claim at this time, because the receipts are lost or destroyed. Yet the claim exists, and the right to recover still exists, provided the law levying the taxes was unconstitutional, and some one should be permitted to come in and exercise that right.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Let me ask you a question along that line. Suppose this bill were passed and your State and other States brought their actions, judgment was recovered, and the money collected. Where would it go? I assume that many of those who lected. Where would it go? I assume that many of those who paid the tax are gone. It would go to the States, would it not?

Mr. Hare. Yes. Let me follow my illustration just a little further. If this resolution were passed, and the Supreme Court should find the law unconstitutional, South Carolina could recover judgment for the amount collected from the taxpayers within the State. Then if I and the other heirs of my father are unable to establish a bona fide claim to the amount of taxes he paid, his right, or our interest in the claim, would escheat to the State of South Carolina and the money would be distributed as the State legislature sees fit.

Mr. Sparks. If this resolution should pass, of course, the claims would have to be established under the regular laws having to do with the admissibility of evidence?

Mr. Hare. Certainly.
Mr. Christopherson. I presume the Government has a record of what moneys they collected from each State?

Mr. Hare. It has a record showing what was collected from each State, but not from each individual.

Mr. Christopherson. So that under this bill the only question that would be presented in court would be whether or not the tax was illegal?

Mr. HARE. That is right.

Mr. Christopherson. And if it were decided it was illegal, then the books of the Government would be taken as controlling in the matter of the amount involved?

Mr. Hare. Or if the courts should hold that the tax was legally levied and collected under the Constitution, that would end the entire controversy.

Mr. Christopherson. You think about $200,000,000 are involved,

Mr. Hare. That is my understanding. Mr. Christopherson. Has a check been made on the books of the Government?

Mr. Hare. I think that information was presented in a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee a few years ago. Mr. Smith, who was an attorney representing a number of States in connection with this matter, probably has more definite information along that line than I have, and I will ask the committee to hear him a little later.

Mr. Christopherson. In what form was this matter before the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. HARE. This bill?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes Mr. Hare. It was similar in many respects

Mr. Christopherson. How long ago was that? Mr. Hare. Three years ago.

Mr. Dominick. The bill, I believe, was introduced by Mr. Vestal, of Indiana, who died just recently.

Mr. Hare. Yes; he was very much interested in the matter, and he and I went into the case at length a few days prior to his death. I might say, in the original resolution it provided that certain taxes on manufactured goods should be considered as direct taxes. I suggest that if the committee gives favorable considera-tion to this resolution that particular provision should be elimi-nated, and the preamble then will read:

"Whereas the United States under various acts of Congress levied a direct tax against raw material and collected it from many citizens, partnerships, and corporations in various States during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1866, 1867, and 1868: * *." In other words, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be entirely proper to eliminate on line 2, paragraph 2, page 1, the following words: "all kinds of manufactured goods and." The resolution would then apply to direct taxes against raw material only.

The question of whether a State has any right to intervene or interfere in behalf of those who paid the taxes has been raised heretofore. It seems to me that the State is as much entitled to protect its citizens from illegal tax collections as it has to protect them in other matters. I think if the Federal Government, by legislation or otherwise, should by affirmative action initiate any undertaking that would have the effect of endangering the health of the citizens of a State, the State would certainly have the right to intervene. Or if the Federal Government should by some great engineering project seriously interfere with the water supply of a large number of citizens the State would have the right to intervene and protect the rights of its citizens. Therefore, if the law levying a tax on raw cotton or unmanufactured cotton or other corporality was illeral and unconstitutional it was or other commodity was illegal and unconstitutional, it was a trespass upon the rights of the citizens of the State and there seems to be no doubt but what the State would again have the right to interfere in behalf of the interests of such citizens.

To illustrate further: Suppose this Congress, in its effort to balance the Budget, should pass a law requiring the owners of all real estate to pay a tax of 50 cents per acre. There can be no doubt but what this would be considered a direct tax in violation of the Constitution, and the State by appropriate action would have the right to intercede in behalf of its citizens.

Then, as we have said, if, by a corresponding act, Congress should levy a tax on the product of an individual produced in its raw state, it is considered a direct tax, and the State would also have the right to intervene, my contention being that if the law under which the taxes were levied and collected is unconstitutional the funds actually would be held in trust by the United States and the Government would be a trustee for the taxpayer. Then, if the right of the taxpayer has escheated to the State, the funds would be held in trust for the States, and any State should then have the right to bring suit and recover. On the other hand, if the right of the individuals who paid the tax should not escheat to the State until the law is found to be unconstitutional and it is impossible for the Government to completely every even the trust. impossible for the Government to completely carry out its trust to such individuals then, under a well-established principle of law known as the doctrine of cy pres, the trust should be carried out as near as possible, in which case the State would be the logical agency to institute proceedings, for the trust funds under these conditions would certainly be held in trust for the State.

To repeat: If the law under which the taxes were collected is To repeat: If the law under which the taxes were collected is unconstitutional, the funds would be held in trust by the Federal Government for the taxpayer. Then, if the taxpayer can not be found and the taxes can not be returned to the proper person, the State, having the right to protect the interest of its citizens, would certainly have the right to intervene and act in their behalf. In other words, if the Federal Government has money collected from individuals it is not entitled to under the Constitution and the individuals can not be found or their claims supported by their legal representatives, there can be no doubt supported by their legal representatives, there can be no doubt but what the State should have the right to assert its interest and substitute same for that of its citizens. The State, under such circumstances, would assume the same position in behalf of its citizens with respect to their rights against the Federal Government as the Federal Government as the Federal Government as the Federal Government. ernment as the Federal Government would take with respect to their rights against a foreign government. Mr. Chairman, I note that the time is limited and I would like

Mr. Chairman, I note that the time is limited and I would like to yield the remainder of my time to Mr. Burton Smith, who has given this matter a great deal of thought and study from a legal as well as a practical standpoint. I would like to say, however, before closing, that a bill quite similar to the one we have under consideration passed the Senate twice in the last few years.

I think it might be appropriate to put in the record at this time the amount of the cotton tax collected from the various States, and with the permission of the Chair, I will ask that it be inserted at this place. It will be noted that Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Kansas, Vermont, Virginia, Indiana, New Jersey, Missouri, Massachusetts, Kentucky, and Indiana, as well as Illinois—not cotton-producing States—paid a considerable amount of the cotton tax. The list is as follows:

Alabama, $10,388.072.10; Arkansas, $2,555,638.43; California,

PARTY PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the fundamental concept upon which must rest a political party as distinguished from a bloc or other group representing only a passing phase of political life is that it shall be an aggregation of individuals drawn together by a common purpose to serve the State through the advocacy of certain principles and policies. It must have a sufficient degree of organization and solidarity to effectuate the views held in common through unified action. To be effective it must have fixed principles upon which its policies may be based as they may be formulated from time to time to meet new problems and changing conditions.

The Republican Party came into being during a period in our history when the question of the extension of human slavery was greatly agitating the public mind and when the breaking up of the Federal Union was not only a possibility but the most menacing danger then on the horizon. Both these questions were squarely faced by the new party and in due time solved, along with a number of other troublesome questions, and as a result it was confirmed in a lease of power covering a considerable period.

Marred only by certain early excesses naturally growing out of the passions of internecine strife, the record of the Republican Party marched forward through years of constructive progress, meeting successfully the problems of readjustment to new conditions as they arose. With but few and brief interruptions the Republican Party has written, simultaneously, the history of the country and its own record. Abraham Lincoln guided the course of the party through its first stormy period of power, though his steady hand was removed from the wheel before calm seas were reached again. Under different but equally trying conditions, Herbert Hoover is now bravely carrying on, demonstrating as he does it both the soundness of his party principles and his own great ability as a leader.

During all the years of the party's history two fundamental principles have formed the groundwork of all its economic policies, sound money and protection to Ameriican labor and industry. The party is still just as insistent as ever that both these principles be maintained.

During the life of the Republican Party numerous attacks have been made upon both of the two cardinal principles of sound money and protection, but usually these attacks have come singly. Rarely have the attacks come upon both fronts at the same time. A glance backward over our political history will call to mind some of the forms these attacks have taken, including free silver, greenbackism, and other propositions for cheap or flat money, while free-trade planks or platforms calling for a tariff for revenue only have found place in many campaigns.

Times of depression or other economic disturbance are the favorite seasons for attacks upon sound money, and there was never greater reason for the Republican Party to stand firm on this principle than at the present moment. In the campaign of 1932 it would seem that attacks upon both sound money and protection will probably be renewed. The attack upon sound money has been proposed in a number of different forms. If the huge bond issues, seriously proposed by some, which would necessitate unprecedented borrowings, are refused, then it would seem that resort may be had to some other method of accomplishing the same purpose. It is even urged by some that colossal sums of greenbacks be engraved and handed out to certain favored classes with the avowed purpose of cheapening our money.

Neither of these proposals has been as yet formally accepted by any political party, but another proposal that is believed by many will have the same effect has passed the House of Representatives under a suspension of the rules, thus indicating complete approval on the part of the House majority organization. I refer to the Goldsborough bill.

None of the schemes having for their avowed purpose cheapening the dollar seems to take into account the fact that the poor are always the first to suffer from unsound money. Paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless true. to a very considerable extent, that the rich are the debtors who would profit most by cheap currency, while the poor, or the comparatively poor, are the creditor class who would suffer the most. The savings of the poor, in small savings accounts but tremendously large in the aggregate, are invested in savings banks. Shall the banks be relieved of their obligation by permitting them to pay these accounts in cheap dollars? Staggering sums of the money of the comparatively poor, saved by thrift through self-restraint, have been invested in insurance through weekly, monthly, quarterly, or annual premiums, with that most sacred purpose in view of protecting loved ones should death come. Shall the wealthy owners of these large insurance companies be invited to pay off in cheap dollars their debt to the beneficiaries of policyholders?

Yes; there is every reason why the Republican Party, more than ever before, should stand by the principle of sound money and oppose flat money, soft money, or cheap money in whatever attractive guise it may appear. Nothing is clearer than the fact that it is not the limited amount of currency outstanding that is responsible for the present depression, for it is well known that the amount of currency now outstanding is almost a billion dollars greater than it was in the heyday of 1929. Need for more credit there may be, certainly there is occasion for more confidence, but there can be no sound basis for an artificial injection of currency into our financial system at present, and those who would suffer first and most from it would be the poor.

And what of protection to American labor and industry? No frontal attack has been proposed recently against this position of the Republican Party, but a somewhat plausible flank movement was inaugurated in the alleged tariff bill recently vetoed by the President. If ever there was a time more inopportune than all others for destroying, or even weakening, the tariff policy of this country, that time is now. Frequent general revisions of the tariff always have a disturbing influence upon business, but with changes in conditions such revisions become necessary.

A partial remedy for this unfortunate necessity has been sought in setting up a board or commission to find the facts and, upon the finding of certain facts, authorizing the President to make changes in rates of duty within fixed limits. Some progress was made in this direction in the tariff act of 1922. The 1930 act went farther, so that under it any party believing himself to be aggrieved may apply to the commission for relief. Many have done so and the fact that with a law of this kind on the statute books, open to all, only a comparatively small number of cases now remain pending, seems to indicate that the law has functioned with satisfactory results.

In the face of this record what remedy do we now find suggested by the opponents of protection? The so-called flexible provision of the tariff law, along with the Tariff Board itself, is to be destroyed or rendered nugatory by requiring reports to be made to Congress and findings to be of no validity until passed upon by Congress. It would prove far more destructive than any general revision of the tariff to have a frequently recurring series of tariff increase or reduction proposals before each succeeding session of Congress. The probability would always be present of each proposal being seized upon as a vehicle for carrying all the desired changes sought by every different locality in the country, thus keeping our entire industrial life in a turmoil.

To make matters still worse it is proposed in the tariff bill referred to that we call international conferences in which the several nations of the earth shall sit down together and agree to reciprocal tariff rates satisfactory to all concerned. Since I first entered Congress in 1909 there have been four general revisions of the tariff and a great number of popgun tariff bills enacted to elicit presidential vetoes, but among all the wild suggestions made during the tariff discussions of these nearly 25 years there has never been one quite so preposterous and absurd as this one, nor one quite so fraught with danger to our industrial stability.

Our experience in reciprocal tariff making has not been a very fruitful one, even when dealing with one nation at a time. There have been a number of instances in our history where reciprocal tariff treaties have been negotiated either under the general treaty-making power or special authority granted by Congress. The greater portion of these were rejected by this country and most of the others were rejected by the other countries. All the rest were subsequently either denounced as treaties or repealed by our tariff acts.

Can one view with any degree of confidence or complacency the prospect of having the tariff rates upon which American labor and industry rely for protection made the football of international politics? Can anyone imagine any course more likely to involve us in international complications and disagreements? And what becomes of the equal-treatment-to-all-nations principle if we should now enter upon a policy of international tariff dickering?

If this Nation of ours ever contemplates entering upon a foreign policy so utterly at variance with our whole history and so calculated to entangle us with the affairs of other nations, surely a time other than the bicentennial year of the birth of George Washington should be chosen for its consummation.

PATENTS FOR CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF COLORADO

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6437) to authorize the issuance of patents for certain lands in the State of Colorado to certain persons, now on the Private Calendar as No. 507, be stricken from the Private Calendar and rereferred to the Committee on Public Lands, as the subject matter has been covered by another bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6437) be stricken from the Private Galendar and rereferred to the Committee on Public Lands. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether the gentleman has taken this matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. We discussed the matter in the Public Lands Committee at the time the other bill was introduced, and at that time it was intended to have this bill stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES AND THE EXPENSE THEREOF

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein certain correspondence with the State Department, with a list of all the international conferences and the expenses thereof since the Versailles treaty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give any reason for incorporating this matter in the permanent RECORD? As the gentleman well knows, his colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Underhill] has been objecting to matters of this sort going into the RECORD.

Mr. TINKHAM. This is correspondence with the State Department, and it is rather short, and I would prefer to have it put in the RECORD. It gives a comprehensive review of all the international conferences and the cost thereof to date, which I think is somewhat important at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

MAY 3, 1932.

The honorable the ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: 1. Will you kindly furnish me with a list of all international commissions or conferences at which the United States has been represented since the return of Mr. Wilson from the meeting of the Allies at Versailles in 1917-18, including the cost of each commission or conference to the United States?

2. Will you also kindly inform me what amount is shown by your records to have been expended to date for the present disarmament conference?

A reply at your early convenience would be appreciated. Sincerely yours.

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, May 14, 1932.

The Hon. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,

The Hon. George Holden Tinkham,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Tinkham: I wish to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 3, 1932. In compliance with your request I am pleased to inclose lists of all international conferences and commissions for which there have been specific appropriations for official representation on behalf of this Government since July 1, 1918, including the amounts appropriated in each case.

In addition to the conferences and commissions mentioned in these lists there have been a very great number of others which have been attended by official representatives of this Government who either undertook their mission at their own expense or whose expenses were paid from regular appropriations. To compile a list of these other conferences, with the cost of each, would require a great deal of research work, since it is only during the last few years that international conferences have been handled by a division specifically charged with that work and with the duty of keeping a consolidated record of all such conferences. Moreover, this department is without information as to the expenditures made by other branches of the Government and by private individuals incident to attendance at the majority of these conferences.

It takes pleasure however in inclusions in addition to the conferences. conferences.

I take pleasure, however, in inclosing, in addition to the other lists, a list of 131 international conferences held since March 4, 1929, at which this Government was represented without the necessity for specific appropriations.

With reference to your second inquiry, which concerns the amount expended to date for the expenses of the general disarmament conference at Geneva, the total sum disbursed or incumbered to April 30 was $191,692.03.

Sincerely yours,

W. R. CASTLE, Acting Secretary. (Inclosures: Lists of international conferences and commis-

DISTRIBUTION OF FARM BOARD WHEAT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received this morning a telegram from the Governor of Arizona relating to a very important subject. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read the telegram.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., June 3, 1932.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C .:

May I suggest to you the advisability of Congress appropriating additional Farm Board wheat for distribution as flour through American Red Cross. While I am not familiar with exact amount already drawn from amount already appropriated, I do believe that the matter should be considered seriously before Congress adjourns. Flour already received in Arizona has been of great benefit. With copper mines closing, load is increasing beyond all precedent. I urge you to give this problem your earnest consideration.

GEORGE W. P. HUNT, Governor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, may I presume to ask the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, if he has not already introduced a bill looking toward making more wheat and flour available to the Red Cross?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in order to meet the situation and similar situations a week ago, I introduced a bill authorizing the chairman of the Federal Farm Board to deliver 40,000,000 bushels of wheat to the Red Cross to meet distressing conditions generally. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Just yesterday I was advised by the Federal Farm Board, however, that probably I should modify my proposal in order to meet liens that now exist on account of advances made. So I shall offer a new bill and ask the committee at an early date to consider the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. I am content, because I know that any task to which the Senator from Oregon applies his hand will be accomplished if it be within the domain of reasonable possibility.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Yesterday the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] submitted an amendment to the pending bill adding a proviso at the end of line 11, page 45. The proviso is to be inserted as new language in the amendment reported by the committee. Early in the day I had offered an amendment that sought to amend the part stricken out. In other words, the committee has presented an amendment striking out and inserting. I offered an amendment which was considered the pending amendment during the day proposing to amend the part to be stricken out. The Senator from California offered an amendment amending the part to be inserted and the presiding officer then in the chair-and my excuse for taking it up now is that I was not in the Chamber when it happened or I would have done so then-said that the amendment offered by the Senator from California was a substitute for my amendment and was in order, and cited Rule VIII as his authority.

If Senators will turn to Rule VIII, they will find that it has no reference either directly or indirectly to such a parliamentary situation. I think the Presiding Officer probably had reference to Rule XVIII. I wish to read an extract from Rule XVIII which I think is the one that applies. The latter part of it says:

But pending a motion to strike out and insert-

And the committee amendment was one to strike out and insert—the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

I am not particular about the precedence part of it, but that is the rule. The motion which I offered was to amend the part attempted to be stricken out by the amendment proposed by the committee. The Senator from California offered an amendment to that part of the committee amendment proposing to insert new matter in lieu of that stricken out. In other words, Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from California could not under any consideration be considered as a substitute. It is a very proper amendment, and I am not complaining about that; but it could not be a substitute for the amendment offered by myself which refers to an entirely different part of the bill. I wanted to clear that up before we proceed with the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, inasmuch as the amendment is mine, let me say that I have no desire, of course, to interfere with the amendment which was presented by the Senator from Nebraska, and when this amendment was presented by me I asked if it could be presented, or if it would be appropriate for it to be presented—I have not looked at the Record, but this is what transpired—as a substitute for the amendment that had been presented by the Senator from Nebraska; and my recollection is that the occupant of the chair at that time ruled that it could be presented as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. And thereupon I so presented it. It is immaterial to me whether it shall be considered as a substitute or whether it shall be considered as an amendment to the bill or whatever other form it may take; the form is immaterial entirely.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be immaterial to me if it could be presented in that form, but if Senators will just think for a moment they will realize the situation. I offered an amendment to amend part of the House text; the committee amendment is to strike out that part of the House text and insert new language. The amendment of the Senator from California applies to the language to be inserted by the committee amendment, but has no reference whatever to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair make a statement. The present occupant of the chair was in the chair when the Senator from California presented the amendment; the Senator used the word "substitute," and the Chair announced that a substitute would be in order. Not having seen the amendment, the Chair did not know whether it was a substitute or not; but it proposes to insert new language, and in that degree is in order, although it might not be proper to regard it as a substitute. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska applies both to the part of the House text to be stricken out and to the insertion.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it has no reference to the part to be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, as the Chair read it, would apply to the two, while the amendment of the Senator from California applies only to the insertion. Therefore, the amendment of the Senator from California will be voted on first, and after that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I object to the Chair misstating a fact which on its face is not so. My amendment has no reference to the language which the committee proposes to insert, and if the Chair will read it he will find that that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and we will see.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska offers the following amendment:

On page 45, line 7, it is proposed to amend the House text as follows: Strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500"; and in line 8, after the semicolon following the word "reduction," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

reduction," strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And that part of any annual compensation in excess of $1,500 and not in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 5 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $2,500 and not in excess of $4,000 shall be reduced by 10 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,500 shall be reduced by 15 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $5,500 and not in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 20 per cent; and that part of any annual compensation in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 25 per cent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that when the language "strike out the balance of the paragraph" is used that includes the part inserted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the language proposed to be inserted is not yet in the bill. It is just a proposition to insert it. When I say "strike out the balance of the paragraph," I can not strike out the proposed insertion of the committee because it is not a part of the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is wrong on that. The Senate can not divide—

Mr. NORRIS. Well, to settle it all, I withdraw my amendment, and the Senate can proceed with the other amendment; and the time will come when I can offer my amendment. I do not want it all bungled up by an unreasonable decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I had the floor when the Senator spoke a moment ago. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's amendment. I want to make that perfectly plain; but I thought the appropriate thing was, inasmuch as I was providing for an exemption greater than that provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, that the greater exemption should first be determined by the Senate.

That was what was in my mind when I made the inquiry last evening as to whether or not my amendment could be offered as a substitute. The Parliamentarian informs me, however, that the amendment will take precedence in any event; and I think it the appropriate thing, because I provide for a $2,500 exemption, while the Senator from Nebraska provides for a $1,500 exemption. That, I think, would be the orderly way of proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that is the matter I had in mind myself.

There are some of us here who believe that the exemption provided for by the Senator from Nebraska is too low. Many of us would like to vote to exempt all Federal employees under $2,500 a year from this pay slashing. As a matter of fact, I wish the amount were even higher than that.

None of us, I am sure, are opposed to voting to reduce our own salaries and the salaries of those officials and employees of the Government in the higher brackets, but certainly there should be an exemption of at least $2,500. I was hoping, and I know others feel the same way, that we could vote on that particular amendment before undertaking to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection on earth to that. The only thing is, I do not want to let the record be bungled up on the theory that that is a substitute for my amendment. That would have been reached, and the Senator would have had that opportunity if my amendment had been voted on first. If it had been agreed to, and no other amendment had been offered, then the question would recur on the committee amendment as amended; and the motion of the Senator from California would have been in order, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. With this difference, I think, that preference would be given to the $1,500 exemption.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It may be anyhow.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so, but I have not any objection. I have withdrawn my amendment, so that the pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from California.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the report of the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture for May is now available; and from its contents we find that the average prices of agricultural products fell 4 per cent during the month preceding May 15, or from 59 per cent to 56 per cent of the pre-war level, while the price index of what the farmer buys receded less than 1 per cent, or only from 113 per cent to 112 per cent of the pre-war level. This means that the purchasing power of the farmer on May 15 was exactly one-half of what it was, as an average, for the 1909–1914 period.

The decline in the price index of farm commodities has been almost constant for the past 18 months, with a corresponding decline in the purchasing power of the farmer, until to-day it requires twice the amount of farm products to purchase goods and service required by the farmer as compared with the 1909–1914 period.

Why this tremendous differential against agriculture? It is largely because other industries are able to fix their prices, and many are the beneficiaries, directly or indirectly, of actual or potential price-fixing legislation.

For years agriculture has been appealing for the enactment of laws that might equalize the situation, and, notwithstanding, this differential has been growing drastically worse during the past year, and notwithstanding Congress has been fully aware of this fact, and has been in session since last December, or for a period of nearly six months, no attempt has been made by either House constructively to rescue agriculture.

In the meantime, however, we have provided the Reconstruction Finance Corporation largely for the benefit of banks and railroads. We have enacted the Glass-Steagall bill as the result of pleas in behalf of our financial institutions. We have before the Senate, now temporarily laid aside, another proposed measure, to which considerable time has already been given by the Senate, for the banks within the Federal reserve system. Moreover, the Senate has granted a tariff on coal for the benefit of the coal industry, a tariff on petroleum for the benefit of the producers of the petroleum industry, a tariff on copper for the mining industry, and a tariff on lumber for the benefit of the lumber industry; yet we have had neither the time nor the inclination to do for agriculture, although most of these tariffs will increase the burden upon agriculture.

When I say we have not had the inclination to do for agriculture, I call attention to the fact that when these tariffs were being added to the tax bill we refused to do as much for the farmer by including a tariff on vegetable oils, which would have been greatly to his benefit. Not only that, but we inserted in the same tax bill a tax on the orders and checks with which the farmers are paid for their dairy and poultry products—a tax that will probably exceed $25,000,000 annually—which is certain to be passed on and paid by the farmer. Also, there is the tax on gasoline that can illy be borne in agriculture's superdepressed state.

Are these facts to be deemed as constituting a correct measure of the attitude of Congress respecting agriculture? Is this our attitude toward the ruralists of the Nation, constituting 44 per cent of our population? If it is not to be accepted as our attitude, something must be done to rectify the picture which it presents. Something must be done for agriculture, not in the future, but now. When are we to act? What is the answer?

Mr. President, agriculture must be rescued.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nebraska takes his seat, will he yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska has given a great deal of consideration to the bill which is now on the calendar. Does the Senator look upon that as an effective measure in the case it were passed?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the bill that is on the calendar is what has been requested by the various farm organizations. I have not felt that a new measure such as the third or "allotment" proposal in this bill would now be favorably acted upon by Congress, because of the necessity of educating Congress respecting a measure of such a novel character. I believe it has merit. There are those capable of judging who believe it has merit. We have already voted upon the debenture proposal.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but under circumstances where we could not get the full strength of the vote here.

Mr. HOWELL. True; I acknowledge that; yet the debenture was germane, in a sense, to the tax bill; the time was ripe for its application, and there was no time to lose.

Mr. BORAH. The thought I had in mind was this: If, by pushing the legislation which is now upon the calendar, we could accomplish something along the line that the Senator desires, we could insist upon the passage of that bill before we adjourn.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I am for the bill. As to what we should do is a practical question.

FORTS BROWN, M'INTOSH, CLARK, AND D. A. RUSSELL, TEX. (S. DOC. NO. 98)

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of the Middle West Foreign Trade Committee, Hardin B. Arledge, special representative, Washington, D. C., relative to the American merchant marine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Washington, May —.—Is foreign propaganda behind the proposals to destroy the American merchant marine? It would seem so. Foreign industries and steamship lines are the only people who could derive any benefit from the scrapping of the American merchant marine

Washington, like other cities, has its self-styled pro bono publicos, who hurl reckless charges and propose congressional investigations. They represent some interests, foreign or domestic, but not the public. They may be inspired by a grudge against some Government officials or a desire to harass their competitors. They may even be inspired by a desire to serve their country as counsel or investigators for congressional committees. Newspapermen term these "rackets." When public policies and public officials are attacked it is not a bad idea to check up on the character and matterials of the attackers. motives of the attackers.

Owing to higher capital and operating costs of American ships, there are only two methods by which the American merchant marine can be maintained. One is Government operation and the other is Government aid to enable private operation. Experience shows that private operation with the aid of ocean mail contracts and construction loans costs the Government considerably less than Government ownership and operation. No informed and fair-minded American questions the necessity for an adequate American merchant marine.

Senator McKellar's recent proposals to repudiate the 10-year ocean-mail contracts awarded to various steamship companies under authority of the merchant marine act, 1928, or to disconunder authority of the merchant marine act, 1928, or to discontinue the appropriations for the payment of these contracts would, if approved by Congress, automatically wipe out our privately owned merchant marine. Failure of the Government to carry out these legal and binding obligations would throw the companies into bankruptcy, discontinue the services, and in most cases result in the return of the vessels to the Government because most of these services were purchased from the Shipping Board. The services were losing money when sold by the Government, and the private companies, upon receiving ocean-mail contracts guaranteed to maintain the services and replace vessels as needed for the term of the ocean-mail contracts.

term of the ocean-mall contracts.

The President recently suggested the suspension for one year of the few remaining Shipping Board lines or their discontinuance after December 31, 1932. If the proposals of the President and Senator McKellar were both adopted, all American-flag services in foreign trade would cease to operate.

We know the President has repeatedly advocated a strong merchant marine so that we might engage in foreign trade and have adequate national defense. We likewise know Senator McKellar has been a supporter of the American merchant marine. has been a supporter of the American merchant marine. Why, then, should these high Government officials advocate policies which, if adopted, would be disastrous to the American people, unless they have been badly misled by some kind of propaganda? The President obviously wants our steamship services privately owned and operated, and we are in thorough accord with this suggestion provided the means are afforded to enable this private operation. Mail contracts for the few remaining Shipping Board lines would cost the Government probably $2,500,000 per year less than Government operation. But if Congress should seriously consider the proposals to repudiate the ocean mail contracts, consider the proposals to repudiate the ocean mail contracts, how can we have private operation or how can we expect private companies to undertake the maintenance of the lines if there is any question about the Government carrying out its lawful obligations?

Efforts have been made by a former employee of the Government, for reasons best known to himself and the interests he may serve, to convince Senator McKellar that these ocean mail may serve, to convince Senator McKellar that these ocean mail contracts have not been properly awarded or that they were not actually authorized by the merchant marine act, 1928; that the purpose of the law was simply to carry the mail and not to develop the American merchant marine. The purpose of the law is clearly for the development of the merchant marine. The aids are provided in an act which states in its very first section that it is for the development and maintenance of a merchant marine to carry the greater portion of our commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency. The to carry the greater portion of our commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency. The rates for the ocean mail contracts were fixed on a basis which it was thought would put American-fiag services on a parity with their foregn competitors. The law specifies the type of vessels which shall be used and requires that plans for new vessels must be approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

In a report to the House on February 24, 1932, the House Committee on Appropriations stated:

"The merchant marine act of 1928 placed upon the Post Office

"The merchant marine act of 1928 placed upon the Post Office Department the duty of building up the American merchant marine through the making of mail contracts and as the development of the merchant fleet is the main consideration of the law, ment of the merchant neet is the main consideration of the law, the carrying of mail is an incidental factor. The excess cost of carrying mail under these contracts over and above what it could be carried for on a weight basis is chargeable to a governmental policy of merchant-marine development and not as an operating cost of the Portal Service." cost of the Postal Service.'

Congress, after regular hearings by its Appropriations Commit tee, has annually provided funds to carry out the provisions of these contracts. Congress has the right to assume that these these contracts. Congress has the right to assume that these contracts have been properly awarded unless they are declared illegal by the law officers of the Government or the courts. As a matter of fact, before these contracts are executed they are approved by an Assistant Attorney General

The law provides for advertisement of the various ocean mail routes; and because in many instances only one bid was subroutes; and because in many instances only one bid was sub-mitted for a route, charges have been made that there was some-thing improper in the advertisements or the awards. The fact remains that on most of the routes there was only one American-flag line operating and usually this was the line established and developed by the Government. After spending millions of dollars to develop a service, it would not be in the public interest for the Government to scrap it in order that some other group might some day raise capital and organize a new company in order to bid for the mail contract. The Government line had been oper-ated for a great many years by a private company having the sup-port of the domestic communities interested in the service, had built up good will, and obtained valuable experience in the particular trade. When this company secured the mail contract it immediately purchased its service from the Government and relieved the Government of the greater portion of the expense necessary to maintain the service and replace the vessels.

The specifications in the advertisements concerning replacements of vessels have been such that in nearly every instance it would be necessary for the contractor to obtain the maximum rates of pay in order to successfully maintain his service. These specifications are recommended to the Postmaster General and the Shipping Board by a committee representing the Post Office Department, the Department of Commerce, the Shipping Board, and the Navy Department, and this committee makes a thorough study of each route before submitting its report. Most of the holders of commerce and produced the state of moderate size. ocean mail contracts are companies of moderate size, financed and supported by the communities which they serve. We do not have a shipping trust and do not want one.

What smacks of foreign propaganda are some articles recently sent out by a Washington news writer to papers in various sections of the United States, obviously intended to create prejudice against the aid contributed by the Government to the merchant marine. In a letter transmitting the first two articles to the newsagainst the aid contributed by the Government to the merchanmarine. In a letter transmitting the first two articles to the newspapers this news writer stated they were part of a series of four articles which he would furnish each paper for $15. This is a very small charge for any article, and we believe we are justified in assuming the news writer is being compensated by some one else. These articles attempt to create the idea the Post Office Department is proposing to reduce mail deliveries, discontinue deliveries, and discharge thousands of postal employees in order to continue payments of "subsidies" to certain steamship companies and air mail contractors. The basis for these charges was the recent order of the Senate to cut the post-office appropriation bill 10 per cent. When the Postmaster General was asked what the effect of the 10 per cent cut would be he stated the cut could not be made in the legal and binding contracts entered into by the Government with certain of its citizens, and the cut would therebe made in the legal and binding contracts entered into by the Government with certain of its citizens, and the cut would therefore have to be made in those parts of the Postal Service not under

The Postmaster General did not advocate the cuts but, on the contrary, he pointed out to Congress the disastrous effects such an ill-advised and uneconomic policy would cause. It is to be hoped the Senate will reconsider these methods of reducing expenses and will make rigid curtailments and economies where the public interests will not suffer.

Let us consider how and why most of the present holders of ocean-mail contracts purchased their lines and secured the mail

After the World War the United States found itself with a large fleet of vessels built for war purposes and at war costs, but with no merchant marine and few American companies qualified to operate merchant marine and few American companies qualified to operate steamship services. The immediate problem was to create shipping companies and establish services on essential foreign-trade routes. Following prolonged hearings and study Congress passed the merchant marine act, 1920. In section 7 of that act Congress charged the Shipping Board with the duty of establishing essential steamship services, directing that they be sold or assigned for operation to companies having the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in the lines. The purpose of this was to create many new shipping companies prevent pose of this was to create many new shipping companies, prevent monopolies, and secure the necessary local interest and support for the lines.

The services were established, but few, if any, sales made on account of the inability of American operators to meet the lower costs of foreign companies. This method of operation, although necessary at that time, was expensive and made no provision for replacement of vessels to meet the keen competition of foreign

In 1928 Congress passed the merchant marine act, 1928, and this act provided two methods for maintaining the American merchant marine, namely:

1. Government ownership and operation with construction and/or reconstruction of vessels by the Government as replacements.

2. Private ownership and operation by authorizing mail contracts and construction loans to enable private American companies to maintain in competition with foreign companies the essential services for the carriage of our commerce and mail.

Plan 2 was found to be the sounder and more economical method operation. Its cost to the Government was far less than

With the aids provided in the 1928 act most of the private operators on the Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Pacific were encouraged to purchase their services from the Government, guarantee aged to purchase their services from the Government, guarantee to maintain regular sailings between specified ports, and replace vessels during the 10-year term of the mail contracts. These contractors are required to furnish substantial bonds to insure the carrying out of their obligations and no one has felt it was necessary for the Government to furnish a good-faith bond.

It will be a sad day if our Government repudiates obligations to its own citizens and extends loans to foreign governments who must liberally add their marchant marines.

most liberally aid their merchant marines.

Now, what is the extent of these so-called "mammoth sub-dies"? By fiscal years they run from nearly $10,000,000 in 1999 Now, what is the extent of these so-called "mammoth subsidies"? By fiscal years they run from nearly $10,000,000 in 1929 to about $23,000,000 in 1932, or an average of about $16,500,000 per year. These payments include what it would ordinarily cost to transport the mails and the amount contributed by the Government for merchant marine development.

The existing ocean mail contracts require the building of new and rebuilding of old vessels by the contractors in American ship-yards, with American labor and American material, at an estimated cost of $312,000,000 mated cost of $312,000,000.

When the contractor obtains a construction loan from the Shipwhen the contractor obtains a construction loan from the simp-ping Board he gives the board a first mortgage on his vessels, and the board is also requiring him to place in escrow sufficient of his mail money to secure the principal and interest of the loan. Pretty good security—but if one listens to the anti-American merchant marine propagandists he would think the board gave the The cost of the Government aid to these valuable and dependable steamship services is nothing compared to the dollars-and-cents value of these services to the American people. They are a protection to the American people against high ocean-freight rates, and the savings in freight transportation alone bring back to our people several times over the amount of the Government and American compared. American transportation and American properties of the savings are sent and american process. aid. American commerce, American industry, and American national defense have all been promoted to a degree not realized by the establishment and development of the American merchant the establishment and development of the American merchant marine.

The Middle West and Mississippi Valley are particularly interested in the splendid American-flag services out of Gulf ports, and for which we are indebted to the wise policies of Congress and the policies of the regional Shipping Board which has been responsive to the needs of all sections of our country. Prior to the establishment of the services by the Shipping Board our southern ports were served principally by foreign tramp ships.

According to Government figures, during the period 1921–1930 the water-borne foreign trade of the United States amounted to over 900,000,000 tons of freight, valued at $74,000,000,000. Of this commerce American ships carried 40 per cent, or more than 360,000,000 tons of freight, valued at nearly $25,000,000,000. Passenger and freight revenues accruing from this vast movement of traffic totaled approximately $9,000,000,000. On a conservative estisenger and reight revenues accruing from this was intovenient of traffic totaled approximately $9,000,000,000. On a conservative estimate fully one-third of this revenue must be credited as a direct gain to American labor and industry through the possession of a strong merchant marine. Prior to the World War American ships were carrying 10 per cent of our commerce.

were carrying 10 per cent of our commerce.

In the decade prior to 1914 the value of our foreign trade carried in American ships averaged but $300,000,000 annually. During the decade 1921–1930 it averaged $2,600,000,000 per annum.

In 1914 only six American-flag ships, of 70,000 gross tons, were operated in our trade with Europe. In 1930 there were 232 American ships, totaling 1,500,000 gross tons, and our trade with that region had increased 50 per cent.

In 1914 there were five American ships, of 23,000 gross tons, operating between the United States and South America. In 1930 the number had been increased to 90, and our trade had increased 200 per cent.

200 per cent.

In 1914 we had no American ships trading to the African continent. To-day we have 22 ships, totaling 125,000 gross tons, and our trade has increased 325 per cent.

Our trade with the Orient tells the same story. In 1914 there were five American ships operating from Pacific coast ports to the Far East. In 1930 the number had grown to 140 ships, of a million Far East. In 1930 the number had grown to 140 ships, of a million gross tons, and our trade just before the depression showed an increase of 380 per cent.

The Congress has wisely and generously supported the American merchant marine, and we do not believe either Congress or the American public will be misled by the character of antimerchant-marine propagranda which is being distributed during the present session. Our merchant marine to be successful must be entirely American in ownership and vessels. American companies operating foreign-flag ships in competition with other American lines can not and should not expect to receive Government aid.

The more patronage American shippers and travelers give their ships the less aid the Government will be required to contribute.

HARDIN B. ARLEDGE, Special Representative.

REVENUE AND TAXATION

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so many Senators have asked what the conferees did on the revenue bill that, as the conference report goes to the House first, I concluded that the best thing for the chairman of the committee to do was to make a statement as to just what the conferees did upon

I have prepared that statement. It will be found upon the desk of every Senator. If Senators will take up the bill, if they are interested, they will see just what was accomplished. I think that will tend to hasten the passage of the bill when it reaches the Senate.

I thought that was the best way to meet the situation.

FEDERAL RELIEF FOR UNEMPLOYMENT-ADDRESS BY SENATOR COSTIGAN

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the 13th day of last February the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] and the capable Senator from Illinois [Mr. Glenn] broadcast a debate over the Columbia System. The subject of the debate was "Should our Federal Government assist our States by granting funds to relieve distress due to unemployment?

Senator GLENN's address in opposition to Federal relief was printed in the Congressional Record of February 16 by request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson]. According to the Washington Herald of this morning, Senator GLENN now advocates Federal aid. The press report states that after a visit to the White House Senator GLENN announced last night that special emergency relief legislation for Illinois is to be sought without delay. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the valuable address which was delivered by Senator Costigan on the occasion in Our self-respect demands that the Nation at last help the States question. question.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the question Senator GLENN and I are to discuss, the answer is definitely "Yes," for reasons which time permits me only partially to review.

The major premise rests secure in this rich land, which our pioneer fathers developed under popular government, that no individual must starve for want of private, public, local, State, or, these failing, Federal help. We are citizens of our Nation no less than of our States. Certainly all of us concede that abandonment to unrelieved distress is unthinkable when our countrymen are blamelessly stricken by drought, plague, or general economic paralysis.

For two weeks here in Washington debate in the Senate has centered on this issue. Since the contest began all advocacy here of Spartan brutality under our Stars and Stripes has been reduced to ashes by flaming indignation. Doubtless the Senator from Illinois, who represents the land from which Lincoln rose to immortalize government for the people, will not be found among the blind and lessening few who would shut the gates of mercy on mankind. The only questions now unresolved in any rational mind are whether local or State resources are insufficient or unavailable to relieve admittedly nation-wide misery; and if so, through what channels appropriated Federal funds may most what channels appropriated Federal funds may most through what channels appropriated rederal funds may most effectively aid our suffering people?

It will help in answering these questions to recognize that our present economic disaster is national in character and extent, and that only sheer cruelty will seek to shoulder on localities the unequal and unassisted burden of conquering it. Our remedies, like our crisis, should be country-wide. Try as it may, in this hour no group or community does or can live to itself alone.

In October, 1929, in the midst of proclaimed prosperity, suddenly and without warning economic rains descended, financial floods came; agricultural and industrial winds blew and beat upon our far-flung house, and it fell. Our people stand now and un-parallelled ruins in the third ensuing winter of accumulating misery. Unemployment stalks the land along whatever line of the compass we look.

From 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 homeless workers, for whom no city, county, or State admits responsibility, are drifting in fluctuating tides across America. There by itself is a national relief problem. The State of Senator Glenn is stricken with the rest. By conservative estimates the first of this year more than 1,100,000 people were wholly idle and numberless others partially so in people were wholly idle and numberless others partially so in imperial Illinois. The figures were almost identical in Pennsylvania. In New York State, according to experts, the number of unemployed is not less than 1,500,000. Large and growing unemployment exists in every other State of the Union.

Unemployment in New York City at this year's beginning would normally have been 160,000; multiplied by 5, it is now at least 800,000. Experts report that in Chicago in April, 1930, 168,000 were unemployed; in October, 1931, before the present peak of unemployment developed, that number had risen to 624,000—40 per cent of all persons there considered employable. And in no part of ployment developed, that number had risen to 624,000—40 per cent of all persons there considered employable. And in no part of America is the end yet seen.

Responsible statisticians report that the wage loss in Chicago alone is $2,000,000 daily. The American Federation of Labor's latest summary of unemployment conditions for the country as a whole lists 8,300,000, with approximately 6,000,000 more restricted to work of from one to three days per week. The aggregate wage loss for 1931 compared with 1929—our last year of boasted prosperity—was $11,000,000,000 by the most modest calculation. The American Federation of Labor computes that loss at $18,000,000,000. Whichever estimate you select, the disaster parallels war totals. lels war totals.

Side by side with such losses, affecting the living standards of every home of America, let us tabulate the extended relief. In doing so we may not list the sacrificial contributions of neighbor doing so we may not list the sacrificial contributions of neighbor to neighbor, for to the glory of human nature be it recorded that the poor are good to the poor. Yet this but adds to the problems, for it is manifestly not far to the end of the resources of those with limited means. All men and women of imagination realize that, with wages lost and farm prices sunk in the general sea, the magnitude of our present human need is swamping the potentialities of individual generosity and State and local taxes, thereby making Federal aid to the States indispensable.

The leading experts in America confirm these conclusions. Let me name but a few:

me name but a few:
Allen Burns, director of the Association of Community Chests; Linton Swift, chairman of the Family Welfare Association of America; Frank Bane, of Washington, director of the American Associa-tion of Public Welfare Officials; Walter West, secretary of the American Association of Social Workers; William Hodson, director of the Welfare Council of New York City; J. Prentice Murphy, director of the Children's Bureau of Philadelphia; Jacob Billikopf, rector of the Children's Bureau of Philadelphia; Jacob Billikopf, director of Jewish Charities of the same city; Samuel Goldsmith, director of the Jewish Charities of Chicago; Paul U. Kellogg, editor of a national journal of social welfare. Their views are corroborated by the chief executives of all our railroad labor organizations; the American Federation of Labor; farm leaders, including President Simpson, of the Farmers Union of America; Protestant religious leaders of all denominations; the National Catholic Welfare Council; the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; and informed welfare workers of every section of our country. They agree, some regretfully but all firmly, that there is no other way.

One fact must not be forgotten. Throughout our history, from earliest days, the major part of welfare relief has always been drawn from public taxes. The Russell Sage Foundation reports from 70 per cent up of our relief work regularly borne by local and State taxes and only the other 30 per cent or less by private contributions. Therefore to term public taxes for relief something dangerously new and a dole belies the truth, defames the past, and libels the present. What magic divides Federal, State, and local taxes? In each case American producers finally foot

The chief distinction is that local taxes fall far more heavily overburdened land, including farms, and the Federal tax equitably exacts a reasonable share from the larger incomes of the country. Talk of "doles" is therefore wasted breath. Even Mr. Gifford, of the President's Unemployment Commission, freely admits this and affirms that facts are all that matter. Community chests fill an important but minor place in the relief field. Mr. Burns, the head of American chests, testifying recently in Washington, stated that contributions to the chests, available for relief purposes last year, increased but 59 per cent, while relief needs in those cities grew more than 200 per cent.

more than 200 per cent.

One more figure: Contrast the eleven to eighteen billion dollar annual wage loss of 1930, added to the crippling load of prolonged unemployment, with $300,000,000, the highest estimate of expended relief in our country in the same year, and conclude for yourselves how poorly we are bridging this national problem.

The record is complete. In our country to-day under such pressure our efforts are confined to famine relief. Countless homes are shattered, decent living standards are crumbling, multiplying sickness spreads disease and lays a specially heavy hand on numberless children who each night go hungry to bed. In one community childless married couples receive no assistance. Such arbitrary children who each night go hungry to bed. In one community childless married couples receive no assistance. Such arbitrary rules are necessitated by limited funds.

The size of the problem is glimpsed when we realize that the following number of families are being assisted: Some 17,000 each in Cleveland and Cincinnati, 54,532 in Philadelphia, or as testified more than forty times the normal number. By the last figures in in Cleveland and Cincinnati, 54,532 in Philadelphia, or as testified more than forty times the normal number. By the last figures in New York City 118,000 persons were being fed and in Chicago 134,840 persons. These totals are merely illustrative.

What defense may be made for a nation which aids others but will not assist its own? In 1919 Congress, by request of President Wilson, voted $100,000,000 to give food to the people of Poland, the Balkans, and former parts of Austria-Hungary.

In 1922 we spent more than $50,000,000 to feed the hungry in Russia, and, as Herbert Hoover then said, "to save the soul of the Russian people from an abyss of desnair too terrible for human Russian people from an abyss of despair too terrible for human expression."

1924 we contributed from the Federal Treasury more than $6,000,000 to aid the people of far-off Japan after Tokio was stricken by earthquake and consumed by fire. We have used Federal funds to feed citizens of foreign lands. Shall it now be said we may not save ourselves?

said we may not save ourselves?

Doubtless erroneously, the President is quoted as affirming that no State is asking relief. Yet for months the Governor of Pennsylvania, with others, has been knocking at our doors, and many Senators, speaking for their States, have insisted on action. No State chooses to go, hat in hand, to Washington to file its oath of bankruptcy. But the facts are open. Local agencies are overwhelmed. The dikes are broken, the ocean of need is pouring through. The support of the Nation must rescue countless people from intolerable despair. Our national good name is involved. ple from intolerable despair. Our national good name is involved. Public opinion must issue its edict in a land where people finally rule. Federal action must not longer be blocked. Those disturbed by unprecedented appeals for emergency legislation should remember that America has met other emergencies, and, after rallying to achievement, resumed her familiar course. But she never has triumphed by shirking her duty.

Let me close by saying that, while I regret not having opportunity to answer the Senator from Illinois, he is already answered by irresistible evidence. With local and State relief agencies for by irresistible evidence. With local and State relief agencies for the most part in despair, the Nation must cooperate with the States. The sound method to adopt is not new. Not by loans to States which here and there will refuse to confess poverty and in other instances decline because barred by limitations in State constitution; not by donations, disguised as gifts; not by a mere public-building program, splendid in itself, since, of course, work is better than charity, yet all too slow for our starvation emergency; but by Federal funds will useful local welfare forces be duly and fairly employed and strengthened. For years by law Federal grants fairly employed and strengthened. For years by law Federal grants have been made to promote road building, agricultural extension work, and sanitation all over our land without anyone being disturbed over constitutional lines now hastily invoked between the powers of our Nation and our States. Federal aid laws are of powers of our Nation and our States. Federal aid laws are of everyday knowledge and practice. No part of the United States but has benefited and is to-day advanced by such cooperation between our National Government and the States.

Congress and the President have just approved the use of billions of our national credit for the support of American business. Who will now deny millions for our stricken people?

The path is plain; the demand irresistibly heart moving. No investment of Federal funds, however made, will pay comparable returns in the deathless devotion of our citizens. Our standards of honor leave us no choice. This is our country and our Government. We draft our people in war and send them in our need through battle to death. We owe them life. America to-day is supremely summoned to save those who now and in the years to come must save America.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations and a convention, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I wish to state my position with reference to certain provisions of this bill about to be voted upon. I want my votes to be understood.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, while considering the McKellar 10 per cent reductions, I invariably opposed any cut that might affect the salaries of the employees or affect the veterans. I thought that the veterans ought to be dealt with on their merits and not in ex parte way.

At that time, finding difficulty in knowing just where to make cuts in the appropriation bills so as not to interfere with the employees, I came to the conclusion that the tax which the leaders of both parties in the House favored, known as a limited manufacturers' tax, would be the best provision to adopt to supply the funds necessary to avoid making cuts that might cripple certain of the activities of the Government.

That was defeated in the House. When the bill came here I still advocated the limited manufacturers' tax. I thought we could avoid many of the taxes now carried in the bill and that it would make it unnecessary to impose the 10 per cent cut now proposed or the 11 per cent cut proposed by the House on the salaries of the employees of the Federal Government.

I also supported another provision, and that was to impose a tax on 2.75 per cent beer, which would have yielded a large revenue.

The Senate disagreed with both of those propositions; so that a few nights ago, when we finally passed upon this economy bill, I stated that I would not support the cut in the salaries of the Federal employees. Having deliberately arrived at that conclusion, and still being of that opinion, I propose to vote against all amendments to any provision and to vote against the provisions themselves, both of the House and of the Senate, proposing any cut at all against Federal employees; and I shall be guided in the same way more or less generally in the reductions proposed in the Veterans' Bureau.

I merely wanted to make my position plain, because if I voted for some of the amendments exempting certain amounts in salaries and then voted against the other proposal that vote might not be consistent. I am against cuts on all salaries except those which the committee has reduced in a specific way, such as the salaries above $10,000, and such equalizing provisions as we have inserted in the bill to put all the employees in the higher brackets above $10,000 on a common basis and an equal footing.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I have a particularly high regard for the members of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee that has handled this economy program bill, and an admiration for their courage and ability and their desire to reduce expenditures as much as possible. They have labored earnestly and hard on this matter. They have reported this economy bill to us with a straight 10 per cent cut in salaries and wages from top to bottom. I am as anxious as any man in the Senate to reduce Government expenditures to the very limit, to bring about every possible economy; but I am not in agreement with this pay-cut item in this bill that is before us. I do not consider this real economy at all. I believe it unwise and uneconomic.

Everybody knows of the terrible depression we have been facing. Everybody knows that salaries in industry have been cut to a considerable extent, and everybody knows that these bad conditions will not continue indefinitely. We all hope for a return to better and normal conditions soon. I am speaking generally about the condition that faces the country and the world.

In a way, our Government should be comparable to certain industries as against others. For instance, the manufacturing and transportation industries, the wholesale and retail industries, feel the depression acutely, more so and sooner than certain other industries; and many of them have been forced to make certain reductions in their expenditures, including many pay cuts.

Other lines of industry, such as banks, insurance companies, public-utility companies, and similar organizations, are more comparable with our Government in that they have a fixed overhead, and are not able to make reductions as are these other industries I have mentioned. These industries have made certain reductions, but not as much as the ones I have spoken of, which reflect the depression more quickly.

I have the report for the year 1931 of one of the greatest industrial organizations in the world, the Standard Oil Co., issued on December 31, 1931. That company does an enormous business, it has a large pay roll, and it has a policy in regard to the handling of its employees which has been very successful. I read from this report on page 8. In referring to the depression, it states:

It is a situation that is not going to cure itself. Enforced idleness among millions of bread-winners and fear of wage cuts on the part of those at work stand in the way of returning con-

Again, on the same page, the report states:

The company does not regard its employees merely as so many men and women to be taken on when work increases and laid off when it is slack. They have been encouraged to feel that they are a permanent part of the organization, since we rate a loyal and efficient personnel as first among our assets.

Mr. President, not a Member of the Senate can have any different idea in regard to the Federal employees. Some of us have different ideas as to how to make reductions in governmental expenditures, and where.

I contend that the whole policy on the part of certain branches of our Government to-day, in dealing with this economic crisis, is wrong. This depression exists, it is bad enough, we must do our part in helping to bring it to an end. I can not do it, hundreds of us can not do it, but if the Senate can start a movement in the country, start working on a new psychology which will take hold of our people, and the managers of our industries throughout the country, the wheels will start to turn again.

Mr. President, a thought has occurred to me of a ship at sea in a storm. This ship has taken on a great mass of water. That water has caused the ship to list at a dangerous angle, and if the ship in that storm should continue to list it might very soon go to the bottom. The captain and the crew of the ship will have two lines of action open to them, one to right the ship, to remove the list by opening the sea valves and allowing water to come into the compartments of the ship on the other side in order to put it on an even keel. The other will be to start the pumps going, pump the water out, and right the ship, so that it will be able to proceed in a normal and safe manner.

Mr. President, the whole ship of state is going through a storm and listing badly. We must put it back on an even keel. It is our duty to give encouragement to a return of prosperity, and suggest methods for bringing about its return. If the people of the United States will turn in their course from one of depression, pessimism, despair, and destructive hysteria and take the other course, of optimism, encouragement, and constructive action, the old ship will soon be sailing again in a safe and normal condition.

Mr. President, if the cutting of Federal salaries must come I do not think there is a man or a woman in the Federal employ who will complain. They will take their share of the cuts, and they will take it bravely and do their best under the circumstances; but I do not think the action should be taken at this time, as I believe we can get along without it. In our last depression, namely, that of 1921, there was a much more pronounced reaction on the part of industrial establishments, which was translated into pay reductions, than has so far been exhibited during the present depression.

The comparison between the policy of 1921 and 1931 is interesting. In the full year 1921, according to reports made by industrial establishments, there were 92 wage cuts per 100 firms reporting. In the year 1931 there has been no such widespread tendency toward a liquidation of wages. For the entire year 1931 the number of cuts reported per 100 firms was only 24. That year, therefore, makes a very favorable comparison with the depression year of 1921. One can not escape the feeling that the better showing in 1931 was aided by the President's stand against wage cuts, which the figures would appear to show was supported by the country's industrial lists.

For the first four months of 1932, however, there is a more pronounced pay weakening indicated. Out of approxmiately 16.000 manufacturing establishments, employing nearly two and three-quarter million workers, as disclosed by reports to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the percentage of companies reporting decreases in wage rates affecting their employees was for each month given as follows:

The state of the s	DATE OF REAL cent
January	5. 3
February	5.3
March	13.2
April	13.4

From the above table it appears that notwithstanding the severity of the depression manufacturing establishments are resisting wage cuts to a better degree than they did in the year 1921.

That is encouraging. I feel that the money necessary to conduct our Government can be raised in other ways than by cutting wages and salaries, and I hope that we can see the light and adopt another policy before this matter comes to final decision by the Senate.

I refer particularly to a letter to me dated June 1, 1932. from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, which shows clearly the unwisdom of these Federal pay cuts. I understand that a similar letter to one of the other Senators has already been placed in the RECORD. so I will not ask to have it duplicated.

Mr. President, I ask that a letter from Mr. Thomas F. Dolan, president of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, appearing in the Washington Herald of to-day, be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Friday, June 3, 1932] POSTAL CHIEF RAPS PLAN TO EVEN BUDGET—POINTS OUT INJUSTICES AND URGES AMENDMENTS WHICH WOULD ELIMINATE MISERY

Balancing the Budget, the current obsession, to be achieved without regard for broken faith and broken contracts, is rapidly

NO DIVIDENDS

The Senate, now deliberating on the economy program approved by its Appropriations Committee, realizes that, while the slashing of the pitifully meager pay of scrubwomen and a proportionate reduction in the salaries of the majority of Federal workers may coincide with the cunningly conceived scheme of capital and representatives of private industry, it will pay no dividends.

A deluded public, goaded to the point of envy and desperation by misrepresentation and distorted visions of a share in the pro-by misrepresentation and distorted visions of a share in the proceeds, may be temporarily appeased, but will awaken to the vicious purpose in the background, if the program is successful.

In the approaching political campaigns candidates for public office who indorse and vote for legislation which might enrich the national coffers at the expense of public servants who eke a struggling livelihood through, oftentimes, drudgery and menial labor, are sorely at a loss for worthy campaign propaganda.

The suspension of automatic promotions, contracted for by a Government which aims to attract and deserves the highest type Government which aims to attract and deserves the highest type of trustworthy and intelligent employees, means deferred hopes and a diminished and shattered faith.

ULTIMATE LOSS

The suspension of extra pay for overtime service and for work performed between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m., known as night work, are not humanitarian gestures. That the employees who come within the scope of overtime and night work are to be penalized in this manner in addition to the proposed wage reduction is inconceivable, and such action would create a depressing and unprofitable effect upon those involved.

Another situation which will prevail, effective July 1, seems to have escaped notice completely or, at the most, was given little, if any, thought and proper consideration. If not remedied, it would inflict an undeserved penalty upon those employees now serving in second-class post offices the receipts of which have fallen during last calendar year below the stipulated annual minimum of $8,000 a year.

Under the present statutes the employees of the offices so affected will, on July 1, 1932, be automatically separated from the Government service. This unjust situation, brought about by the deflation in business, for which they are not responsible, should be, and it is hoped will be, nullified by the proper amendments now under consideration.

COOLNESS NEEDED

If the expression that the American standard of living must be maintained is not an empty phrase and hypocritical quotation intended to please the ear and to serve as a political flower of speech, the estimable Members of the United States Senate, supported by similar action in the House of Representatives, should emphatically refuse to subscribe to any such merciless method of balancing the Budget.

It is strongly indicated that cool and considerate thought is now counteracting francied burried and banhayard action, and that counteracting frenzied, hurried, and haphazard action, and that those provisions in the economy program which go beyond the limits of justice and humane reasoning will be promptly discarded for all time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, Federal employees drawing salaries in the higher brackets are receiving far less from the Government than they would receive in private industry.

A comparison based on thoroughly competent data in the engineering field shows for scientific and professional Government workers in the more responsible positions anomalies

First. Where the Government expert of 10 years' experience receives $4,600, the private worker of equal experience and in positions of equal responsibility receives $7,500.

Second. In the 15-year experience class the Federal employee receives $5,200, the industrial employee $11,500.

Third. For the men with 25 years' experience a salary for the Federal worker of $5,800 compares with $16,500 for the man in private work.

These comparisons could be matched by countless others. If the Government employee is to be denied security of pay status as a reward for accepting the compensation of public service in lieu of much higher industrial pay, it can mean only one thing-the turning away in the future from the Federal service of the better men, the men whom the Government wishes so much to attract in order to put and keep its business and professional achievements as nearly as possible on the same plane as those of private business.

I ask permission to place in the RECORD a statement I have secured in regard to the effect of cutting Federal salaries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CUTTING SALARIES IS NO CURE FOR GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL TROUBLES

The proposed cuts of Federal employees' salaries will not reduce the direct taxes of the farmer, laborer, and small business man. Over half of the national income is derived from income and profit taxes. About 97 per cent of the people pay no Federal income tax. The average man contributes to the National Government income principally through sales tax on automobiles, tobacco, perfumery, and other luxuries and nonessentials. Advocates of slashing Government expenses and cutting Government salaries are either willfully or through ignorance misleading the public when they state that drastic reductions in Federal Government expenditures will result in a material tax relief to the man of small income. Reduction of the tax burden of about 97 per cent of our people must come through the reduction of State per cent of our people must come through the reduction of State and local taxes

Practically two-thirds—64 per cent—of the Federal Government expenditures are composed of largely fixed expenditures for the sinking funds and interest on public debts, the support of the expenditures are composed of largely fixed expenditures for the sinking funds and interest on public debts, the support of the Army and Navy, and for the pensions, hospitalization, and other services to veterans of our wars. About 13½ per cent is spent for the President, Congress, the judiciary and related activities, for claims and refunds, and post-office deficit. No drastic reduction can be made in these expenditures. The size of the postal deficit depends largely on postal rates, and the 8½ per cent devoted to public works is in part a response to the demand for unemployment relief measures. There is left only 14 per cent for various Government departments, spent largely to aid agriculture, labor, and industry, to promote education, and to protect the public health. The attacks on Government expenditures are concentrated largely on this 14 per cent group whose total appropriations are less by a third than the 1931 deficit. Any possible saving that can be made by cutting the portion of this percentage devoted to salaries, can not possibly balance our Budget.

Economy in Federal Government expenditures is essential. Federal employees are willing to bear their just share of the deficit. The lowering of personal exemptions and increase in Federal income rates will impose on the Federal employees their fair share of the burden. Cutting Federal salaries will not only impose an unfair proportion on an underpaid group and can not accomplish unfair proportion on an underpaid group and can not accomplish the purpose for which it is made but more important still it will stimulate additional reductions throughout industries, tend further to curtail purchasing power, and in the long run counteract the far-reaching governmental and private measures now in process for overcoming the economic depression.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I am familiar with the conditions in the Post Office Department, with which I have much to do, and, in addition to speaking for the other Federal employees, I want to reiterate what I have stated previously—that I consider the employees of the Post Office Department as faithful, hard-working, and conscientious a lot of men and women as can be found in any branch of the Government service. Their salaries are low, as a scale, lower than they should be. To make a cut of 10 per cent right down the line would cause much hardship and suffering, especially to those in the lower brackets.

I feel that these people are earning more than they are being paid. They are giving their lives to the Government service, they probably all had the opportunity of accepting private employment in place of the Government employment when they started, and I feel that our Government will not be acting fairly toward them if it insists on the proposed cut at this time, in the light of other avenues open to us for raising revenue. I believe the necessary revenue can be raised from other sources without doing harm, and I think it should be raised from those other sources.

Mr. President, I have advocated what some other Members of the Senate have advocated—a bond issue to take care of certain Federal construction projects. Those projects are in the nature of permanent investments and national assets, and I feel that the payment for them should be spread over a number of years rather than to be taken out of this year's revenues. That is a matter we expect to hear much about later. If this is done, it will make these unfair, unjust, and discriminatory cuts unnecessary and restore the high morale of the Government employees, which has been seriously shattered.

I feel that, if this cut is to be made, the lower brackets should be exempted. Consequently I favor the amendment of the Senator from California exempting those under $2,500. But, on general principles, I believe that this cut is not necessary, that it will have a bad effect on private industry throughout the country generally, that it will set an example and establish a precedent which private industry will follow, by further pulling down the standard of wages and living in the United States. It will tend to throw more fear into the hearts of our people at a time when they should have more hope and encouragement.

Mr. President, I may be in a minority in my views, but when the vote comes, no matter what the outcome may be I know that every man in the Senate will vote his convictions conscientiously. We may differ as to the methods to be employed in making the necessary economies; but I know that the Members of the Senate will do what they think is right in the matter.

I hope that this pay cut will be eliminated.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to read a statement as to the cost of living and as to the reduction thereof, found in the Nation's Business for June, 1932, as follows:

[From the Nation's Business, issue of June, 1932]

ON THE BUSINESS BOOKSHELF

That the cost of living declined during 1931 is not news, but the extent of the decline is. At the close of 1931, according to the National Industrial Conference Board, the cost of living for wage rational industrial Comercine Board, the cost of living for wage earners was 10.3 per cent below the cost at the close of 1930 and 17 per cent lower than in December, 1929. The food component for the same period declined 16.7 and 27.7 per cent. Rents were down 9.5 and 14.4 per cent. Clothing prices dropped 13.6 and 19.5 per cent. Fuel and light costs decreased 2.8 and 4.3 per cent. The per cent. Fuel and light costs decreased 2.8 and 4.3 per cent. The cost of sundries was 3.3 and 4 per cent lower.

As compared with the depression of 1921, the price declines have been low. One year after the downward movement began in 1920, the cost of living index had dropped 18 per cent, the first year of the present decline in prices was 6.1 per cent. The turning point in the prior depression was reached at the end of 20 months, when the index had declined 22 per cent. In the present depression 20 months brought a decline of only 15 per cent. In December, 1931, the twenty-sixth month of the decline in prices, living costs had fallen 17.7 per cent.

Mr. President, this matter was determined by the National Industrial Conference Board and is printed in this journal of the National Chamber of Commerce.

I am going to vote for the committee report as filed here. In the first place, if we are going to have retrenchment and economy, we must follow a plan. We appointed a committee, the committee has worked on the matter and has gone into the details, and, for my part, I realize that no one man is capable of comprehending the whole matter. I think a committee is much more capable than any one of us could be.

Further, if we amend the report by way of preventing a reduction in one place, we may amend it by way of preventing a reduction somewhere else, and the consequence in the long run would be that the report would amount to nothing and that we would not bring about any reduction at a time | when reduction in the expenses of the Government is not only justified by the reduction in the cost of living but is demanded by the necessities of the Government and of the people who pay the taxes.

The reduction proposed by the committee, being a general 10 per cent reduction with respect to public salaries, certainly can not be said to be oppressive in view of the reduction in the cost of living by 17 per cent.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator from North Carolina consider what he has read as embracing all the items included in the term "the cost of living"?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I gave specifically the details, and though I would not say that they cover all the items in cost of living, they do cover the food component, the rent component, the clothing prices, the fuel and light costs, and the cost of sundries.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator know that those items do not embrace over 20 to 25 per cent of the cost of the living of the average family?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I do not know that, but I would deny the accuracy of the statement.

Mr. LOGAN. Has the cost of sending children to school in the Senator's city, including tuition and books, been reduced to any extent?

Mr. BAILEY. The cost of sending children to school in America is as a rule a tax cost, for we have the free-school

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will-

Mr. BAILEY. Wait a moment, please. I speak from my knowledge of my own Commonwealth, and it is a safe statement with respect to the Commonwealth of North Carolina to say that 99 per cent of the children in North Carolina are educated in the free schools. We have very few academies.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it the position of the Senator that those who work for small salaries should not be allowed to earn enough to send their boys and girls to college if they so

Mr. BAILEY. I could wish that every boy and girl on earth could have the opportunity of a college education, and I do not concede-and I am sorry it is so-that the boys and girls of the present employees of the Government can obtain college educations on the present salaries of the parents; but, I do say, in view of the reduction in the general expense of living, their going to college under the proposed reduced salaries would be quite as easy as it was under the former conditions.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Mr. LOGAN. I believe it will be conceded that the indebtedness of people generally is very heavy at this time. Have interest rates been reduced any?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not have to answer that question. Interest rates, of course, have not been reduced.

Mr. LOGAN. Is not the payment of interest a part of the living expenses of Federal employees?

Mr. BAILEY. I would not say that interest is an essential part of living expenses. I had never before heard of that. It is not necessary in this world that any man should go into debt.

Mr. LOGAN. But if he gets in debt he ought to pay the interest on his debt, should he not?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly, if a man gets in debt he ought to pay his interest; but I come right back to my point that, in view of the statistics showing a 17 per cent reduction in the cost of the necessaries of life, and therefore in the general cost of living, the Government employee would be infinitely more able to pay his interest than the 8,000,000 farmers who receive nothing and the 8,000,000 workers who walk the streets crying for the right to get the daily bread with which to feed their children, and who are not even hopeful of getting those children to a high school or even a free school because they can not feed them.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, may I further interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina further yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield. Mr. LOGAN. Does not the Senator think everyone should carry fire and life insurance, and have premiums been reduced on insurance?

Mr. BAILEY. I should say not, Mr. President; but I make the same argument with respect to insurance that I make with respect to education and to interest. I will agree that a man ought to have insurance on his life, if he can; I will agree that he ought to have insurance on his home if he owns one or on his furniture, if he can; but my point is that when there is a 17 per cent reduction in the general cost of living and we propose to take only 10 per cent from the salary of the Government employee, he still has a 7 per cent advantage. He has much more than a 7 per cent advantage anyway as compared with the clerks in the stores, the ministers in the pulpits, the doctors by the bedside and in the hospital, as compared with the merchants who are in bankruptcy, the farmers who are in despair, and the laborers who walk the streets without being offered even the opportunity to earn 50 cents for work day by day. The Government clerk is in an infinitely superior position as compared to any of these.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield further?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Senator desires to get his figures correct and that he does not mean to have anything to go into the RECORD in the heat of his argument that is not sound.

The Senator must know, if he will think for a moment, that there is no 7 per cent advantage to the Federal clerks, for the cost of living, the cost of the necessaries of life, amounts only to about 20 per cent in the case of each family receiving $2,000, and, if there has been a reduction of 17 per cent in that cost, then there has been, on the whole, a reduction in the total expenses of only 3.4 per cent, as the Senator must admit. So his figures are just wrong. Has the Senator considered that this reduction in the salaries of employees drawing less than $3,000 amounts to about $85,000,000, which means 75 cents or 80 cents per capita for all the people of America, and is he willing to place a heavy burden on the Federal employees receiving small salaries in order to give 80 cents to each other person in the United States, knowing that it will be a burden and will dangerously interfere with orderly living of the Federal employees and will not help those for whom the Senator expresses so much sympathy and for whom I myself have the same sympathy?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Kentucky rose apparently to ask me a question, but he winds up not by asking me a question but by begging the whole question, and denying the accuracy of the statistics that are submitted here. I take it that there is no necessity for me to proceed further with him.

Mr. President, I wish to continue with the argument I was making and the point to which I was addressing myself when I was interrupted.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I simply desire to beg pardon of the Senator if he took offense at my interruption. I was only trying to get the facts before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I must say that it had not occurred to me to take the slightest offense, and I wish to assure my good friend from Kentucky that if he entertains the impression that I took offense it must have been from my manner; it could not have been from my language. I simply pointed out but by a rather prolonged statement which it was not necessary to answer, but if I have given the Senator the slightest offense I beg his pardon.

Mr. President, having made the point that the reduction is not oppressive as compared with the cost of living, I was intending to make the point that the reduction is just in view of the reduced income of the American people generally; but I probably covered that portion of what I had in mind in my response to the courteous questions of my friend, the junior Senator from Kentucky. However, Mr. President, I will elaborate on that for a moment.

Our situation in America is singular; there is no precedent for it. Incomes have been reduced everywhere. The incomes of the wealthy have been very extensively wiped out. We do not know how far that has gone, but we do know that the securities on which the people of wealth would depend are selling on the market for mere songs. Certainly with respect to the class of people with whom we ordinarily come in contact-and they are not the wealthy-the great rank and file of American merchants and farmers and clerks and doctors and lawyers, I feel very safe in saying they have suffered reductions of income not of 10 per cent and not of 20 per cent, but of from 50 to 60 per cent.

That is the situation with which we have to contend; and I want to make the point that the public servant, the public officer, whether he be President or Senator or Representative in Congress or the mail carrier on the route, is, and must always so regard himself, a servant of the people of his country; he is not a master; he is a servant; and if a public servant insists that his estate shall not be impaired when the estates of those from whom he draws his pay have been impaired, I do not hesitate to say that the case for the public servant is going to be infinitely worse by reason of his at-

I consider it my duty, if I may speak personally, as a public servant, not to insist upon any advantage in estate or income when I know that the people of my Commonwealth are fairly gasping for breath and stretching out vain hands for the means of livelihood, and wondering from day to day whence will come the daily bread to stop the cries of hungry children.

I am going to make another point, and this one presses home to me as of the very essence of the situation. There are those who tell us that the chief difficulty in our country arises from the fact that commodity prices continue to tend downward, and there seems no power sufficient to stop it. There are those who tell us that if we could stabilize these prices at a point the situation would be better; that if we could start them upward moving so that they could rise, say, 20 or 30 per cent, the whole world and every man and woman in it would breathe more easily. I think that the fall in commodity prices is a consequence rather than the cause of the depression, but as a consequence it makes bad matters worse, contributing to the causes that constitute the forces of what we call the vicious circle or the downward spiral.

Now, I lay down this proposition: Whatever else may account for the downward trend in commodity prices, there is one cause on which we can place a finger, and that is the disproportionate cost of government in the United States of America. We forget sometimes here in the Senate that the tax charge in America is not merely the Federal charge of about $4,000,000,000, but it is also the charge of $8,000,-000,000 by the counties and cities and towns of America annually and the $2,000,000,000 for the States and the Commonwealths which constitute the Union, representing a total tax charge of $14,000,000,000. Under circumstances in which the cost of living is reduced by 17 per cent, under circumstances in which farm commodity prices are down 60 per cent and the general commodity list of 784 commodities. according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, is down 55 per cent, by comparison that $14,000,000,000 of taxation in commodity values now equals from $17,000,000,000 to $18,000,000,000.

Here is the rule: The value of commodities is the value of human labor; that is all it is. When a commodity value goes down the reduction in that value predicates the reduction in the wage of the human labor that produced it. That that he concluded his series of questions not by a question | is the calamity of it. It is not just that the farmer gets a low return or no return whatever; it is the fact that 5-cent cotton and 60-cent wheat reflect themselves not only in the ruin of the farmers of America but they reflect themselves also in the impoverishment of the wage earners of America. The value of commodities, whatever it may be and whatever we might wish it should be, is the value of the human labor that brought the commodities into the market.

> Now, we have fixed our tax system in America, in counties and cities and States and in the Nation, on the basis of the high plateau of values that obtained in 1926, 1927, 1928, and We fixed all the tax charges of this country to the extent of $14,000,000,000 on an actuality of commodity prices from 55 to 60 per cent above the present level.

The terrible thing about that is this: The junior Senator from Nebraska, who spoke just now, said that he expected we would soon get out of this situation. I devoutly hope we will; I hope and pray that we will. There is no sacrifice, Mr. President, which any of us would refuse to make if he could contribute just a little in that direction; but, after all, the chart of commodity prices in America from 1832 to 1932 indicates that the present commodity level is just a little below the normal for a hundred years. If Senators do not believe that, they can get the Literary Digest for last week and see the chart therein reproduced, which was printed first in the Annalist, published by the New York Times, about two weeks ago.

If some one says that the hundred-year level is too long a period to test values of the present, then I will take the level from the year 1873. Eighteen hundred and seventythree was the year of the onset of the great panic that was introduced by Black Friday. Commodity prices began to sink in 1873 with that event or that series of events which we call "Black Friday," and they went down and down and down and down, not for 6 years, not for 7 years—read the chart-but they went down for 23 years in succession. They did not begin to rise until 1896.

It is safe to say that the panic that was introduced by Black Friday, as reflected in commodity prices, was not checked for 23 long years. I see Senators here who are my age, and they may reflect upon the struggles of those long vears.

Ah, but here is the other significant fact: Commodity prices did not regain the point from which they fell in 1873 until the year 1916. That is 43 years.

Those may be astonishing figures, but they corroborate and sustain the statement I make that present commodity prices, compared with the 100-year period or the 50 or the 60 year period, are more normal than abnormal.

I will make an aside here. Those commodity prices were not just because they were normal. They were unjust all those years. They have always been unjust. The essential wrong in America is the fact that the men on the farms and the men in the shops who have produced these commodities have never received a fair return for them except in periods of war. Read the scale and you will see a rise to heights in 1917 and 1918 in the present century and in 1860 and 1865 in the other century; but for all the balance of the time they have never been sufficient to afford a just reward for the millions of men and women to whom we owe our lives and the life of our Republic.

We must get out of that. There is our point. If the cost of Government is disproportionate to the other costs. if the man who works for the United States is receiving more as compared with the man who works on the farm or works in the store or works in the mill, so long as that obtains, the disproportionate cost of Government to other costs tends to depress the commodity prices and the price of

So I make this point: That as the very mudsill of our progress toward better commodity prices, as the essential first step toward getting America out of these low and apparently but damnably normal commodity rates, we must take the costs of Government from the high plateau of 1926 and 1927 and 1928 and 1929, and get them down reasonably upon the level of 1931 and 1932 and 1933. Unless we do. the disproportionate cost of Government will continue to press down the price of labor and the price of commodities.

So I make that argument on economic grounds: An essential to the recovery from this depression is the reduction of the cost of government by the United States, by the several Commonwealths, by the cities and the counties and the towns of America. We can not carry on a Government or a civilization with an income of sixty billions under a tax charge of $14,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, it is not an agreeable thing to vote to cut down anybody's salary. It is not a pleasant thing to vote to cut down the salary of a man receiving a thousand dollars a year. It is not at all agreeable. I am spending somebody else's money, not my own. It would be a very easy thing and a most agreeable thing to me to stand from under the responsibility here. I am not one who thinks that the wages of Government employees are high. That is not my point at all. They are simply high compared with the conditions under which we labor now, high compared with the rewards of the farmer, high compared with the rewards of the mechanic, high compared with the rewards of the other clerks in America. It would be easy, or that would be the line of least resistance, to undertake to say, "Oh, well, it is somebody else's money, and we will appropriate it here"; but, Mr. President, that is not just in the situation

We have taxed the people of America. We have laid that impost upon labor; and, as God is my witness, every tax we levy is, after all, a toll upon human labor. No matter where we lay it; sooner or later the cost of government presses down upon the man who produces the articles that make the commerce of a country. We have laid that burden on Nation and city and county and State until the back of American business-and by "business" I mean agriculture, and I mean industry, and I mean every form of human activity—is all but broken under the load.

So, disagreeable as it may be and regretting it though I do, it is my conviction that this situation demands, as a matter of justice and also as a matter of inexorable economic law, that I shall stand by the report of the Economy Committee and vote for every reduction that it proposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to perfect the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right.

Mr. JOHNSON. In amendments of this sort, may I say in explanation, there is generally an inherent defect. The amendment seeks to provide for an exemption of $2,500. If, therefore, one receives a salary of $2,550, from which $255 would be taken by a 10 per cent reduction, he would be then with a salary less than the individual receiving $2,449.

Inasmuch as the intent is to have an exemption of $2,500, I ask leave to perfect the amendment by adding thereto:

Provided, That the reduction on compensation or salaries over $2,500 shall not operate to reduce such compensation or salaries below the exemption of $2,500 as fixed in this section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California as modified.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and navs on the amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Copeland Costigan Ashurst Austin Bailey Couzens Cutting Dale Bankhead Barbour Davis Dickinson Barkley Bingham Dill Borah Fletcher Bratton Frazier Bulkley George Hale Hastings Hatfield Bulow Byrnes Capper Caraway Carey Hayden Hebert Howell Cohen Connaily Coolidge Hull Johnson

Robinson, Ind.

Sheppard Shortridge Smith Smoot Steiwer Stephens Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Townsend Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Walsh, Mass. Walsh, Mont. Watson Wheeler White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], as modified to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, it may be out of order, but I ask leave to offer an amendment to section 103, found on pages 45 and 46.

On page 46, after line 17, I desire to insert a subsection, as follows:

(f) The members of the Metropolitan police force and the fire department of the District of Columbia or

So that those officers shall be exempted from the proposed reductions, even as the active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps are exempted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment. The amendment of the Senator from California will be printed and lie on the table. Is the demand for the yeas and navs seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say just a word on this matter.

It might be inferred from the debate that some of us have sympathy for those who have to have their salaries reduced, and that there may be some who have no sympathy for them. I assume that every Senator in this body regrets just as much as any other Senator the necessity of cutting or reducing the salaries of any of the Government employees. We never want to do that. We should like to pay them more. We wish conditions would justify it.

Until some time ago I took the position in my correspondence that I hoped we would not have to reduce the salaries of any of our Government officials or employees. I recognize the fact that it was only a couple of years ago that we gave to them something like what they should have had long before. It has been only a couple of years since they had reasonably adequate pay given to them, so I thought that there should be no reductions. As everybody knows, however, conditions have gone from bad to worse. It is not that we want to take away any of their salaries that we press this legislation. The main incentive is not the small amount of money that will be saved to the Government. I think there is a condition of mind throughout the country which must be taken into account. The employees of the Government ought to take it into account, too, in my judgment. I think they ought to be willing, for the general good and the general welfare of the country, which I know they all love so well, to give up just a little for the time being. We want a good feeling in the country toward our employees. The proposed cut is to last for only a year.

It appears from the letters I receive from my section of the country that the conditions are very deplorable there. They are not only deplorable but they are dangerous, and becoming more so. While it might not solve the problem, I believe it would have a good effect if those who are being paid by the Government, by the people of the country, would say, 'We are willing to make a small sacrifice for a brief period to help out in the present situation."

Mr. President, we can appreciate how some of our citizens may feel. While they have nothing to do, while they have no work, or when they do not know where they can get anything to eat, unless they go to some of the welfare houses, or something of the kind, they may come in contact with those working for the Government, and how must they feel when they do meet with a Government employee who has steady, daily, yearly work, with a salary which takes care of him and his family in the present situation of things? I may be wrong about it, but, as I look at it, it is not conducive to the best feeling toward the Government itself, in my judgment, for those who are the servants of the people not to seem to be willing, in the present conditions, to make a small sacrifice for a brief time to help tide the Government over. That appeals to me as much as anything else.

As I have said, we all regret the necessity of having to reduce salaries. It is not for the small amount of money that we do it. It would not be especially beneficial to the Government in the matter of dollars and cents. It is claimed that we would take the greater amount of the savings from those who are paid small salaries. True, there are many of them. In the aggregate that helps, as we say, to balance the Budget. That, however, is not the most important thing. Every one of our employees ought to welcome the opportunity to make a small contribution, even though it may be necessary for him to deny himself some things in order to help in this situation.

Mr. President, I want to say one other thing, and yet I hesitate to say it on this floor. I do not like to say what I am willing to do, what I am glad to do. I think I know what everyone here will do. There has been a suggestion made about the salaries of Representatives and Senators. In our committee we had all sorts of differences of opinion as to what should be done. We had the same differences of opinion as to what should be done as are reflected in this body. Yet every man, whatever opinion he may have, wanted to do what was the right and fair thing.

As I have said, I hesitate to say this, because some may think, "Oh, well, he said that just to meet with favor throughout the country," but it is not that. I would like to see the salaries of Congressmen cut much more than 10 per cent. Yet I do not know what may be the obligations of this Senator or that Senator. There may be a general impression throughout the country that this is a "millionaire's club," but it is anything in the world but that. We compromised on 10 per cent as a reasonable amount to cut all the way down.

Mr. President, I know that a man with an income of eight or ten thousand dollars may be able to afford to pay more, even proportionately, than some one drawing less than that, but our committee believed that, taking all together, the 10 per cent straight cut would treat everybody proportionately alike. It would take a thousand dollars from one when it might take a hundred dollars from another. As I have said, in these times everybody must endure; everybody ought to be willing, and I believe everyone is willing, to make a sacrifice.

It has been said that most of this money would come from a great number of the employees. That is true, but we can not help that. For instance, I wonder what Senators would estimate as the number of those getting $7,500. I think it would be interesting to know the guess going through the mind of every Senator as to the whole number in over a million Government employees, civil and military, who draw over $7,500. They number just 673. Of course, that would be a very small number if we confined our compensation cut to them. We would not get much with a high percentage cut.

Mr. President, it rests with every Senator to decide what is the right and the wise thing to do. The committee has considered every phase of the question. We do not claim to have all the wisdom in the Senate. I think one Senator is just as much qualified to pass on a matter of this kind as another Senator.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. NYE. Of course, we are all very much interested in the figures the Senator has quoted as to the number of Federal employees who are receiving $7,500 a year or more. Was the figure he quoted inclusive of the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. JONES. No; it is not inclusive of the legislative branch, I judge, by the title of the table. The title is "Number and cost of salaries of civilian employees of the executive branch of the Government," and in another column the military employees are covered. So I take it it does not include those in the legislative branch.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has made a very impassioned plea for people to make sacrifices in these times. Does the Senator intend to apply the same reasoning and the same logic when we come to the provision respecting the reduction for disabled and sick soldiers of the late war?

Mr. JONES. I think so, Mr. President. My personal view was that we should not go into that at all, but the committee felt that it should, and we can not accomplish much here unless we get together and work together and do the very best we can; and I am perfectly willing to stand by the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator proposes to take the men who were disabled during the war, and whose illnesses and disabilities were the result of the war, after making that sacrifice, and ask them to make another sacrifice to permit these subsidies and governmental grafts to be extended to those who made their gold out of the sacrifice and the blood and the lives of American soldiers. I am astounded.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator has not that opinion of me. I never intimated that that was my idea as to what should be done. We provide in this bill, so far as the soldiers are concerned, that the man who has an income of $3,500 over and above his pension, or over and above any compensation which the Government gives him, and all that sort of thing, shall receive a cut, but if he has an income of less than $3,500 he will suffer no reduction. Furthermore, if a man was disabled in the line of duty, in battle, whether he has an income of $3,000 or $25,000, will not receive any cut. We will discuss those things when we come to them.

Mr. BLAINE. We will examine into that.
Mr. JONES. That is what I hope the Senator will do, that he will examine into the propositions. I am sure he will not find the committee unjust. I frankly say that I did not want to go into the soldier matter at all. Their legislation was passed solemnly by Congress only two or three years ago, and I thought we ought to leave it to the Congress to take care of those situations; but the committee felt that, on the whole, we were fair and reasonable in the provisions inserted in this bill. They take care of every disabled man, they take care of every disabled and needy man, and that these provisions in the bill ought to be incorporated into the law. So we did it. I say that I would have preferred not to do it, but we have done it, and I am going to stand by it and take the consequences, whatever they may be.

No disabled man, no man stricken in the line of duty will suffer by this legislation. I think it takes care reasonably well of all those disabled in line of duty, and they do not have to make a sacrifice.

I have been receiving some telegrams from Spanish War veterans. What objection do they make? They make no objection to this legislation; at least, they suggested none, except as to the pauper clause, and there is no pauper clause in the bill. I hope that may go out over the country. There is no Spanish War man, or any other ex-soldier, who has to make a pauper affidavit, or anything of the sort, in order to. get the benefit of compensation or pension legislation. But that legislation should be studied when we come to it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no amendment pending on that subject now, and if I could, I would direct the attention of the Senator to the pending amendment, which he was discussing when diverted. Could he inform the Senate as to the amount of savings that would be effected by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here a memorandum, just furnished me by my clerk, with reference to what one of the experts in the department says about that. It amounts practically to the provision the House passed, exempting all drawing $2,500 and under.

In the House report it is said that what is left will raise $9,000,000. I do not know whether that is so or not. I am not an expert on those things, but they say that is what it will give us, $9,000,000.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What it will save?

Mr. JONES. That it would save us $9,000,000. In other words, those drawing above $2,500 will contribute $9,000,000 toward the expenses of the Government.

This is what the expert says we will save:

The estimate of saving from the above amendment is $26,000,000.

Either this expert is mistaken or the House committee was very much mistaken. They had their expert. We can not tell, really, what it would save. I do not know; but, at any rate, it will be a comparatively small saving.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. JONES. I yield.
Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate adopts the amendment offered by the Senator from California, this will be the result: If an employee is getting $2,800, he will pay 10 per cent, or $280, leaving $2,520. But if he is getting $2,770, then he would not pay a tax at all. In other words, he would get more than the man who is drawing just $30 more than he does now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest that the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] offered an amendment to his amendment that would take care of that particular, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. No; his amendment provides that it shall not apply to any salary less than $2,500. Is not that so? Does it not provide that it shall not apply to any salary in which 10 per cent would be less than $2,500? Is not that the amendment?

The amendment of the Senator from California reads-

Provided, That the reduction of compensation or salaries over $2,500 shall not operate to reduce such compensation or salaries below the exemption of $2,500 as fixed in this section.

That means that a man who gets a salary of $2,770 will not pay anything, but if he gets $2,800 then he will have to pay $280. In other words, the $30 there makes a difference

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the intention, of course, is to give the exemption of $2,500, and I thought it was accomplished by the perfecting amendment of this morning. I rather think it is still. If it is not, we can perfect it further.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wanted to call the Senator's attention to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington who furnished the estimate of the saving under the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. Mr. T. F. Murphy, of the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator realizes he has given two sets of figures. Yesterday, in response to my query, a third set of figures was given. We are getting into exactly the same bad habit the Treasury has, and I trust we will not follow that upon this bill. I would like to avoid this ephemeral sort of mode in which we give an estimate to the Senate, only to have it changed an hour and a half afterwards. I recognize the difficulty of obtaining estimates. At any rate, on this amendment, we may say that either the first estimate given is correct, or the second estimate given is correct, or the third estimate given is correct, and then we may be pretty certain that we are well within the line of something that may be correct under certain circumstances if they were otherwise than as they actually exist.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator is correct, of course, in regard to these figures, and the more we grade the matter, the more we step up and up and up in grading these amounts, the more injustices we will find. That is the one thing that troubled our committee in working over this matter. But none of those differences are found under a straight 10 per cent cut. Everybody would be treated just the same.

Of course, there may be room for argument as to whether we should take 10 per cent from a thousand-dollar man and a higher percentage from somebody else. That is all right. But this proportionately would affect everybody alike.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I was wondering whether the chairman of the committee would not think it advisable for the committee to try to work out a sliding scale on the basis of the income-tax schedule. It is not a difficult thing to work out a sliding scale that would do justice all the way down the line. Instead of saying that over a certain amount a man should pay a certain sum, we could say that in the case of a man receiving a certain amount he would have a certain deduction. That does exact justice. The 10 per cent cut all the way down the line does not do exact justice. If there is any justice in the manner in which the income-tax rates are adjusted, there is equal justice in reducing wages on a sliding scale based on the same method we have adopted in fixing the income-tax rates. I plead with the committee either to let us go on to something else for a while in order that in the meantime a sliding scale may be worked out, or let us vote down all these propositions.

There are all kinds of schedules proposed in the Chamber now which will reduce salaries from one hundred and fourteen to one hundred and twenty-four million dollars and do no injustice, in my opinion, to the salaries in the lower brackets. So I beg the committee to go back and try to figure out a sliding or graduated scale that will accomplish the desire and purpose without having to say to the world that a man who gets $15,000 a year shall contribute only $1,500, while the woman who gets $900 a year shall contribute $90. There is no justice in that at all. I am just as anxious as is the chairman of the committee to accomplish the desired end, but I am not willing to accomplish it in this way.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator is anxious to accomplish the result, and that we only differ as to methods.

I want to say in reference to the suggestion of an arrangement based on the method employed in levying income taxes that I am frank to confess I know nothing about the incometax proposition. I do not know whether the other members of the committee know very much about it or not; but all I know is that I have to pay a certain income tax, I pay that, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. We will be glad to get some experts from the Treasury Department who are familiar with the incometax schedules to cooperate with the committee and help them work out a satisfactory solution.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I inquire whence the experts will come?

Mr. JONES. The Senator will find that there may be a difference of opinion as to the competency of the experts of the Treasury Department.

Mr. COUZENS. For years and years they have worked out the income-tax schedules; the income-tax system has been applied to the American public for nearly 20 years, and it is no more difficult to work out a sliding scale in the case of wage reductions than it is to work out a sliding scale for the income tax.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not support the amendment offered by the Senator from California, but I think the modification of his amendment which he proposes is not open to the construction placed on it by the Senator from Utah. I wish to take just a moment to state what appears to be the true construction.

Mr. JONES. As I understood, the intention of the Senator from California, anyway, was to avoid the very thing that the Senator from Utah suggested.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The language of the proposed amendment to the amendment is:

Provided, That the reduction on compensation or salaries over $2,500 shall not operate to reduce such compensation or salaries below the exemption of $2,500 as fixed in this section.

My construction of that provision is that if an employee is receiving $2,750, he shall not be required to contribute the full amount of 10 per cent which would reduce his compensation below $2,500, but he shall be required to contribute such amount as shall reduce it to $2,500. I think that is the correct meaning of the language proposed by the Senator from California.

amendment would have to be worded differently.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hardly know what to say as to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. As I have said, I myself do not claim to know anything about the income-tax schedules and their working, but it occurs to me-I do not know whether the other members of the committee feel about it the same way-

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. The chairman of the committee knows that in the committee we did consider at some length a graduated scale.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; the graduated scale was consid-

Mr. BRATTON. And we reached the unanimous conclusion that a horizontal slash was the fairest and most equitable way to effect a temporary cut, which means a sacrifice on the part of everyone cut. I have not changed my position on that one iota. Regardless of what the Senator from Michigan says-and I respect his opinion to the very limit—we are dealing with a temporary situation, one that involves hardships wherever it touches, and I have reached the conclusion that the method proposed by the committee is the simplest and most equitable. Its simplicity appeals to me; and, as one member of the committee, I say to the chairman and to other Senators here that I do not think it would accomplish anything to refer the bill back to the committee. If the Senate disapproves of what the committee has done, let the Senate vote down the amendment of the committee. If the Senate thinks that what the committee proposes is not right, let it be defeated, and I shall not complain. Of course, I would yield to the judgment of a majority of this body without complaint, but the proposal of the committee reflects my deliberate judgment; and, as one member of the committee, I favor submitting it to the Senate and letting the Senate either sustain it or reject it by its vote.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I feel the same way as does the Senator from New Mexico. Furthermore, this whole proposition will go to conference, and if the Senator from Michigan and other Senators who are interested work out a better plan than the one now proposed along the lines or the methods employed in imposing the income tax, of course they can have their suggestions ready and we will give them careful consideration, I know, in conference.

However, as the Senator from New Mexico has stated, the proposal is but temporary; it will only last a year. As a matter of fact, if it has to be dealt with again at the end of the year we shall have to deal with it in the face of conditions then existing. But this bill only deals with the question for one year.

As the Senator from New Mexico has stated, the committee considered all phases of gradations, although I do not remember whether we considered the proposal to adopt some such method as that applied in the levying of income taxes. We did, however, consider every phase of it, and finally agreed upon the horizontal cut all the way down the line. That appeals to me to be altogether the fairest plan that we can follow. As I said a while ago, personally I was in favor of gradations, and I proposed a plan for gradations in making the reductions; but there are different conditions and different Senators have different ideas; I do not know all the considerations that affect them, but it was practically the unanimous verdict of the committee that the method proposed was wise and was fair, and that we should recommend it to the Senate, and we did that.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that the Finance Committee had to go back at different times for several hours to work over suggestions presented; it did not stand pat and say that there was no alternative. I understand the Senator from New Mexico, supported by the chairman of the committee, to say that we must follow this or nothing. I am not willing to take that position. I am willing to help the Government as much as are the

Mr. SMOOT. In order to accomplish that purpose the | Senators who are members of the committee, but I am not willing to be put up against a wall and to be told we must take this or nothing.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator has the right to draw such a conclusion even from the words of my colleague from New Mexico. We have said that this is our conclusion. We are only six out of the Senate; we did the best we could.

The proposition is before the Senate, and if the Senate thinks that it can do better we will not complain; we will accept the result of a majority vote of the Senate with the same grace and with the same good feeling as will those who favor a different plan. We are willing to say that the 90 other Members of the Senate may reach a better conclusion than the six of us, but I want to repeat that we have done the best we could. We found all sorts of difficulties involved in this question, and we could not work out any proposition that would not work injustice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I want to support the suggestion made by my colleague to the chairman of the committee. My thought is this: There is obviously a substantial feeling on the floor of the Senate that an alternative should be available to the straight 10 per cent cut which has been proposed. It is obviously impossible to work out an alternative upon the floor of the Senate and have it satisfactory. There are plans which can be built upon the basis of a graduated scale which will produce all the saving which the committee is trying to realize. Purely as a matter of demonstrating the possibility of that philosophy, I myself submitted a schedule to the members of the subcommittee this morning, a schedule which starts at 1 per cent and arrives at 20 per cent by a continuous scale of gradations, which saves $124,000,000, which does not involve the 10 per cent cut until the $2,000 bracket is reached, and which does not touch any salary under $1,100.

I would hesitate to take the responsibility of attempting to put that sort of a proposal into form and submitting it as a nucleus for an alternative for the Senate to consider, but if the Senate is to have an alternative for consideration, does not the Senator think it should primarily come from the committee, and might we not save time by having the committee reconsider at least the possibility of giving us an alternative to which we might go if we are agreeable to bringing about the total saving and yet seek the alternative route to the objective?

Mr. JONES. I have the utmost respect for the Senator's judgment and for his sincerity, but I do not think we should follow that course. The bill is before the Senate. The Senator or his colleague may propose an amendment along the lines suggested; and if the majority of the Senate shall adopt it, of course we will accept the result, and we will take it to conference and work it out along the lines of what may be considered the best thing to do. I myself would not consider it-and I am sure my colleagues of the committee would not-any disrespect to us for the Senator to offer an amendment along those lines and if the Senate should deem it wise to adopt it. I believe, however, that what the committee has worked out is the very best possible method that could be worked out under the circumstances. It is not perfect; it does not satisfy everybody; it is impossible to get any proposition such as this that will satisfy everybody. We all realize that that can not be done; it is beyond human possibility. So I myself shall stand by what the committee, after just as careful study as it could give to it, determined to be the wisest course to pursue.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. When the revenue bill was before the Senate, upon objection or suggestion, the chairman of the Finance Committee did not hesitate to acquiesce and have the committee reconsider. I, of course, am well satisfied that the committee of which the Senator from Washington is chairman devoted thoughtful, careful attention to the subject matter. I agree fully with the suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan; and there ought to be no pride of opinion in the mind of any Senator.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest-

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator will pardon me, I will not detain him long.

It occurs to me, therefore, that if the matter were referred back to the committee the committee itself might be persuaded by suggestions that have been thrown out here upon the floor of the Senate. Personally I was somewhat surprised when the committee reported in favor of a uniform 10 per cent reduction, beginning at the highest and going on down to the lowest salary paid to the servants of the Government. It seemed to me that there should be a graduated scale. I am sure now—and I shall conclude with this final word—it may well be that in view of the discussions thus far carried on the committee would suggest, perhaps, an alternative, adopting some suggestions, rejecting others, so that the Senate might agree to the committee's final action.

I fear that there is a certain pride of opinion, and that the committee feels that having arrived at a conclusion it is final and ought not to be in any wise tampered with.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest-

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. JOHNSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from South Carolina rose first, and I will yield to him in a few moments. First, however, I wish to suggest that this bill is entirely different from the tax bill. We had really hoped to get through with this bill to-day. The tax bill, of course, took several weeks, and when a suggestion was made, for instance, along the line of the suggestion now made in connection with this bill there was opportunity to consider it. Personally, of course, if we expect to continue the consideration of this bill for a week or so, of course we can consider the different suggestions which may come up from day to day, but really this morning when we started I had hoped that we would finish this bill to-day, and that is yet my hope. So I should like the Senate to hear the suggestion any Senator may have to make and then act upon it. I do not think we are taking the attitude that we must adopt what the committee has agreed upon or nothing. I know that is not my attitude, and I am satisfied that that is not the attitude of my colleagues on the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. JONES. I promised to yield to the Senator from South Carolina, and I now yield to him.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I only want to say, in response to the suggestions which have been made to refer this bill back to the committee, that certainly there is no pride of opinion on the part of any member of the committee as to this proposition; but the committee entered into the consideration of this particular item in the bill with care and considered every conceivable suggestion. Certainly I gave consideration to the several proposals to grade the reduction, and I know that every other member of the committee did. The difficulty in such a matter always is that no two men can be put in a room who will agree upon the extent of the gradations to be made. The best evidence of that is the condition which is apparent in the Senate. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] has suggested an amendment. Shall we take the suggestion he has made back to the committee and adopt his amendment and come out here with it? If so, the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Van-DENBERG! will immediately ask that we retire to consider his proposal, and his proposal is entirely different from that of his colleague. Then the Senator from California, with equal sincerity and with great interest in the matter, has a proposition to exempt all salaries under $2,500, and the Senator from Michigan would say $1,000. As I suggested yesterday, whenever an exemption is put in the bill the Presiding Officer of the Chamber becomes an auctioneer. It is just a question of "how much will you bid?" I may bid $1,500, another $2,000. "I am offered $2,500; what is your offer?" "I offer $3,000." And so on; because every man has a different view, and he is honest and he is sincere, but it makes it absolutely impossible to arrive at a satisfactory result. Because of that we determined upon the course we pursued.

If the reductions were being fixed, like the rates in the income tax, as a permanent provision of law, we might then consider the exemption plan, but this is not such a measure; this is only a temporary reduction, and we determined that the only fair way to arrive at the result desired would be to say that a dollar to-day will certainly buy more than $1.10 would two years ago, so that if a man, instead of receiving a dollar receives 90 cents, he can buy equally as much with the 90 cents as he could have bought with $1 or $1.10 last year. That being so, he is not being actually hurt; his compensation is decreased, but, by reason of the decreased cost of commodities, he is not hurt; his relative status is not changed.

Whenever you go into the realm of exemption you change the status of one employee with another. When you levy a flat 10 per cent every man knows that he is affected just the same as the other man in his office and because of that he has no valid complaint. He says, "I know that it was taken from me only because of the necessity of the Government and that at the end of the year my salary goes back right away, and this year I can buy just as much with a dollar as I could last year with $1.10, and, therefore, I can not justly complain; and when my country is in a condition where it is necessary for a sacrifice to be made I am willing to make it for 12 months, knowing that my salary is going to be restored."

If the matter goes back to the committee, we will come out again with a proposition which will meet with amendments from every Senator on the floor. There is nothing for us to do but to go ahead and vote on the amendments as submitted; and with whatever the judgment of the Senate is, the committee is going to be satisfied.

Mr. JOHNSON and other Senators addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES. I am about to yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator yields the floor, I should like to be recognized for a moment.

Mr. JONES. Everything has been said that I expected to say. The matter is up to the Senate to determine what course it shall pursue.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] for just a moment?

I have spoken to very little advantage in the last couple of days upon this measure if I have failed to make plain that the position that I occupy and that is occupied by some others who are acting with me is a fundamental proposition upon the mode in which this particular economy may be effected.

I understand that the Appropriations Committee had the matter before it but a brief period; but the special committee, in which we have confidence, and which has done its work well, insists upon the fundamental idea of a 10 per cent reduction that shall be applicable to all those in the Government employment. I, on the other hand, am insisting—a few about me have the same view that I have; I have not canvassed to see whether they are many or whether they are few—there are some of us who believe, however, that fundamentally there should be no reduction on the incomes of those whose incomes are very small, and who are unable to bear a 10 per cent or any other sort of reduction.

That is the fundamental position occupied by the two sides of the controversy that now comes before us upon the amendment that I have proposed. When that amendment shall have been disposed of, the rest of it will be easy. Either the idea that is advanced by the subcommittee will go forward in the fashion that may be determined by the Senate, or, with the exemption that is provided by my Purposely I did not attempt a sliding scale with brackets after a $2,500 exemption, because that, I thought, was a subject the Senate might deal with after it had determined the policy to be pursued. The policy is whether we are going to take 10 per cent off of salaries of $900, $1,000, $1,200, $1,500, and the like, or whether we are going to accord an exemption to those who are little able to pay a part of their salaries unto the Government at the present time.

It will not do to say that it is a matter of patriotism upon the part of poorly paid Government employees. It will not do to say that we are calling upon these employees who receive hardly enough to live upon, and not enough to live upon decently in many instances, to accept a reduction. That is not the problem that presents itself; for when we take 10 per cent of a thousand-dollar salary we do infinitely worse to the individual from whom we take it than we do to the individual from whom we take 10 per cent of a $10,000 salary.

There is no comparable method by which it may be said that those reductions are alike. In one instance, where 10 per cent is taken of $1,000, $1,500, or $2,000, we take from the individual who is thus mulcted the necessaries of life. That is the difference. When we take 10 per cent from a $15,000 salary or a $10,000 salary, we take from him who has that salary the luxuries of life.

We who believe in an exemption here believe that we ought to leave the necessaries of life to all of God's creatures, whether they receive a thousand dollars, fifteen hundred dollars, two thousand dollars, twenty-five hundred dollars, or whether they receive $75,000 from the Government of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is really ungracious on my part to consume any time now, and I shall be brief.

Another ungracious suggestion: Some time ago and before we began the consideration of the tax bill I vexed the ear of the Senate with three or four speeches-inconclusive they were-denouncing the so-called flat 10 per cent reduction. I have never yielded or relaxed the opinion I all-too-imperfectly expressed at that time opposing a flat 10 per cent reduction. As well may a physician say to a corpulent person of Falstaffian proportions, "You must reduce 10 per cent," and then say to the thin, pale, emaciated, fleshless, anemic man, "You must likewise reduce 10 per cent."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], with unfeigned diffidence, and with that modesty which characterizes him, hesitated to speak about his willingness to accept a reduction in his own salary. That diffidence with which the Senator from Washington spoke well became him. There is in the Senate's history no more patient, hard-working, reliable, industrious Senator than the Senator from Washington; so he did not offend modesty in saying that he was willing to accept a cut in his own salary.

There is no Senator here but who will gladly, cheerfully accept a 10 per cent or a 20 per cent cut in salary. But, Mr. President, if the Democratic philosophy of taxation be correct, then the flat 10 per cent is wrong.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] put his finger directly upon the spot when he pointed out that our announced plan of taxation is to tax him who has much, much; to tax him who has little, little; and to tax him who has nothing, nothing. That principle should be applied with reference to these exemptions; and the Senate pays itself a poor compliment, the Senate testifies to its own debility, when it declares it is not competent to make a bill with grading reductions; that is to say, with reductions graded upon different salaries. I regret to hear the Senate confess that such is a task beyond the Senate's literary, legal, or parliamentary abilities to bring in a bill with grading salary

I make no such admission. The Senate to-day, notwithstanding the criticisms that fall upon it, has just as many pungent intellects, just as much talent, and there are now just as many Senators devoted to the public interest as ever were known in the history of this country; I deny, I respect-amendment, we may do as we see fit with the higher brackets | fully repudiate, the suggestion that it is beyond the literary. the parliamentary, the legal skill of this body to write a bill grading these reductions.

> Mr. President, I recall some 20 or more years ago that the House brought to us an impeachment of a judge. We went into executive session; and I hope I am not violating the law by now revealing, after a score of years, what then took place. The Senate took proper constitutional notice of the impeachment, and then got into a tangle which lasted three hours as to the date when the trial should begin. Finally the then Senator from New York, Mr. Root, with that skill that has made him a master of practical affairs, said:

> Mr. President, 1 move that we call the roll, and that each Senator respond by naming a day, and the day that receives the most votes shall be the date upon which the trial shall begin.

> There were 19 different days named, according to the responses made by Senators, but it so happened that a certain date in December of that year received the highest number of votes and that was the day fixed. If driven to that extremity, why not call the roll, and instead of voting "yea" and "nay," let each Senator respond indicating the amount he thinks should be named as the exemption?

> That may be bizarre and unusual, but it is entirely practical. Mr. President, as to reductions in salary: The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie] this morning sounded a note that I do not wish to be passed over without attention. As I look upon it, a reduction in the small salaries of governmental officials is a notice to the world that America has taken a backward step. It announces that we are prophets of gloom sitting in the shadows of despair croaking of coming disaster.

> I have said, and I say again, the country is sound and solvent. Thirty or forty billions of dollars repose in vaults in tax-exempt securities. This country, instead of taking this backward step, should issue a prosperity loan in bonds to the amount of $5,000,000,000 to put men to work on needful Government improvements. I say for the committee that I know the ability, the zeal, and the diligence with which they applied themselves to this task; and it is well becoming of them to say that they do not construe their designation to mean that they are wiser than the whole Senate.

> Mr. President, assuming to be correct the first set of figures or estimates brought in, assuming that the second set be correct, assuming that the third set be correct, no matter which of the sets of figures we accept, the great burden and the great proportion of reductions will fall upon those employees in the lower brackets. So, if we are going to have a flat 10 per cent reduction of salaries, it ought to be known that those employees who are receiving less than $2,500 a year are going to bear at least three-fifths of this burden of a flat 10 per cent reduction.

> Is that the "square deal" for which we talk? No. Mr. President; let those who receive salaries meagerly adequate to their subsistence receive no reduction. Let those who are receiving a higher salary receive a proper reduction until we go into the higher brackets. That would be just. That can be defended by anybody, anywhere, at any time.

> I say here that a 10 per cent flat reduction is indefensible. I challenge any Senator to go out upon the public forum and say, "Willy-nilly, without regard to the man's position, his responsibility, or the work he did, we reduced him a flat 10 per cent," just as we did the man with the high salary.

> Senators, when you leave Washington-and I regret to say that between Washington and the country a curtain, invisible but almost impenetrable, seems to be suspended-when you go out among your constituents and try to defend a flat reduction of 10 per cent, see where you will land. The Senator receiving $10,000 a year reduced 10 per cent; the charwoman reduced 10 per cent.

> I am very willing to vote for reductions based upon a graduated scale that is worked out upon a plan of ability to

> Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I simply want to make the observation that if this amendment is adopted it takes practically the major part of our economies, and we have no economies left.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to that, what I said before: Why do you not let this thing be voted on? I repeated a moment ago what I have said on three different occasions in addressing the Senate on this amendment—that if the exemption be determined, then subsequently we may take up all of the other items of salaries, and make such reductions as are deemed appropriate. So that it does not mean at all, unless it is the wish of the Senate itself, that all of the savings that have been contemplated will be eliminated from this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want to make the suggestion that the increased income taxes cause a graduated reduction in salaries in connection with this 10 per cent reduction. On the $10,000 salary the increased income taxes amount to about 6 per cent, making, with this 10 per cent, approximately 16 per cent on the average, while no income tax is assessed against incomes of $1,000 and less in the case of single persons or against incomes of $2,000 and $2,500 or less in the case of married persons. There are increasing graduations in income taxes from $2,500 upwards in the case of married persons and from $1,000 upwards in the case of single persons.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to be heard briefly on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson].

It is my intention to vote for the amendment and for other liberalizing departures from the report of the committee. We should test wage reductions, if possible, by capacity to endure rather than by machine-tabulated estimates of savings. Certain recommendations of the committee should be resisted because of the injustice and bad economics involved in proposed reductions calculated to establish salaries or wages which will not assure tolerable living conditions for Government employees at a time when everyone here knows that equivalent savings may be made in reduced Government activities without sacrificing human values. The issue, therefore, is not one of basic economy but of administrative adjustments.

The Senate and the country owe a debt to such eloquent Members of this body as the Senator from California [Mr. [Johnson]] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], who have visualized and dramatized for us the pathos and tragedy behind the contemplated slash in the smaller salaries of thousands of faithful employees of the Government who have given, and are giving, their lives to that increasingly precarious service.

During many years of active and practical observation of the problems of Government employees and other workers of America, I have learned, as have many others here, to respect and admire innumerable men and women who, more or less unknown, yet patiently and faithfully uphold the traditions and well-being of our country with too little rewarding appreciation.

The projected indiscriminate salary slash is the latest evidence of the chance-driven treatment to which they are from time to time heedlessly subjected. The Committee on Appropriations has prepared a simple mathematical program, not a graduated, sound, and wise approach to protected human standards, and the right solution of some national problems which confront us. It may not be too often emphasized that the fixed determination arbitrarily to reduce the salaries of Federal employees-except in the higher ranges of official positions, where I am willing to go as far as anyone-calls for careful analysis. It carries all the fingerprints of the dictated movement in the industrial world-at the very hour when enlarged purchasing power is the recognized sine qua non of business prosperity-toward lower wages, regardless of merit, human needs, and the unmistakable advantages to society as a whole of the large consuming markets which result from living incomes.

It is to be hoped, if only for the sake of other and more critical tests of our national wisdom and fairness, that an attitude of firm hostility will be maintained by Congress toward reductions in wages which do not guard the necessities and decencies of subsistence for Federal employees. The example of the National Government will prove far-reaching.

Congress is to-day being called upon to trample under foot modest standards of income for capable men and women. We are asked to sound a retreat in the long struggle both of Federal service and of private industries out of darkness into light.

Of course, any reduction in wages fixed by the Government will be instantly seized upon by industrial leaders as justification for pressing down the incomes of uncounted numbers of helpless men and women everywhere in the United States over whom hangs an appalling shadow of known and threatened unemployment. The menace is so intimidating that many of those involved suffer in silence, since they fear openly to proclaim their humiliation, no matter how greatly they are affected by this new misfortune or any other impending injustice.

Mr. President, all the information the Senate requires for full and intelligent determination of this question is already before us. For example, on the 1st day of June I placed in the Congressional Record a highly important study of real wage losses suffered by Federal employees over a substantial period of years. The report was prepared by the National Federation of Federal Employees, and was more especially the careful product of Vice President Ulrey J. Biller, the actuarial expert of that federation.

Lest some of the significance of that report be lost, I desire to direct attention to the fact that this report on "real" as distinguished from money wages closes its several portions with concise conclusions, which, taken together, tell the story of the wage experience of Federal employees of this country from 1913 until the present time. The clear conclusion from this illuminating analysis, particularly grasped by anyone familiar with fluctuating price levels, is that, for the whole period of 18 years, Federal employees have suffered substantially in wage returns in comparison with other workers of the country.

The various conclusions are set out at the close, as I have said, of each section of the report. For example, it appears from this report that the real wage of a $900 clerk dropped to $510 in 1919; that for three years it was below what was paid the classified laborer in 1913; and that the average annual real wage for the whole period of 18 years was that paid to a junior messenger in 1913, namely, $720.

Continuing our examples, the analysis further shows, in the case of a $1,200 clerk, that the real wage received by that clerk, based on the actual purchasing power of the salary paid him, was reduced during the whole period from 1914 to 1924 approximately to the wage of a senior messenger in 1913, which at that time was $840; that from 1917 on, the real wage was below that of a senior messenger; that from 1918 to 1921 it was at or below the wage of a junior messenger, and that in 1919 it was just a little above the wage of the classified laborer of 1913.

For the purposes of this immediate discussion it is unnecessary to pursue further such typical instances in the findings of this useful report. It clearly establishes the right of Federal employees to patient and equitable consideration in this hasty and reckless legislative hour. In this connection I think it proper also to refresh the memories of Members of this body concerning the numbers of Federal employees who are in the lower wage brackets and are to be affected by the salary slash proposed by the committee, if approved by the Senate.

The public will be surprised to learn that notwithstanding a general impression to the contrary thousands of civilian Government employees are to-day receiving less than a conceded living wage from the United States.

The figures of the United States Bureau of the Budget show that in January, 1932, there were 124,678 Government employees receiving less than $1,000 a year.

Employees paid between $1,000 and $1,100 a year numbered 56,883; those receiving between $1,100 and $1,200 numbered 12,157; those between $1,200 and $1,300 a year numbered 37,558; those between $1,300 and $1,400 were

20,243; those between $1,400 and $1,500 numbered 24,643, making a total of 276,162 who are paid less than $1,500 a

Employees receiving from $1,500 to $1,600 numbered 24,044; from $1,600 to $1,700 the number was 28,389; from $1,700 to $1,800, 20,028; from $1,800 to $1,900, 35,690; from $1,900 to $2,000, 32,776; from $2,000 to $2,100, 24,186; and those receiving $2,100 but less than $2,200 numbered 116,759. The total number receiving less than $2,200 a year was Certainly such figures as these must appeal to everyone here of humanitarian impulses and convictions when we face the far-reaching consequences of further cuts in such minor wages as have been enumerated.

Further and appropriate emphasis may be given the present urgent problem by quoting a searching and thoughtful analysis by Mr. Thomas F. Flaherty, the exceptionally efficient secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Bureau figures. Applied to civilian salaries of $2,300 and over, a 10 per cent reduction would yield $40,192,394.

So much for the "good" a Federal salary cut would do. Let us turn the question around:

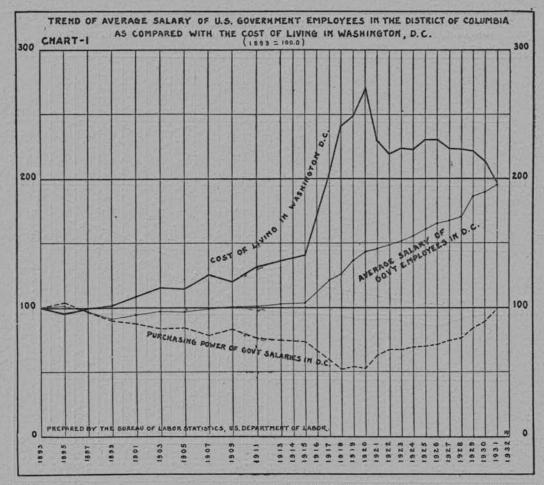

WHAT HARM WOULD IT DO?

WHAT HARM WOULD IT DO?

To the business interests of the country, which depend upon the consuming power of the people, a 10 per cent cut in the salaries of three-quarters of a million Federal workers would mean withdrawal of $105,587,063, or $55,382,465, or $40,192,394, as the case might be, from the channels of trade. Government employees would be able to purchase just that many less millions of dollars' worth of meat, breadstuffs, vegetables, fruits, and foods of whatever kind, clothing, household goods, house rent, gas and electric light, automobiles, radios, or what you will. By that many millions of dollars the earnings of farmers, cotton growers, manufacturers, producers, and dealers of all kinds would be reduced. The reduction of Federal salaries would do that much harm to the Nation's business.

To the Government employees themselves the effect would be a

To the Government employees themselves the effect would be a lowered standard of living. The largest group of civilian employees (124,678) receive less than $1,000 a year. The next largest group

Post Office Clerks. Discussing governmental wage standards, Mr. Flaherty recently said, in part:

The deficit is due to failure of revenues in the face of continuing expenditures—revenues which have fallen off because industry, commerce, and the taxable incomes of individual citizens are reduced to a level which fails to yield the former tax returns. Should postal salaries be cut in order to reduce this deficit?

Clearly the constructive need is a revival of industry and commerce. But this can only come about by reestablishing markets, and markets depend upon the buying power of the potential consumers of goods. Markets are wanting now, first of all, because the people's buying power is low.

people's buying power is low.

WHAT GOOD WILL IT DO?

The Budget Bureau reports that all the Government services combined receive $1,315,690,467 in salaries, the civilian personnel receiving $1,055,970,636. A flat reduction of 10 per cent of all salaries of the civilian personnel, as has been proposed by one Member of Congress, would yield $105,597,063. Another proposal is a 10 per cent reduction for all civilian employees receiving more than $2,000, none to fall below $2,000 after reduction. This would yield, from the civilian personnel, $55,382,465, according to Budget (116,759) receive $2,100 to $2,200. More than three-fourths (558,034) receive less than $2,300. Nearly 65,000 (64,693) post-office clerks receive $1,700 to $2,300, and of these, 48,011 receive $2,100. A 10 per cent reduction on a $2,300 salary would reduce it to $2,070. How far would $2,070 go in a typical family of five, with the modest living standards of the typical post-office clerk?

At this modest scale of living, the $2,300 clerk reduced to $2,070 would run short by $105. The $2,100 clerk would be $175 in the hole. Even the $2,400 clerk would not get by in San Francisco, while in Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Chicago the greater housing costs alone would run the year's expenditures up by several hundred dollars.

It has been found, in fact, that 90 to 98 per cent of the families of Government workers in five cities where costs of living for the of Government workers in five cities where costs of living for the year 1928 were studied by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics were unable to keep their expenses within the husband's salary of $2,500 or less, and his earnings had to be supplemented by extra work on his part or by the earnings of his wife or children. Even then the family income fell short.

Applying the cut of 10 per cent all down the line of these postal salaries, the yield to the Federal Treasury from salaries of postoffice clerks would be $13,650,540, or six and one-half tenths of 1 per cent of the Treasury deficit, most of which would come from the 48,011 clerks in the $2,100 grade.

To consider the proposed Federal salary cut only in terms of its money value is, of course, to omit certain other very important considerations.

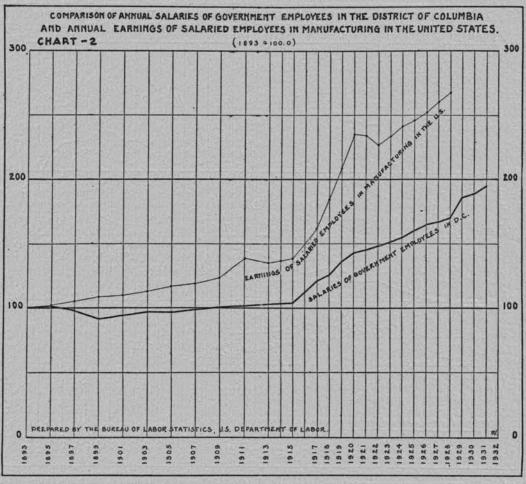

The gradual increase that postal employees have fought for all these years, and have in part achieved, is based upon the theory that the Government, as an employer, should set a standard in advance of the purely competitive wage-fixing policy of private industry. This is good business as well as good ethics. The postal system is indespensable as a channel of commerce, and it is one of the great arteries of governmental and social service. When it breaks down disaster follows—disaster to business and the public welfare. * * Like all other wage earners, they are entitled not only to a living wage but to a wage proportional to their productivity and importance. What has thus far happened, in reality, is this:

(1) While postal wage rates have almost doubled since 1913, their purchasing power declined steadily from 1913 to 1918, and has risen but irregularly since that time, only just now coming clerks at $2,200 and $2,300. The rates are not the ideal but they do represent principles and standards in Government wage policy which should not be abandoned but rather advanced. On the other hand, for many thousands of clerks with families, this salary scale does not actually meet the cost of living. To reduce it by 10 per cent would lower standards of living, but would make a very slight impression on the Treasury deficit. The postal pay roll does, however, the sum all told, put millions of dollars into the channels of trade—preventing to that extent a deeper slump into business depression. Why reduce these consumers' buying power now? power now?

Mr. President, I have troubled the Senate with such instances because they are not only highly suggestive in our economic discussion and their legislative bearing on the problem of the post-office clerks of the United States, but because they also reasonably present the larger question of right treatment by Congress of all Federal employees. Surely the argument is fundamentally sound with respect to the attitude of the Government toward those who serve it. It is equally persuasive as indicating the way to take if we back to a little more than the purchasing power of postal salaries before the war.

(2) While the working day of the postal clerk has been shortened and the postal force has expanded in numbers to meet the ened and the postal force has expanded in numbers to meet the constantly greater pressure for speed and volume of service, the individual postal clerk has become 100 per cent more productive than the individual clerk of 1913; that is to say, he produces twice as much postal revenue.

The postal salary scale of to-day, therefore, in terms of purchasing power, is a little better than the pre-war scale, in return for twice the output. In other words, the postal salary classification enacted by Congress in 1925 reaffirmed the principle upon which previous postal-ware increases were predicated but went which previous postal-wage increases were predicated, but went only part way toward the goal of justice. To reduce postal salaries now would be to nullify and to stultify that position.

IS IT SAFE?

If postal salaries were reduced now, what ends would be satis-

Results of the low-wage policy on private industry are evident now in silent machinery and closed plants. Has not this country had enough of that?

The salary scale of postal clerks range from $1,700 to $2,100 a year by act of Congress. There are two higher grades for special are to find prompt, efficient, and self-respecting escape from our present deep economic depression.

The theory that America will restore prosperity by penurious reductions in important services is no longer accepted by economists of repute or by thinkers of wide reputation in America. Certainly such pleas as we have been reviewing, rational as they are and fortified by impressive human and economic considerations, should give us pause. All vital economic factors are now before us to be duly weighed. Not only should we have regard for the welfare of human beings, as forcefully urged by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], but it is also fairly certain that unless this country is prepared to spend in order to make, to proceed fearlessly and in the pioneering spirit which made mighty the America we love, we shall find ourselves in the valley of the shadows of this depression long after dark predictions of the present hour have run their course. Mr. Justice Brandeis, the eminent Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, recently said, in a learned opinion delivered within a stone's throw of this Chamber, that we in America must let our minds be bold as our fathers were bold. Instead, in dealing with the present economic crisis, month after month our national leadership has pursued policies of timidity and vacillation which have allowed the country to sink to deeper and deeper spirals of despair. It is clear beyond words that unless this Nation somehow finds ways and means to summon its resources of courage and intelligence to concerted action, problems we do not now dream of will soon be knocking at

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.
Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he does not believe that outside the field of salary and compensation and pay there are opportunities for economies in the Government, growing out of the fact that the Government has become so complicated and that in many instances there is too much overhead? In other words, is there not ground for economy and saving in expenditures in working out a simplification of the mechanism of the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I am indebted to the Senator from Florida for his inquiry. For 11 years I was a member of the United States Tariff Commission. During that period I had frequent occasion to observe intimately some administrative operations of the Government and to reach conclusions believed conservative as to certain savings which may be made. Answering the much respected Senator from Florida, I have no doubt that such savings as he indicates may be made on a far-reaching scale without debasing Federal salaries below decent levels of subsistence. Large savings can be effected in the several departments without consolidation; others may, of course, be secured through consolidations of governmental services and other simplifications to which the Senator from Florida has referred. Throughout this session I have been convinced that such a course could and should be pursued to effect necessary economies without levying in any extreme way on the living of Federal employees. Such a statement, however, does not involve placing the stamp of approval on proposals to give the President arbitrary and absolute power to do as he sees fit with governmental activities. Giving full weight to presidential recommendations, that work can be done by the Congress quite as effectively and I think at this hour more wisely than by the President.

But, Mr. President, before being diverted, I was about to refer to two charts, Nos. 1 and 2, which, if possible, I desire incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks. The charts, which are before me, relate to the subject under discussion and were prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the United States Department of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. These two illustrative charts are substantially self-explanatory. Perhaps, however, it should be stated that in them an attempt has been made to show the trend in Government salaries in comparison with changing living costs during the period of almost 40 years from 1893 to 1931. The year 1893 is used as a starting point because that is the earliest year for which the data regarding Government salaries are readily available. In any event the period is sufficiently long to give a fairly complete picture of the subject. For the earlier years the information regarding cost of living is incomplete.

Chart 1 contrasts the average salary of Government employees in the District of Columbia with the cost of living in the United States, and also shows the relative purchasing power of such salaries in terms of the year 1893 as a base. The chart discloses that from 1893 until the beginning of the World War Government salaries in the District of Columbia remained almost stationary, the average being $1,096 in 1893 and $1,141 in 1915, whereas during this period cost of living in the District of Columbia increased about 40 per cent. After 1915 Government salaries rose steadily and in 1931 were almost 90 per cent higher than in 1915. Meanwhile, however, the cost of living had increased very sharply up to 1920, and until 1931 remained at a considerably higher level than salaries. As a result, the "real wages"—that is, the purchasing power of salaries-remained below the level of 1893 for practically the whole period. This is illustrated by the bottom line on Chart 1, which shows that the purchasing power of Government salaries was almost 50 per cent lower during the war period than it had been in 1893 and did not reach the earlier level until 1931, when the decline in living costs, in combination with the wage increases of 1929 and 1930, brought the purchasing power of Government salaries back to the 1893 level.

Chart 2 compares the trend of Government salaries in the District of Columbia with average annual earnings of salaried employees in manufacturing industries in the United States. Figures on which this chart is based were compiled by Dr. Paul H. Douglas from the reports of the United States Census and other authoritative sources. It will be noted that in 1893 the average Government salary was $1,-096 as against $954 in private employment. By 1901, however, private salaries had become greater than Government salaries, and, in general, this disparity increased steadily up to 1928, the latest year for which data regarding the private salaries are available. In that year it appears that Government salaries were about 70 per cent higher than in 1893, whereas private salaries had increased approximately 168 per cent.

Mr. President, I shall not longer detain the Senate. As I have already said, however, the information we have is adequate; the applicable principles are familiar. In the face of such a showing, it is to be hoped that the true friends of men, women, and children, rallying to standards sensible, humane, and in accordance with national economy, will refuse to be stampeded by panic propaganda into the futilities of panic legislation.

Our low-paid governmental employees are entitled to appreciation rather than ingratitude. It is entirely feasible to treat them with some measure of consideration and fairness. After all, we must bear in mind that if we of America proceed with and apply the initiative, vigor, and scientific knowledge which distinguish our century above others, the profound and prolonged depression through which we have been passing may soon be remembered as a temporary eclipse in the resistless advance of human evolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, what is the question pending before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the modified amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], on which question the yeas and nays have been

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it in order to offer a substitute for that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A substitute for that amendment would be in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate or delay the passage of the pending bill. I shall speak very briefly.

It would be idle to take time to review conditions that exist everywhere in this country. There is not a business. there is not a State, there is not a city which is not in a serious condition.

I just read from a copy of the Washington Daily News the astounding intelligence that 500,000 people who have been fed daily by the Illinois State Relief Commission are facing starvation beginning next Monday, because the funds which have heretofore been used to feed those people are exhausted, and, therefore, beginning next Monday, unless something shall be done in the meantime, there will be no money to provide even soup for 110,000 families, or about 500,000 people.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to inject again a controversial question into this debate. I do it with a great deal of reluctance, but it strikes me that when people are on the verge of starvation, when we have placed upon the citizens of the country in their present depressed condition an additional tax bill of $1,200,000,000, we ought to modify the Volstead Act at least within the limits of the Constitution and thus obtain $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 a year, both to make but partly necessary the proposed reduction of salaries on the one hand, and to put about $200,000,000 a year into the Federal Treasury on the other hand, which could be made to finance relief measures.

It is proposed by the savings contemplated by the pending bill to effect economies amounting to $231,000,000 a year, of which about $125,000,000 are salary reductions. That is just about one-third of the sum that would be raised by levying a tax of 24 cents a gallon upon 2.75 per cent, by weight, beer, the legalization of which would not transgress the eighteenth amendment, permit a fairer cut in salaries in the lower brackets, and leave about $300,000,000 over each year for the Federal Treasury and for relief for the taxpayers.

If this proposal violated the Constitution, that would be one thing, but there is ample authority to uphold the contention that it does not transgress the prohibitions of the eighteenth amendment, and I want the Senate to have a chance to vote on whether or not they would rather cut all pay of Government employees, as here projected, many of whom are receiving less than a thousand dollars a year, there being 124,000 of this group, to be exact, who are getting less than a thousand dollars a year, or whether we want to legalize a beverage which is in itself harmless, not conducive to drunkenness, and thereby save the Federal employees at the bottom from a too sharp slash of the salaries which they now receive.

If the country were fairly prosperous, if people were not starving, if community funds were not breaking down, I would not blame anybody for saying, "We will go ahead for a while under the existing order"; but when people are starving, when community funds are breaking down, when 124,000 Government employees receiving less than a thousand dollars a year will have to have their wages cut because the Congress will not within constitutional limits legalize this harmless beverage, it strikes me that intelligence has gotten to the point where one almost is forced to conclude that certain influences, not in this Chamber but near it, have more power with the American Congress than have the necessities of the moment, the conditions of the people, and their pitiful plight.

Therefore, Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to legalize 2.75 beer. It will raise three times the amount of revenue which this bill contemplates by way of savings; it will raise, according to 1917 and 1918 figures, when 2.75 beer was sold, between $400,000,000 and $500,000,-000 a year, and without injury to or complaint from the

Now we have put a cent straight tax on every gallon of gasoline; we have taxed admissions to every motion-picture theater; we are increasing the postage rates to 3 cents for letter mail; we have taxed every frigidaire; we have taxed every bank check; we have taxed all lubricating oils; we have taxed chewing gum; we have taxed candy; we have taxed almost everything under the sun, while the big bootlegging industry runs roughshod through the Constitution, rolls in its millions, debauches government everywhere, and untaxed, contributes not a cent to the Federal Treasury.

All Federal employees are asked now to take a 10 per cent cut, when we have it in our power to take this illegal industry away from the bad hands in which it is now lodged and put $300,000,000 additional in the Treasury each year and make all these cuts more equitable, if we want to do it.

I offer that amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer it as a substitute or as an amendment to the modified amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. If I can offer it as an amendment, I should like to offer to amend the Senator's modified amendment by inserting a new section immediately following his.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. We are up to the point where there is about to be a vote upon the policy that will be pursued with respect to this bill. I should be very glad if the Senator could withhold his substitute until that policy is determined. It might have some effect, although I do not think it will, so far as the votes are concerned in respect to the substitute that is suggested.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will withhold it, may I say to the Senator from California. I am reluctant to do it, but I realize that there has been considerable debate on his proposition; and while I would have voted differently if I could have incorporated my amendment in his, nevertheless I will have another opportunity; so I will withdraw my amendment for the time being.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think we all realize the very difficult problem that this committee have had to deal with. I think they deserve a great deal of credit for their courage and the admirable manner in which they have performed their public duty.

I do feel, however, very strongly, that these reductions in salaries ought to be graduated. I appreciate the force of the argument made by members of the committee, and I think I have some understanding of the difficulties which confronted them in attempting to work out a graduated scale of reductions.

It seems to me that the spirit of the employees of the Government service is such that they are all willing to concede the necessity of some reduction in their salaries. Many of them feel—and I share that feeling—that a 10 per cent reduction in the case of the employees whose salaries are less than $2,500 is a very substantial reduction and is bound to result in hardships that these employees ought not to be asked to bear.

I have in mind one class of employees who would be particularly burdened in the event of a straight 10 per cent reduction of the salaries of all Government employees. I refer to the postal employees.

There is no group of employees in the Government service who perform their services more faithfully, who work more industriously, and whose integrity is of a higher order than this particular class. They are a class of our citizens who. by reason of their employment, have to live a little differently from other people receiving the same wage. They have to maintain a certain standard in the community. The eye of the public is upon them at all times. They have to make a little more sacrifice in the education of their children and in the clothing of their children. They are expected to take a little more active interest in fraternal life, in community life, in neighborhood life. They can not force a reduction in rents as private employees whose wages are cut may demand. To ask them under these circumstances to accept a flat reduction of 10 per cent, in my judgment, is a mistake.

I believe their spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotism is such that they would be willing to accept some reduction; but a reduction of $220 on a postal employee who has a small family, who has his rent to pay, and who lives in a fairly representative section of the community is too much.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to an interruption?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield; certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I hesitate to interrupt the Senator's logical and able speech; but let me suggest this:

Who ever heard of contributions to the Red Cross or the Community Chest levying 10 per cent on all? Some are able to give 10 per cent, some 5 per cent, some 20 per cent.

The Senator is logical, I think, in his statement, and I support it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I appreciate the Senator's observation.

Mr. President, we have talked a good deal during the debate upon the tax bill about applying the principle of ability to pay. I think we ought to apply the principle of ability to sacrifice. It is not an equal distribution of the burden of sacrifices to take $200 from a Government employee who is receiving $2,000 and take $1,000 from a salary of a Government employee or official receiving $10,000.

The senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and myself have conferred with my colleague [Mr. COOLIDGE] and several other Senators concerning the working out of a graduating scale of reductions; and we have reached the conclusion that some such scale as I will now read would be more equitable than the one presented by the committee.

We would provide that all employees receiving salaries of less than $1,000 should have no reduction; that those with salaries from $1,000 to $1,500 should have a 3 per cent reduc- | tion; from $1,500 to $2,000, 4 per cent reduction; from $2,000 to $2,500, 5 per cent reduction; from $2,500 to $3,000, 71/2 per cent reduction; from $3,000 to $5,000, 10 per cent reduction; from $5,000 to $10,000, 121/2 per cent reduction; and from $10,000 up, 15 per cent reduction. We would, of course, allow all salaries to remain as they are.

This schedule would provide a saving of about $75,000,-000-to be sure, not as much as that contemplated in this

It is a fair proposal. It seems to me it is an arrangement that can be defended. Perhaps the rates ought to be increased a little. Perhaps we ought to begin with 4 per cent instead of 3 per cent, and go down 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and so on.

I believe, however, we should begin with a reduction of 3 per cent on those employees receiving between $1,000 and $1,500, 4 per cent from those employees between $1,500 and $2,000, and 5 per cent for the employees between $2,000 and $2,500, which includes practically all the postal employees. Then the amount of reductions increases until we reach our own salary, where the highest reduction is made.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In just a moment.

There are two principles that I have fixed in my mind. One is that the Members of Congress ought to levy upon ourselves the maximum reduction, whatever it is; secondly, that we ought not to ask the scrub women, the ordinary laborers, the employees with family, the postal employees, to take the same ratio of reduction that we provide for ourselves. That is the difficulty with the proposition of the committee, it does not differentiate between those who may be able to save something and those who must spend all they are paid.

I gladly yield now to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wanted to suggest that we are all very much concerned in making the amount of reduction that has seemed necessary. I have liked from the beginning the suggestion of the graduated reduction, making even the lower-salaried people, at least above $1,000, feel that they are making some contribution, the same as others, but to go up from that figure. Can we not arrange the percentages so as to get the amount that is necessary even though we have to go up higher in the higher brackets?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It certainly can be done.

Mr. FESS. That is what I should like to see done.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator from New York and myself had had longer opportunity, we could have readjusted these rates, and undoubtedly could have reached the $100,000,000 mark.

I am glad the Senator agrees with me that we can not defend cutting our own salaries the same percentage that we cut the salary of the scrubwoman. We can not defend it; but we can defend a graduated reduction of salaries all along the line, placing upon ourselves the maximum reduction. We can say to our fellow citizens, "We appreciate that this is a sacrifice. We did not want to place this burden upon you; but we have taken the maximum ourselves, and we have gone down the scale, making the reduction very much less among those employees who are paid a very small salary."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield again to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. It seems to me that anything less than what appears to be necessary, according to the figures that have been submitted to us, will be more or less a failure. The principle that has been announced is one that meets with my approval. It would seem to me not a difficult thing to raise the necessary amount under that principle, even though we had to go up to 20 per cent on the higher brackets. I think we ought not to stop short of the necessary saving, and ought to go down at least to $1,000, but make the percentage small, so that it will not be seriously hurtful, and at the same time everybody will be making a contribution to the solution of this problem.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am in full accord with the Senator. I do not care what the maximum may be in the higher brackets, but I do say that it ought to be graduated; and the country will not be generally satisfied with any other plan. We ought to set the example ourselves of taking the maximum reduction. Then we can face the country and say that we have shown our willingness to sacrifice in this emergency, and we have not asked anybody else to sacrifice as much as we have.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senate, whatever its judgment may be of me, will say that I have political temerity; but I have not the temerity, I have not the face, I have not the nerve, I have not the brass, to go out among the people and say, "I cut the laborer 10 per cent and took a 10 per cent cut myself."

I believe in the doctrine of noblesse oblige. We ought to take the highest cut, and give the low man the low cut.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Absolutely. No other position will be justified. No other position will be accepted by the country. The Senator is absolutely right. We must take the highest cut ourselves and set the example before we ask to have a cut taken by these other people, these tens of thousands of men with families, who have fixed charges, and who can not reduce their living expenses. I think 5 per cent under $2,500 is enough to begin with. We may have to come back another year and increase this, but we ought not to begin immediately and at once with a reduction of 10 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. In going over the figures very roughly I think it safe to assume that if the figures start at 4 per cent instead of 3 that will add about eleven or twelve million dollars.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Making the total about $90,000,000?

Mr. COPELAND. Eighty to ninety million dollars.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the debate. I understand that the committee have felt that they could contribute nothing more to help the Senate solve this problem in a different way by a reconsideration of their recommendation in the matter of salaries. I regret very much to learn that, because it is my judgment that they will have a great deal of difficulty in getting the Senate to accept a flat cut of 10 per cent all along the line. I personally can not defend it for the lower salaries. For the higher? Yes and more. I feel very strongly that we will not give the best satisfaction to the country unless we graduate these cuts. I say, further, that we will create a splendid spirit among our Government employees, it will have a very, very fine psychological effect to have it said to them that the Senate itself took the maximum cut, and has made the reductions based upon the ability to sacrifice.

Let us keep those two phrases in our minds-ability to pay in levying taxes; ability to sacrifice in reducing wages. Those with the salaries of $10,000 and higher are in position to make a larger sacrifice proportionately than those who have the smaller incomes. I do not think it is fair or right to ask people with less than $1,000 salaries to take a 10 per cent cut.

I desire to have read at the desk in connection with my remarks an editorial that appeared a short time ago in the largest circulated newspaper of the city of Boston, the Boston Post, on this subject of salary reductions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HOW TO DO IT

The movement in Congress for a reduction of Government salaries may sound impressive, but as a measure of real economy it is only a drop in the bucket. At best, it will yield only a few million dollars. The cost of government can not be effectively cut by piecemeal.

The money saved on salaries will quickly be fritted away by Congress. What is needed is a realization that the whole machinery of government is expensive beyond all reason.

There can be no real relief for taxpayers until Congress tackles the matter in a wholesale way. Savings should be by hundreds of millions instead of by single millions. Each year sees a huge | ment from employees drawing under $2,500 as from the piling on of the cost of government.

Aside from the Post Office Department, and perhaps the Treasury Department, the budgets for the various departments could be cut in halves, by dropping the thousand and one useless bureaus and cutting off of various activities, none of them useful.

But even drastic measures of economy would be wasted unless Congress ceased the practice of pouring out hundreds of millions for the "relief" of various interests having great vote-controlling power.

The Farm Relief Board has spent around $500,000,000, all to no purpose whatever. The money is lost. And yet the call is for still more funds.

Various costly irrigation projects, which never pay their way, only add to the plight of the farmers. The great Hoover Dam undertaking will probably be a constant drain on the Treasury for the benefit of a small section of the country.

Until reckless spending by Congress is halted, there can be no actual economy in Government. The problem is our biggest one, and ought to be tackled in a big way. But so long as Congress persists in bidding for votes by digging into the Public Treasury there is no hope for even checking the wholesale waste of public money.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I suppose it is useless to appeal to the committee to reconsider their recommendation. They may succeed in getting a majority vote in the Senate for this flat reduction of 10 per cent, but it will be a vote which even the Senators who vote to make it possible will not be pleased with or satisfied. The sentiment even of Members of this body who are disposed to accept the committee report is in favor of a graduated scale of reductions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I inquire whether the specified Senators fear to vote or merely consider the committee's proposal unjust to Federal employees?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will have to let the Senators answer that for themselves.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does the Senator have in mind any schedule of graduation?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I read the suggestion I have in the absence of the Senator. The Senator has been out of the Chamber, has he not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; I was out for a moment, and I would like to have the Senator read it again.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will read it again for the benefit of the Senator from Oklahoma, and also for the benefit of the Senator from Maryland, who would like to hear it.

Where the salary is less than $1,000 there will be no reduction.

Where the salary is between $1,000 and $1,500 the reduction will be 3 per cent, saving to the Federal Government approximately $4,200,000.

Where the salary is between $1,500 and $2,000 there will be a reduction of 4 per cent, representing a saving to the Federal Government of $8,200,000.

Where the salary is between $2,000 and $2,500—and that is the branch which includes the postal employees-the reduction will be 5 per cent, with a saving of $30,000,000 to the Federal Government.

Where the salary is between $2,500 and $3,000 there will be a reduction of 71/2 per cent, with a saving of $9,000,000.

Where the salary is between $3,000 and $5,000 there will be a reduction of 10 per cent, thereby saving $13,000,000.

Where the salary is between $5,000 and $10,000 there will be a reduction of 121/2 per cent, representing a saving of

Where the salary is above $10,000-which will include our own salaries-there will be a reduction of 15 per cent, instead of the committee's 10 per cent, and a saving of about a million dollars.

Mr. TYDINGS. What would be the total saving?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The total saving would be in excess of $70,000,000. That table so works out that there would be about as much saved to the Federal Govern-fewer in number with salaries in excess of $2,500.

I assume that the Senator from California is particularly disturbed at the prospect of a reduction of 10 per cent flat in all salaries under $2,500. I take it that the Senator is not adamant against a small reduction, much less than 10 per cent, graduated, among the employees with salaries of less than $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. Personally, I prefer an exemption of $2,500. I would not reduce the salaries which are below that figure at all, and the amendment I have presented is for the purpose of exempting salaries of $2,500 and less.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assume that to be the Senator's position. But if we can not get the exemption the Senator asks for, I am sure the Senator would agree that some such schedule as the Senator from New York and myself have proposed would be acceptable.

Mr. JOHNSON. First I wish to have the Senate determine, if it be possible to have it do so, the policy in respect to exemptions, and I have started with an exemption of $2,500, in the hope that the Senate will agree with me that that is the appropriate exemption to make. If it does not, then we must pursue some other course.

May I say to the Senator that if he will agree with me in the proposition I have just advocated, I would accept a graduated scale running up very much higher than 10 per cent on the higher salaries.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The schedule I have proposed and discussed goes as high as 15 per cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator from California whether it is his intention, in the event we adopt the exemption of $2,500, and that does not result in saving the amount contemplated necessary to be saved, to accept a cut in the salaries above $2,500 larger than is now provided?

Mr. JOHNSON. I would make the cut larger, but I must say in frankness to the Senator that I do not believe upon the brackets in excess of $2,500 we could obtain the same amount of money that would be obtained by the proposal of the committee. But we could increase very materially from the higher brackets what would be obtained under the committee plan by making the percentages higher on the salaries over

Mr. TYDINGS. My reason for propounding that interrogatory was this: That many of us would be inclined, perhaps, to vote for some other plan, provided that in voting for the initial step of it we knew where we would land when we got to the last step. In other words, if the Senator's amendment were coupled with the fact that salaries above $2,500 should take a higher cut than is now provided in the bill, but approximating altogether a large sum of money, somewhat along the lines now contemplated, many of us who can not vote for the Senator's amendment would be inclined under those circumstances perhaps to go with him.

Mr. JOHNSON. In fairness, I can not give such an assurance to the Senator. It would not be fair for me to assert that. That we could raise much more money with appropriate and heavier rates than those proposed by the committee I do not doubt, but that we would approximate the sum which the committee estimates its proposal would raise I would not attempt to say.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if I may transgress for just a moment more, I am in an unfortunate position in voting on this amendment, because if I had a complete substitute plan to vote for, in place of the plan of the committee, that would be one thing; but just to throw out a part of this without something being put in its place makes it hard for a Senator to know what course to follow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the first fundamental proposition, to my mind, seemed to be to determine upon what exemption would be accorded. I have fixed the exemption at $2,500 arbitrarily, because I do not think salaries up to that sum ought to be reduced at all. When we have determined what exemption the Senate will accord, then a plan such as the Senator suggests can be presented within half an hour. I think.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, what I have said was not in criticism of what the Senator has offered but simply as showing my own dilemma.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I believe there is a spirit of sacrifice abroad in this country. I believe the Government employees are willing to make some sacrifices. They certainly will when they appreciate the difficulties in obtaining the necessary money and the burdens and sacrifices that will be imposed upon the people of this country to obtain the necessary money to pay Government salaries and other expenses in order to balance the Budget and maintain the credit of the American dollar.

I have given on several occasions an illustration of what was experienced by some municipal employees who were opposing a reduction in wages when their attention was called to the other side of the picture. When I was at home in Massachusetts some weeks ago, some teachers in the public schools of one community called upon me to ask me to interest myself in preventing a reduction in their salaries of 10 per cent. I may say, incidentally, that the community to which I refer was in dreadful economic circumstances. The usual number employed in that community is 4,000, but now only about 800 are employed in that community. We can all understand the conditions that would follow such a depreciation in opportunities to work.

Mr. President, it was during this visit to Massachusetts that these ladies called upon me for my assistance. I said this to them, "Young ladies, do you realize, when you leave your homes in the morning and go to your schoolrooms, that you pass by home after home where not a person is working, where there is a tremendous struggle even to get the necessities of life; and do you realize that you are putting your hand out, figuratively, as you go by that home, and asking for some pennies each morning toward the payment of your salary, because these people have to pay your salaries through taxation? Do you not think you ought to be willing to make a little sacrifice and show those people that you have a little sympathy for them, and that considering their circumstances you are willing to make a little sacrifice for them?"

That committee said to me, "We have never thought of it in that light at all." They thought the money came out of the public treasury as water comes out of a pump on a farm. It never occurred to them that they were not showing a willingness to help reduce the burdens of the people who were in serious distress.

I do not hesitate to say that when the Federal employees appreciate the situation they will not want to be exempted from making some sacrifice for their distressed fellow citizens who are their employers. They will be willing to take a graduated cut, but they will not be content to take the same cut that we give ourselves. They will not be satisfied with that. I have confidence in their patriotism, their spirit of sacrifice, their willingness to receive reductions; but we ought to begin moderately and we ought to begin with limitations. We ought not to ask anybody drawing a salary under $2,500 to take a reduction of more than 5 per cent in the beginning.

I can not vote at this time, under present conditions, for any greater reduction than that. I will vote for a reduction of 10 per cent, and more, even 15 or 20 per cent, on salaries in excess of $7,500, but I can not vote to say to a letter carrier, who plods along with the hot summer's sun beating down on his bent back, trudging through the snowdrifts during the severe winters in New England, that I take $220 a year away from him in this time of emergency. It is too much. I will vote to take a hundred, but that is the

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator recall what was paid the teachers whose salaries were reduced, to whom the Senator has referred?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. One thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. BYRNES. And there was a reduction of 20 per cent? Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It was later changed to 10 per cent. Most of the reductions have been 10 per cent. In the city of Boston there have been no reductions of any kind in the salaries of the city employees. No employee of the State of Massachusetts has had his wages reduced, unless it has happened in the last few weeks.

I am for reductions. I do not want my position misunder-stood. Before we close this session of Congress, I want Government expenditures very substantially reduced, at least to such a sum that there will be waste and extravagance and useless bureaus eliminated. I am willing to join in reducing the salaries of the Government employees, but I am not going, and can not see my way clear to go, to the point of making a uniform reduction of 10 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator from Massachusetts. I agree with him that Senators realize the justness of a graduated scale, the same as we realize the justness of a graduated scale in the imposition of the income tax. It is not what one pays so much as what he has left after he has paid. The same applies to a reduction of salaries. I do not believe that we can afford to reduce the salaries of the lower-paid employees on the same percentage basis that we apply to ourselves and other high-salaried people.

I rose particularly, Mr. President, to crave the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], who seems to be at the present time out of the Chamber, and the attention of others who think as he does, who are laboring under the impression that when we adopt the pending amendment of the Senator from California we will have settled the proposition as to whether or not we want to give an exemption in salaries of $2,500.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, does the Senator think that it would not be in order, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from California were adopted, then to offer an amendment proposing a graduated scale of reductions?

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to explain that as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have some misgivings about it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it perfectly plain, and I think I can explain it if Senators will just give attention to the parliamentary situation.

A committee amendment is being considered, to which the Senator from California has offered an amendment. I see the Senator from Maryland has now come into the Chamber, and I may say to him that I am speaking particularly on the point he raised when he expressed some doubt as to the condition we would be in, depending on whether we voted the amendment of the Senator from California into the bill or voted it down.

We have before us a committee amendment. The committee amendment proposes to strike out and insert. It would strike out of the House text several lines-in fact, the entire provision about the reduction of salaries-and insert in lieu these words, "by 10 per cent of the amount thereof."

There are two propositions, one to strike out and one to insert. Under the rules of the Senate it is in order now to move to amend either side of that equation. We can amend the part sought to be stricken out or we can amend the part to be inserted; and when the two parts of the committee amendment are perfected, then we will vote as to which one we will agree to.

The amendment of the Senator from California is to add a proviso following that part of the committee amendment which is proposed to be inserted in lines 10 and 11; and whether that amendment be voted up or voted down, it will be still in order to move to amend that part of the committee amendment which seeks to strike out the House language. Now I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator-I am not certain whether or not he was in the Chamber when I offered the amendment-I want to vote for the amendment of the Senator from California if I can find it possible to do so. Although some Senators may look upon the amendment that I offered as more or less silly or ludicrous or out of place, I offered the amendment in the utmost good faith, with the knowledge that if my amendment could be added to that of the Senator from California, then we should have done what the country, the President, and Congress and everybody who is for economy desires done, namely, economize to the extent of about $250,000,000 or $300,000,000; and we could effect that economy without making any reductions whatever in salaries of $2,500 or less. While I did not press my amendment, I offered it in the utmost good faith and sincerity-

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Believing that if the amendment of the Senator from California were adopted it would afford a way out and would put everybody on firm ground.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's amendment would be in order whether this amendment were voted up or voted down.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think under the circumstances, if I may proceed, that perhaps I may vote for the amendment of the Senator from California in the hope that my amendment will be adopted. However, if my amendment shall not be adopted, I shall regret then having cast my vote for the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Maryland will still in that case have an opportunity to vote as between the part to be inserted and the part to be stricken out. That was the principal object, Mr. President, I had in taking the floor at this time. I do not care to discuss the merits of the proposition. Let me say that yesterday I offered an amendment to the House text. The Chair then decided that the amendment of the Senator from California was a substitute for my amendment, although it was offered following the language to be inserted, and so, because I did not want to confuse the two, I withdrew my amendment. I intend to resubmit my amendment after we shall have voted on the amendment of the Senator from California, regardless of whether the Senator's amendment is agreed to or not. My amendment will be the same amendment that I previously offered to the House text of the bill.

I should like to say, Mr. President, if the amendment that I shall offer, which, as the Senator will remember, provides for an exemption of salaries below $1,500 and then commences with a 5 per cent reduction on salaries from $1,500 to $2,500, and from that point up to $7,500, where the reduction reaches 25 per cent, shall not be adopted by the Senate, I intend to offer another amendment which will be just the same excepting that it will provide for an exemption of $1,000, the reductions running up, however, in progressive form until they reach 25 per cent on salaries of $7,500 or

Then, Mr. President, if that amendment shall be defeated. I intend to offer another one that will let the committee's suggestion stand as it now is, with a 10 per cent reduction applying to salaries up to $3,500, and then commencing the progressive increase and reaching a point where the reduction will be 25 per cent on the excess of salary above $7,500. That will raise more money than the committee amendment, if adopted, will raise.

The suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], I think, however-and he has talked with a number of Senators, myself included, about it-will perhaps be an improvement on any of these suggestions. I do not agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] that it is a difficult thing to draft such an amendment. I think I have the proper language in the amendment which I have already offered and which I intend to reoffer. There will be no "hump," as Senators have suggested, where higher salaries would be reduced to a point below lower salaries to which a less reduction was applied. One may take the table that the Senator from Michigan has in his possession, which he has shown to a great many of us, and which indicates plainly the result of exempting salaries up to $1,200 and then applying reductions commencing with 1 per cent and increasing 1 per cent on up until a 20 per cent reduction is

If the Senator will examine the language of the amendment which I offered yesterday or either one of the others which I have here and merely change the figures, the language will apply to his amendment exactly, and there will be no "hump" in it anywhere; in other words, it will be on the same basis as the income-tax schedules.

In the income tax we have certain exemptions. For an unmarried man under the proposed new revenue law the exemption is $1,000, so that an unmarried man with an income of $2,000 pays a tax on $1,000; he subtracts the exemption from his total income and that fixes the income on which the tax is paid. If his income goes on up into the higher brackets, the rate of taxation is higher; but he simply continues the mathematical calculation and applies the higher rate not on all the income but just on that part of the income to which the particular bracket applies. There is absolutely no departure whatever from the rule that we have applied in all the income taxes that we have levied since I have been in the Senate. So there is no difficulty.

The Senator from Michigan has a proposition that, of course, will be fairer than any of the others, because, while his proposal increases the reductions from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, from 10 to 20 per cent, and from 20 per cent to 25 per cent, it goes up 1 per cent at a time, so that the increase would be much more gradual, and of course more equitable and fairer. If such an amendment is offered and agreed to, I will not offer any of the amendments I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] as modified, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about an hour and a half, he said:

Mr. President, I will yield at this point if the Senator from Washington desires to move a recess.

[Mr. BLAINE'S speech is printed entire in the RECORD of June 4.]

Mr. JONES. I shall be very glad, if the Senator desires to conclude his talk, to go on. It is not 5 o'clock. I would prefer to have him go on.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no desire, as I told the Senator, to talk against time. That is not my purpose. Nor have I any desire to continue the debate merely for the purpose of extending the time so that others may work out some schedule. However, I desire to complete my remarks when the Senate convenes in the morning, if that privilege may be granted. I will endeavor at that time to be as brief as the subject will warrant.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator would prefer. then, not to go on to-day, but would like to continue tomorrow?

Mr. BLAINE. I would prefer that. Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess to-day it recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will not the Senator make that 11

Mr. JONES. I am very anxious to get through with this bill at least to-morrow. I think we should do so, and I want to give ample time for the consideration of the bill. I think we should proceed as we did on the tax bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not want to delay the Senator in the slightest degree, as far as that is concerned, in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I know that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it the purpose of the Senator that the Senate shall sit all day to-morrow?

Mr. JONES. I want to get this bill through if I possibly can. If we can get it through early, I shall be very glad.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say very frankly to the Senator that if we are to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow in order that we may adjourn at half past 1 or 2 o'clock, I do not think we should do that.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that I look to see the Senate in session all day to-morrow, judging by the way we have been making progress. That is what I really expect, and that is why I am asking for a recess until 10 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not object to that; but when we reach the hour of half past 1 or 2 o'clock, I expect to see most of the Members of the Senate looking longingly at the clock, and their thoughts far away, out on the green, and that there will be an adjournment of the Senate just about that time. It is because I am as certain of that as I am that I am standing here that I would rather have the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE-ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2325. An act for the relief of the United States Hammered Piston Ring Co.;

S. 2697. An act for the relief of Clarence G. Young;

S. 2698. An act for the relief of Herman Ingman; and

H.R. 4911. An act for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting nominations and a convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

POSTAL RATES

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I wrote a letter to the Postmaster General yesterday asking his opinion and advice regarding the raise in second-class postage rates voted in the revenue bill by the Senate and received his reply, copy of which went to the members of the conference committee yesterday afternoon while it was in session. The committee did not act on this letter and left the rates as the Senate voted them.

As the effect of the Senate amendment regarding these rates will be very far-reaching and, in my opinion, detrimental to the department and to the users of second-class mail, I want the statement of the Postmaster General in this matter made public. I also call attention to the statements I made on the floor of the Senate on this matter on May 27, 1932. I ask to have these letters placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 2, 1932.

Hon. WALTER F. BROWN.

Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. POSTMASTER GENERAL: As the question of secondclass rates is actively before the conferees of the Senate and the House in connection with the revenue bill, and as the matter may come to the floor of the Senate in the near future, I would like your personal opinion as to the advisability of raising these rates to the point as passed by the Senate.

I would also like to have your opinion on any other possible basis of rates that will be more equitable to the mail users and at the same time give proper protection to the Post Office Department. Will appreciate an early reply.

Very sincerely yours,

Office of the Postmaster General, Washington, D. C., June 2, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,

Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, United States Senate.

My Dear Mr. Charman: I am in receipt of your letter of June 2, 1932, with regard to the increase in the rates of postage on the advertising portions of publications entered as second-class matter which are subject to the zone rates of postage under existing law, as provided by the Senate amendment to H. R. 10236, section 1001, paragraph (b).

When I appeared before the Senate Committee on Finance I pointed out that the maximum rates on the advertising portions of second-class matter under the revenue act of 1917, which be-of second-class matter under the revenue act of 1917, which became effective on July 1, 1921, would, if they were effective now, increase our revenues by about $5,000,000, provided such increase did not put the newspapers and magazines out of the mails.

I also stated that a 10 per cent increase in such rates would be justified and that such increase would bring in additional revenue of about $2,500,000 on the basis of the 1931 mailings, assuming the same volume, and that the intermediate rates between the low rates fixed by the revenue act of 1017 and the rates fixed enue of about $2,500,000 on the basis of the 1931 mallings, assuming the same volume, and that the intermediate rates between the low rates fixed by the revenue act of 1917 and the rates fixed in the 1928 act, having in mind the rates which became effective on July 1, 1920, would bring about this result. To make the increase in rates more than 10 per cent would, it is believed, result in a falling off in volume and thus fail to produce any material increase in revenue. The bill, as passed by the Senate, makes the rates for the advertising portions of publications the same as those which became effective on July 1, 1921, the maximum rates under the revenue act of 1917. It is believed that the somewhat lower rates which became effective on July 1, 1920, slightly modified to eliminate some fractions, would produce a greater amount of additional revenue than the rates carried in the Senate amendment. I therefore recommend that the following rates on the advertising portions of second-class matter for the respective zones be substituted for those in the Senate amendment:

For the first and second zones, 1¾ cents.

For the fourth zone, 4 cents.

For the fifth zone, 5½ cents.

For the sixth zone, 5 cents.

For the seventh zone, 7 cents.

For the eighth zone, 8 cents.

These rates are the same as those which, under the revenue act of 1917 became effective on July 1, 1920, event that the rates

These rates are the same as those which, under the revenue act of 1917, became effective on July 1, 1920, except that the rates which became effective on that date were for the fifth and eighth zones 4¾ cents and 7¾ cents, respectively. It is estimated on the basis of the 1931 mailings and assuming no loss of volume that the suggested rates will bring in about $2,500,000 additional revenue.

revenue.

Very truly yours,

WALTER F. BROWN.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL, Washington, D. C., June 2, 1932.

HOD. TASKER L. ODDIE.

Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,

United States Senate. My Dear Mr. Chairman: The Howell amendment to the provision of H. R. 10236 to increase the rate of postage on first-class matter changes the year in line 10 on page 310 from 1934 to 1933. I have to suggest that 1934 be reinserted in the bill, so as to make the increase effective for the period of two years instead of only one.

When I appeared before the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance I urged that the increase of 1 cent an ounce or fraction thereof in the rate of postage on first-class matter be not applied to that for local delivery. I am still of the opinion that to increase the rate on local first-class mail would cause public utilities and other mailers to deliver their own letters. In view of this, may I suggest that if it is possible to do so, the further amendment be made to except drop letters and other first-class matter for local delivery from the increase in rate. This may be accomplished by changing the exceptions as stated within the parenthesis in paragraph (a), section 1001 of the bill, to read as follows: "(except postal cards and private mailing or post cards, and except drop letters and other first-class matter mailed for local delivery.)"

Such a change is considered advisable and should prevail in the absence of a point of order.

absence of a point of order. Very truly yours,

WALTER F. BROWN.

RECESS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, June 4, 1932, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 3, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit of God, again we wait in Thy presence. Quicken us with Thy vision and with a grateful acknowledgment of Thy merciful providence. Do Thou overrule all evil and everywhere make the wrath of man praise Thee. Father of light in our uncertainties and in our bitterest trials, give us wise insight, strong convictions, and the tenderest sympathies—equipping us for truer and larger service. Brace our whole moral and intellectual natures for the right; gird the loins of our minds that we may with resolute determination deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with Thee. Heavenly Father, regard in divine favor our Speaker and the entire membership of this Congress as they shape events and guide the currents of public action. Make our lives an inspiration and our memories a benediction. In a solemn covenant with Thee, may we keep the faith and complete the tasks for which we have been called. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4911. An act for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4780. An act to provide that advances under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act may be made for crop planting or crop cultivation, including summer following, during the year 1932.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes on a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Speaker, under date of May 24, when the Disney-O'Connor contest was being considered by the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] was granted leave to extend his remarks in the Record. His remarks as extended appear in the Record, page 11054. It was not my intention to endeavor to reopen the contest case between Mr. Granata and myself, but I can not let the falsehood charged by the gentleman from Wisconsin go unanswered in the Record. He charged, using his own language:

Of course, if I had followed the latest decision in the case of Kunz against Granata, I would have had no hesitation in recommending that the ballots be called for and recounted, because in that case a political appointee of the contestant was permitted to issue a subpens duces tecum and have the ballots in a room where many different people had their hands on them.

The record in the Kunz-Granata case does not bear out the gentleman's statement. Mr. Hoffman was not a political appointee of the contestant, and as notary public he had the authority under the United States statutes, and with the sanction of the decision of the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Re Loney, to issue the subpena duces tecum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNZ. When I get through. The gentleman is imputing in his language, when he states—

I think the leaders of this House should speed enactment of legislation which will prohibit a recount by a notary public henchman of a defeated candidate, as in the case of Kunz against Granata—that the notary public, Mr. Hoffman, was a political appointee of myself, whereas he was a Republican precinct captain.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire if the gentleman notified my colleague that he was going to call this matter up.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, where a Member of the House rises to a question of personal privilege, his time can not be limited.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois was limited at his own request to two minutes' time.

Mr. SABATH. I think he should have the time to which he is entitled under that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had two minutes, and then asked to extend his remarks in the RECORD, which was objected to by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SABATH. But, Mr. Speaker, is it necessary to limit

The SPEAKER. Whether it is necessary or not, the gentleman from Illinois asked for two minutes and limited his

JOINT CELEBRATION OF ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTION OF POLAND AND BICENTENNIAL OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by me at Bridgeport, Conn., at the anniversary of the Polish constitution and bicentennial celebration of George Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by me to the Polish societies at St. Michaels Church Hall in Bridgeport, Conn., on May 3, 1932, at the joint anniversary of the first constitution of Poland and the bicentennial of George Washington:

SPEECH OF HON. WILLIAM L. TIERNEY, OF CONNECTICUT, TO THE POLISH SOCIETIES, BRIDGEPORT, CONN., MAY 3, 1932

In the years 1919-20 the present Republic of Poland was created from former Polish territory within the three fallen empires of Europe, namely, Austria, Germany, and Russia. These lands of the old historic kingdom of Poland, dating back to the early centuries of Europe, were conquered and divided by the Hohenzollerns, the Romanoffs, and the Hapsburgs, and for most of 150 years were in the hands of these conquerors. The treaty of Versailles in 1920 gave birth to the Poland of to-day. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries Poland had an

During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries Poland had an ancient historic background, the protector of the countries of Europe against the inroads of the Turks, Tartars, and Russian barbarians of the east. It was known as one of the greatest of the European empires. On the 3d of May, 1791, as the result of three years' labor, the great parliament, so called, made up of the princes, peasants, and soldiers of Poland, gave to the world a constitution known as the constitution of the 3d of May.

Wherever sons and daughters of Poland gather they are celebrating to-day the anniversary of the founding of this great constitution, jointly in many places with the celebration of the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington. It is fitting that we should unite these two events, and more particularly because our own Constitution under George Washington was created about the same time. The spirit and ideals of one of these Constitutions are much the spirit and ideals of the other.

Though the Polish people received some of their inspiration

Though the Polish people received some of their inspiration from the French revolution, and ever have had a warm feeling of from the French revolution, and ever have had a warm feeling of friendship toward France, still it is to America she really turns for her greatest inspiration. The large number of Polish immigrants and travelers who came to American Colonies in the early days grew up with the settlements, and fought with us in our wars with the Indians, the French, and the English for the freedom of our country. These people brought to America the age-old love of liberty of their race. Many returned to Poland taking with them an even deeper love of liberty developed in the pure virgin soil of the colonists

While Edmund Burke, in the British Parliament, was thundering encouraging words to the little group of struggling people buried in our far-away shores and forests he added his efforts in a furin our far-away shores and forests he added his efforts in a further note of encouragement to the Polish Great Parliament, then writing the new constitution of that people.

The results of Patrick Henry's speeches defying King George and urging the cause of freedom here; the work of our own Thomas Jefferson in the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence, and our Constitution; the Federalist Papers written by Alexander Hamilton, containing much of the groundwork of our Constitution—all these were a part of the inspiration and standard of thought leading to the construction and foundation of that great document written in Warsaw and Cracow to establish the first real freedom of a European nation.

History tells that in the nineteenth century Poland suffered three of the great partitions at the hands of the neighboring nations. The first was in 1772, just before the American Revolution. The country was won back shortly after that time. One of the outstanding leaders among the people of that day was the young priest, Hugh Kollataj; he was the real father of the Polish constitution. His work was later supplemented by that of Chancellor John Zaymoyski, a name known to every Polish schoolboy in the land.

Among the many who fought valiantly to defend the historic Polish kingdom and seek its recovery from serfdom were two heroes—one a hero of Poland and one a hero of both America and Poland. I refer to the two great Pulaskis—father and son. History tells that the elder Pulaski, a man of distinction, patriotism, and courage, fell in battle and died a prisoner in a Russian prison. His son, your and our General Pulaski, was famous as an officer, engineer, soldier, and patriot under George Washington. He fought with brilliance and daring for his native land, a losing contest against overwhelming odds. His efforts established much of the foundation for the enthusiasm and tenacious spirit which brought about the work of the 3d of May. His defeat, though glorious, and his exile, brought him to America. He fought in the Battle of Brandywine. He is said to have expended $50,000 of his personal funds to equip and maintain the famous Polish legion which rendered such undying service to the struggling colonists during the darkest days of the War of the Revolution. He gave his best to this country; he was wounded at the Battle of Savannah and yielded up the supreme sacrifice of his life to the cause of the American people; a true hero of early America. Under this historic constitution of the 3d of May, 1791, the nation flourished in prosperity and in peace for a few years. This harmony and understanding between king and peasant and soldier created a peace-loving nation, the first example of its kind among the nations of the Continent. But again an overwhelming enemy. Among the many who fought valiantly to defend the historic created a peace-loving nation, the first example of its kind among the nations of the Continent. But again an overwhelming enemy, and their government was despoiled and nation dismembered and

At this lowest moment in their history the forlorn hope of the people brought forth from exile another noble character in Polish history, fated to adorn the pages of American history as well. I refer to Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko. After honorable defeat in his country's defense he was driven into exile, to Paris, where he met Benjamin Franklin, and through him came to the Colonies to offer his service in Washington's Army. It was typical of this man of high birth that when he offered his services to

of this man of high birth that when he offered his services to General Washington he made no demand for official rank in the army. He announced himself as a Polish gentleman seeking to aid the cause of our people in any capacity our people felt he could be useful. He turned out to be the outstanding engineer in the Continental Armies.

He participated in many battles with ability and success; he built the fortifications at West Point; he planned the Battle of Saratoga and the Forts at Bemis Heights. His work was invaluable to our people. Such was his standing that when the war had ended he ranked as the third highest officer in the Continental Army. In his last will and testament he named as executor his closest friend, Thomas Jefferson. He returned to his devastated Poland to again lead a forlorn effort to restore the land of his closest friend, Thomas Jefferson. He returned to his devastated Poland to again lead a forlorn effort to restore the land of his birth. He died in exile a great Pole, a great American.

No other country in history in the face of such suffering, persecution, and exhausting wars preserved such spirit of nationality as the Polish nation. The spirit started back in the eighth century. It carried with it through the years a love of their language, their Roman Catholic religion, their family customs, their folklore, and the greatest trait of all—their traditional love of freedom.

The armistice brought again into effect the active friendship of American Leader. President Woodrow

The armistice brought again into effect the active friendship of America through another American leader, President Woodrow Wilson. Wilson's aggressive and constructive and humane part in the peace of Versailles was the most outstanding factor in restoring to this nation a large part of its ancient boundaries, in re-creating much of old Poland into the new Republic of Poland.

The Polish corridor, which includes the Bay of Danzig and the German city of Danzig, was formerly part of Poland's kingdom. The Versailles treaty split Germany to allow Poland limited access to the sea—neither Germany nor Poland was then or is now satisfied. Recent years have seen the creation and growth of the remarkable Polish city and port of Gdynia on the Bay of Danzig. This city of many thousand people and fine docks wholly on Polish soil is even now an important Baltic port. The building of this city is an illustration of the spirit of progress, patriotism, and commerce that pervades this growing nation. Poland has a population of 30,000,000 souls. It is the fourth or fifth largest nation in Europe. in Europe in Europe.

The establishment of new Poland brought into being a modern constitution built in the spirit of the 3d of May constitution and closely resembling the Constitution of the United States. Poland has its President; its ministers; its sejm and its Senate, two branches of legislature, corresponding to our House of Representatives and Senate; trial by jury; equal rights to men and women to vote and enjoy the privileges of personal and real property rights such as are enjoyed in our own land.

Last year this country renewed its devotion and expression of regard for Poland by raising the status of its chief diplomatic officer to rank of ambassador, a rank only a few nations enjoy.

Poland has always carried through the centuries of adversity an indivisible, imperishable national spirit, preserving its union at least in custom and ideal into the life and progress of Europe.

Prof. Oswald Balzer, probably Poland's foremost historian of to-day, says:

"Kosciusko's insurrection, together with the glorious constitution of the 3d of May, upon which it sets its seal of action, truly shows the crime of Poland's last partition was committed too late. The morning star of the new democratic Polish Republic of to-day shines in the twilight of the old Polish Kingdom, and the hundred shines in the twilight of the old Polish Kingdom, and the hundred years or more of captivity are not a night of utter extinction, but the slow dawn of a new day."

Niemcewicz, the beloved Polish patriotic historian-biographer of Kosculsko, was also the biographer of George Washington. The young folks of Polish birth or extraction, whether in America or Poland, when they study of the glory of Casmir the great and John Sobieski, read of Gen. Thaddeus Kosclusko and Gen. George Poland, when they study of the glory of Casmir the great and John Sobieski, read of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko and Gen. George Washington as inseparable heroes of Poland and America.

The folk songs of Mieszko, the first Polish King to embrace Christianity for himself and the nation, and the tales of Bolsaw, who was the first great warrior King, are dear to the heart. So, also, the delightful folklore story of Piest, the peasant King, who won his crown after entertaining two hungry strangers, who turned out to be angels from heaven carrying to him the golden crown of sovereignty of his people.

I like to read of Waladislaw, who died way back in the fourteenth century, whose son, Casmir the Great, overwhelmed the Teuton knights, and who for 37 years labored to consolidate the Polish people. He established the beginning of cities of marble and places of industry where swamps and waste land formerly existed. I like to read of how he died childless, and how the famed St. Hedwig succeeded him and established through marriage to one of the Lithuanian race one Jagellon, a new dynasty known as the Jagelion dynasty. This dynasty existed through many generations of Polish nobility who ruled and fought as the great barrier nation of eastern Europe.

I like to read that part of Polish history wherein Casmir the Just, 70 years before Columbus discovered America, enacted into the law of that land the Polish version of our habeas corpus act called the "Czerwinsk privelege," which provided that no man shall be imprisoned unless condemned and tried by law. I also like the old-time Polish maxim, which translated into English says, "Every man's home is his castle." A maxim likely originating before Anglo-Saxon civilization.

Adam Mickiewicz, the poet, who lived shortly after the great nating before Anglo-Saxon civilization.

Adam Mickiewicz, the poet, who lived shortly after the great parliament and constitution of the third of May, wrote the Iliad of Poland's great deeds, of her trials and sorrows and the heroes of her people, much as did the great Irish poet, Thomas Moore, whose verses told of another nation's oppression.

I like to look back upon the old monk, Copernicus of Poland, as the discoverer of the solar system, which revolutionized science and astronomy and made possible great advancements of the science of to-day.

I like to read in history of Madam Curie, of Poland, who, with her French husband, discovered radium, by means of which much of the terrible scourge of cancer is eliminated from the human Reflecting to-day the days when the great writers and singers and artists of Italy and Poland collaborated and were known as the leaders of Europe in their work is the daughter of the city of Lemberg, Mme. Marcella Sembrich; she has sung her way around the world, famous for her Wagnerian rôles; her marvelous voice aided so materially the modern financial and patriotic efforts of her countrymen.

Who in America has not been fascinated with the great novel Quo Vadis and other writings of the Polish novelist Sienkiewicz, who subsequently gave up all his fortune to his country and died in destitution and want in foreign land.

I like to read of General Pilsudski, a fine figure in Polish struggles and successes since her freedom; also of their present leader and high able diplomat, President Ignace Mosciciki.

As I make this rather limited effort to do justice to this event as the guest of the good Franciscan Father Charles, of St. Michaels, I would be amiss if I failed to give a word of praise to two outstanding figures in the making of the new Poland. May I refer to our honored chairman, Dr. B. L. Smykowskiego, and the "magnificent maestro," Ignace Jan Paderewski—two old, fast friends; two men honored by President Wilson as chosen representatives of Poland, and who, as able diplomats, accomplished mighty results. I like to think of our chairman as the cultured, finished American physician of international note as a heart specialist that he is physician of international note as a heart specialist that he is, and of Paderewski, the great pianist interpreter of Chopin, the most famous of his day, joining hands in their devotion to Poland to sacrifice their fortunes and professions in their mighty effective diplomatic and patriotic efforts for that nation.

Yes, Poland and America have a great deal in common. res, Poland and America have a great deal in common. Poland stands with America, two of the greatest liberty-loving countries of the world. We do fittingly celebrate the constitution of the 3d of May and the Constitution of our country in this bicentennial of George Washington, for they spell a freedom of both lands; they write enduring pages of history, to be carried down through the ages, to be cherished in the annals of freedom.

REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the tax bill met yesterday morning at 9.30 o'clock and were in practically continuous session until about a quarter to 11 last night, when they reached a complete agreement. I do not think ever in the history of the country has a bill of that magnitude been as speedily adjusted by the conferees, so far as their province was concerned, as was the case in the present bill. We all felt, and I am sure all feel, that the most important legislation pending before this Congress, so far as the country is concerned, is the passage of a tax bill that will balance the Budget, to restore and maintain the solvency and credit of the United States and the American dollar. That thought was most instrumental in making your conferees give and take and use speed in trying to reach an agreement, for the purpose of speedily getting on the statute books a tax bill that will balance the Budget. This report, if adopted by the House and the Senate, will balance the Budget, and the Secretary of the Treasury so

Under the rules I can not call up this bill to-day without unanimous consent because the rules of the House provide that it must be printed in the RECORD and go over for a day. There is another reason we can not do that. The staff worked until about 5 o'clock this morning trying to whip into shape the conference report, and have worked all the morning. The statement that must accompany the conference report, explanatory of it, has not yet been prepared. It has not been prepared because it was physically impossible to do it. I dislike to ask the House to stay in session to-morrow, because I know that all of us are very tired and we had looked forward to a day of rest, but, gentlemen, it is indefensible in an emergency of this kind and the need for speedy action on the conference report not to dispose of this conference report and we should not adjourn to-morrow until it has been disposed of. It is my intention to call up this conference report to-morrow. The conference report is not yet printed; it has just been filed. I have requested to have the text of the bill as agreed to by the conferees printed, and it will probably be available to-morrow morning so that the membership of the House and the country will have an opportunity to see it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the importance of everything the gentleman has said. As far as this side of the House is concerned, we are very anxious to cooperate in making the bill into law at the earliest possible moment, and, as far as we are concerned, we will cooperate in meeting earlier tomorrow in order to facilitate action on this important measure. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. I thank my friend, and I am sure I speak for my side of the House when I say that they are 100 per cent in favor of disposing of the bill to-morrow. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it possible for the gentleman to have a copy of this bill delivered to each Member of the House in the morning? Mr. CRISP. No; I shall not undertake to do that. No one has any conception of what I have gone through in this Congress. I do not think that the bill can be printed to-morrow. but I am doing all I can to have it printed, so that it will be in the Ways and Means Committee room, and the membership can get a copy of it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The thought I had in mind was this: If a request be made of the Public Printer I believe he would be glad to deliver to the House post office a sufficient number of copies so that the mail carrier could deliver to each Member's office a copy.

Mr. CRISP. I do not think it is very burdensome on a Member to send his secretary to the Committee on Ways and Means committee room in the House Office Building, where there will be a committee print.

Mr. BLANTON. But if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent right now that the Public Printer deliver a copy of the bill to-morrow with the RECORD to our offices, it will be | done without any further ado about it. Why not ask that by unanimous consent?

Mr. CRISP. Oh, well, if gentlemen have to be humored, I shall do so. I am about through with what I wanted to say. I wanted to make this preliminary statement before I presented two requests for unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, the purpose being to dispose of this bill, so that there can be a speedy adjournment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight to-night to file the statement to accompany the conference report on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I will state, addressing my remarks to the Public Printer, that I am sure the House will appreciate it if the Public Printer will take all steps necessary to have a copy of this bill put in the post office for each Member to-morrow morning. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. HOWARD. It has been currently rumored about the building this morning that the President of the United States would be here to address the House to-morrow. Can the gentleman give us the approximate time when he will be here?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the gentleman to yield, but I want to know what request the gentleman is

Mr. HOWARD. It was a very pertinent question, and I think a courteous and kindly question, addressed to the gentleman from Georgia, asking him if he had information, if he would kindly give us some information regarding the rumor about the building that the President is to speak to our House to-morrow, and at what hour, so that we might

Mr. CRISP. Answering the gentleman from Nebraska, his statement is the first intimation I have ever heard of such a matter. [Laughter and applause.] If there is any rumor going around-and I know my friend has heard such rumor or he would not have made the statement-I have never heard of it. I have no knowledge whatever on the subject.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned with regret that the conferees on the revenue bill have put back in the bill the tax on bank checks which the House struck out before sending it to the Senate. It is both a surprise and a disappointment to all friends of rural banking, as it was not believed the obnoxious provision would again be considered after its decisive defeat in the House.

It is the most objectionable of all the nuisance taxes imposed during the war. Banking facilities are the lifeblood of the business community. They can not be regarded as either a nuisance or a luxury, and no deadlier blow could be struck at the prosperity of a town than to tax its banks out of existence.

It is only one more step in the program which the Government has been directing against the banks. The Government is to-day supplying the keenest competition with which the average bank has to deal. The postal savings being installed in the post offices of the country are advertising for business through every known channel of publicity and are drawing funds from the country banks into the central depositories at an alarming rate. On March 1, 1931, postal savings in the United States totaled $175,000,000. On December 1, 1931, they had increased to $550,000,000, an increase of over 200 per cent in nine months.

In addition to this draft on local funds, the campaigns of the Government to promote the sale of bonds has drawn millions from the banks and increased Treasury deposits at the expense of the credit reserves of every community in the Nation. And the officially sponsored drives for the sales of automobiles and kindred diversions of rural credit have added further to the difficulties of country banking.

In fact, under Government influences of the last few years the character of banking has completely changed. Realestate loans have been transferred. Many lines of loans have been discontinued altogether on official recommendation. Circumscribed by Government dictation, the banks no longer supply local credit as formerly.

Under such handicaps the mortality among country banks has been unprecedented. Only the strongest have survived. And now, just as the survivors are beginning to adjust themselves to changed conditions and confidence is being restored and hoarded funds are beginning to flow back into the channels of trade, the Government, through the new revenue bill, proposes to place an added burden on them by taxing checks.

It will in many instances prove the straw that breaks the camel's back, and will undoubtedly close banks in every part of the country. Many small depositors will not put money in the bank if they must pay to get it out. It will result in the immediate withdrawal of funds and will encourage renewed hoarding. Millions of dollars are now in hiding or being carried around in the pockets of citizens of the United States, and this tax on checks will furnish timid patrons an excuse for withdrawal of accounts and will decrease money in circulation by hundreds of millions of dollars. It will appreciably decrease the reservoirs of credit throughout the

A dollar in the bank will support $10 of purchasing power in the community, but a dollar in the pocket is only a dollar. No tax could be suggested which will have a more deleterious effect on business. At a time when every effort is being made to overcome the effects of the depression it will insure continuation of the deflation and retard business recovery

Let us hope that the conferees will not sign the death warrant of the home-town bank by insisting on the adoption of the conference report without a separate vote on this important item of the bill.

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS BILL

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, there are only a few days left in which to get the bonus bill considered by the House. This rule does not require the Members to vote for the particular bill that is asked to be brought out. It simply gives an opportunity to have the bill presented to the House. This House has been liberal with every group of men that has asked for legislation. We have given every group in this House ample opportunity to present their legislation. It is not a question of whether you favor the bill, but whether you will be fair enough to give us an opportunity to have this bill, or any other plan of bill, presented to the House?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. We need 26 names on this petition in order to get a vote on the 13th of June. As the gentleman so well said, any Member who is in favor of changing the present law in any way, interest rates or anything else, should sign this petition. They do not have to vote for the Patman bill. It can be amended on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bicentennial celebration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address, delivered by me at state-wide George Washington bicentennial celebration held at Temple Hill, New York, on Saturday afternoon, May 28, 1932:

ADDRESS OF HON, HAMILTON FISH, JR.

It is right and fitting that the George Washington bicentennial Celebration should be held at Temple Hill, hallowed by the presence during the Revolutionary War of the Commander in Chief and the Continental Army and made sacred by the events that took place here.

This site should indeed be a national shrine, for it was here at Temple Hill, New Windsor, that George Washington delivered the first law and order speech after victory had been secured before a convention of officers presided over by General Gates and prevented his officers, by his wise advice and sagacious leadership, from open rebellion against Congress and the existing Government. Within sight of this spot stood row on row of the stone huts used during the last three winters by the Continental Army for winter

The famous headquarters of General Knox, still standing, is only a short way off. Valley Forge is better known in history, but Washington's army only spent one winter there and Morristown, because it has been better advertised, is still considered by the American public to have been the main winter headquarters, which Newburgh and New Windsor constituted the main camping grounds of the Revolutionary troops and was much more important, owing to the far-reaching events that occurred there, than at Valley Forge or Morristown combined.

than at Valley Forge or Morristown combined.

It is fair and proper that on this occasion we should at least try to remedy the historical injustice that has been committed against the State of New York and more particularly against Newburgh, New Windsor, and this section of the Hudson River known as the Highlands by the distinguished historians of the Revolutionary War, most of whom hailed, unfortunately, from New England and wrote from the point of view of Bunker Hill,

New England and wrote from the point of view of Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord, and the Boston Tea Party.

The decisive part played by New York State was almost completely overlooked, and the fact that the main strategy of the British, who had their headquarters at New York City for seven years, was to secure the forts in the Highlands and gain control of the Hudson River, thereby connecting up with the loyal forces in Canada and cutting the communication between the New England States and the Central and Southern States, was ignored.

It was likewise the main strategy of Washington during the

It was likewise the main strategy of Washington during the greater part of the war to maintain the control of the Hudson by defending at all costs the forts in the Highlands. West Point, with its series of fortifications, which were erected in the early part of 1778 and dominated the Hudson River, was never attacked part of 1778 and dominated the Hudson River, was never attacked because of its great strength.

Of the 308 battles, large and small, in the Revolutionary War, 92 were fought in New York State, including the decisive Battle of Saratoga. George Washington spent over 1,000 days during the war within a radius of 25 miles of this very spot. George Clinton, who was our first governor and served for 20 years as the chief executive of New York State, was born within a few miles from here, as was his brother, James Clinton.

It is well to remember on anniversaries of this nature that, in spite of the oblivion cast upon the participation of New York State in the Revolutionary War, we gave to the cause of liberty and independence the Clintons, Livingstons, Gouverneur and Lewis Morris, Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, and Generals McDougal, Scott, Montgomery, and Herkimer, of which the two latter were killed in battle.

killed in battle.

Former Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, in his history of the American Revolution, does not even refer to Newburgh and New Windsor, where two of the most vital events in the early history of our country took place. It was from his headquarters at Newburgh, on May 22, 1782, that General Washington wrote his famous letter of rebuke to Colonel Nichola and a group of fellow officers who virtually offered him a crown, and thereby determined once and for all the establishment of our republican form of government.

The following is a quotation from Washington's letter to Colonel

The following is a quotation from Washington's letter to Colonel Nichola: "Let me conjure you, then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind and never communicate as from yourself or anyone else a sentiment of like nature."

For some reason that I do not understand efforts have been made to make it appear that Temple Hill was connected with this important episode in the formation of the Republic. Such is not the case nor is there any need to attempt to add new laurals to the case, nor is there any need to attempt to add new laurels to this sacred spot, which was the camping ground of the Revolution and made even more famous by the remarkable address of General Washington to his officers in the new building or temple on this

After the Battle of Yorktown there was much dissatisfaction mong many of the officers, who had not received their pay for a among many of the officers, who had not received their pay for a long time, and the resentment against the Congress for giving nothing but empty promises to the officers who were about to be discharged resulted in a conspiracy among them to resort to force and violence. Anonymous addresses were circulated and threats made and meetings arranged. The Commander in Chief, when he was notified of the situation, anticipated the conspirators by calling all the officers of the Army who were present to meet him at the "new building" on March 15, 1783. It was on that memorable occasion that, pausing for a moment in the reading of his prepared manuscript, he drew out his spectacles, carefully wiped and adjusted them, and remarked simply, "These eyes, my friends, have grown dim and these locks white in the service, yet I have never doubted the justice of my country." never doubted the justice of my country."

never doubted the justice of my country."

He then went on to deliver as sublime a speech as there is in American history, and by his common sense and moderation to completely win over his officers to a course of action based upon reason and military discipline. I have quoted at some length from this speech, first, because it was delivered on this site, and, secondly, because it shows the greatness of Washington's character, and, thirdly, because it determined that these United States were not to become a military autocracy. Amid the most profound attention Washington commenced reading:

"Gentlemen, by an approximate summons an attempt has been

"Gentlemen, by an anonymous summons an attempt has been made to convene you together. How inconsistent with rules of propriety, how unmilitary, how subversive of all order and discipline; let the good sense of the Army decide."

propriety, how diffilitary, how subtrists of an order and cipline; let the good sense of the Army decide."

The Commander in Chief then pointed out the dreadful consequences of following the advice of the anonymous writer, subsequently ascertained to be Major Armstrong (afterwards Secretary of War):

"Either to draw their swords against their country or retire, if war continues, from the defense of all they hold dear."

And concluded with the following forcible peroration:

"I conjure you, in the name of our common country, as you value your own sacred honor, as you respect the rights of humanity, to express your utmost horror and detestation of the man who wishes, under any specious pretenses, to overturn the liberties of your country and who wickedly attempts to open the floodgates of civil discord and deluge our rising empire in blood."

The convention resolved unanimously, among other things, that the Army have unshaken confidence in Congress and view with abhorrence and reject with disdain the infamous proposition contained in a late anonymous address to officers of the Army.

abhoreence and reject with disdain the infamous proposition contained in a late anonymous address to officers of the Army.

This address of Washington, upholding military discipline and our existing civil government, was not only the first law and order speech which has become so common to-day but had a far-reaching effect on maintaining intact the fruits of victory already won after seven long years of deprivations and warfare.

It is well to remember in this connection that General Washing-It is well to remember in this connection that General Washington wrote his well-known letter of congratulation and advice to the governors of the thirteen States from his Newburgh head-quarters on June 8, 1783, in which, among other suggestions, he advocated the building up of a citizens' army or militia. The following is an extract from his letter of advice:

"The militia of this country must be considered as the palladium of our security and the first effectual resort in case of hostility; it is essential, therefore, that the same system should pervade the whole, that the formation and discipline of the militia of the continent should be absolutely uniform; and the same of the continent should be absolutely uniform; and the same species of arms, accounterments, and military apparatus should be introduced in every part of the United States. No one who has not learned it from experience can conceive the difficulty, expense, and confusion which result from a contrary system or the vague arrangements which have hitherto prevailed."

This is practically our system of national defense to-day, in which the National Guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and citizens' military training camps constitute a trained reserve for our small and efficient Regular Army. It is truly a democratic, American system of national defense, and, besides, is voluntary and the least costly.

I congratulate the people of this district on having in their midst at West Point the greatest and most efficient military academy not only in the United States but throughout the world midst at West Point the greatest and most efficient military academy not only in the United States but throughout the world. We are proud of it and its glorious traditions, and we appreciate the participation of the Cadet Corps and its distinguished superintendent, Maj. Gen. William D. Connor, in these ceremonies.

The people of Newburgh and vicinity are also proud of the splendid record of the One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment of Field Artillery, largely officered by World War veterans who served with valor and distinction on the battlefields of France.

We are proud of that fine military academy at Corpoyell, the

We are proud of that fine military academy at Cornwall, the best institution of its kind in the country, and we are grateful to all the fraternal, civic, veteran, and patriotic groups who have participated in these ceremonies and made this celebration the largest and most important held in this section of the State of New York for the past 50 years.

I am hopeful, when more prosperous times return, that the Congress will consider favorably the plan to erect a small national park at Temple Hill, including the sites of the old winter quarters of our Revolutionary soldiers. This whole section is truly the cradle of the Republic, and we would be falling in our duty to the memories of those who served here for so many years in defense of our country at its birth if we did not do our share to keep alive their sacrifices in order that we might be a free and independent people.

The Declaration of Independence, written by the immortal Thomas Jefferson, was a mere scrap of paper until, through the courage, leadership, determination, and faith of George Washington, it was translated into a political actuality—the Government of the United States.

More than anything else to-day, in solving our acute economic and political problems, is the need of the same high degree of courage, leadership, determination, and faith as shown by George Washington throughout seven long years of the Revolutionary War and here at Temple Hill, when by a few words he quelled a mutiny among his officers.

among his officers.

We are, it is true, in the midst of a serious economic crisis, but there can be no question but that the American people will emerge from this depression as long as they and their leaders adhere to those same principles that guided George Washington to final victory during the Revolutionary War.

Our republican form of government is still the hope and aspirations of the structure was see of marking throughout the world.

Our republican form of government is still the hope and aspiration of the struggling masses of mankind throughout the world, whether they be in Italy, Russia, China, or Japan.

Let us on this two hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Father of our Country rededicate ourselves to the proposition that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth.

Let us reaffirm our belief in our republican form of government, the transfer of the people shall not perish from the country forcest, where the proposals and here.

Let us reamrm our benef in our republican form of government, because it is the soundest, fairest, wisest, most honorable, and best ever devised by the mind of man.

Let us cherish it and defend it against all of its enemies, both from without and from within, and serve notice upon all the socialists, plnk intellectuals, communists, and fascists, and those advocating some temporary foreign dictatorship that we have faith in America and believe that our republican form of government is still the best on earth.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 12443, Rept. No. 1491) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time, and together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. SIMMONS reserved all points of order on the bill.

DELAWARE RIVER JOINT COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. The Chair has had communications from the Governor of Pennsylvania and the Governor of New Jersey calling his attention to the proposed legislation with reference to a bridge in which each of the States is interested. The Chair understands the bill has been unanimously reported by the committee having it in charge, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Committee on Rules, as the Chair understands, was unanimous in giving a rule for the consideration of the bill.

In view of the telegrams received from the two governors mentioned, the Chair thinks he is justified in asking unanimous consent at this time for the present consideration of

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think in justice to the facts. I ought to state that the rule does not come from the Rules Committee unanimously. There was some opposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is glad to be corrected.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Rules Committee I opposed the rule.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what bill that is?

The SPEAKER. It is a bridge bill, Senate Joint Resolution 41, concerning a bridge over the Delaware River.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama what charge this makes on the Treasury? The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can object if he desires. Mr. RANSLEY. If it is a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is the purpose to call up the deficiency appropriation bill immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the resolution, S. J. Res. 41?

Mr. BYRNS. That is what I expected and hoped to do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked that question with the idea of disposing of the bridge bill as early as possible, so that there may be as much time as possible to consider the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. That is my hope.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, it is not the purpose to call the Private Calendar to-day?

The SPEAKER. No; it is not. Matters of emergency are before the House, and the Chair has taken the responsibility of disposing of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 241) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 241

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 41, a joint resolution granting consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the Common-wealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof. After general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except are motion to recommit one motion to recommit.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Inasmuch as the ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules has indicated he may desire a little time, I shall be pleased to yield time to him.

Mr. PURNELL. I would like for the gentleman to yield me the usual 30 minutes. I shall use as little of it as

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement in reference to the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules, of which at least one Member reserved the right to oppose the rule and the resolution providing for the consideration of the joint resolution to grant the consent of Congress for the ratification of an agreement between the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof.

After its passage by the Senate the joint resolution was referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and was reported out by that committee, I understand, by practically a unanimous vote.

Messages from the Governors of Pennsylvania and New Jersey represented to the Committee on Rules that the passage of the resolution is a matter of emergency.

The compact was unanimously adopted by the Legislatures of both the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and it only requires the adoption of this resolution giving the consent of Congress under the Constitution for the beginning of the effective operation of this compact.

The committee was further advised that the State of New Jersey had made a contingent appropriation of some six and one-half millions of dollars to be used for the destitute unemployed in the State to be derived from the division of funds arising from the operation of this bridge if this compact is ratified.

Inasmuch as it came to the committee by unanimous request of the authorities of both the States involved, of course, there is nothing left for us to do except to recommend it to your consideration.

The rule provides for one hour of general debate, after ! which the resolution would be subject to amendment under the 5-minute rule. Of course, the compact itself would

That is all I desire to say with reference to the resolution. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is this resolution identical with the one presented by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON 12

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is the resolution which was prepared and presented by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana such time as he may desire.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wolverton].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the rule has been well stated by Mr. BANKHEAD, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules. The resolution, if adopted, will bring before the House for consideration Senate Joint Resolution 41, introduced by Senator Kean, of New Jersey, which is identical with House Joint Resolution 101, introduced by me on December 8 last. The purpose of these resolutions is to give congressional consent to a compact or agreement entered into between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof.

The subject matter of the agreement has had the legislative approval of the legislatures of the two States. It was passed unanimously by both houses of the Pennsylvania Legislature in June of 1931. It also was passed unanimously by both the house and senate of New Jersey. The bill as passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature was approved by Governor Pinchot on or about June 13, 1931, and the bill passed by the New Jersey Legislature received the approval of Gov. Morgan F. Larson, of New Jersey, on or about June 20, 1931.

After the passage of the legislation by the two States and the approval given by the governors of both, a compact or agreement was entered into by representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, and which said compact or agreement embodied the terms of the legislation previously approved by both States.

The agreement was signed, executed, and delivered by the duly authorized representatives of the two States on June 30, 1931. Under the terms of the agreement it became operative the following day, July 1, 1931; and thereupon the Delaware River Joint Commission, as provided for under the terms of the legislation and the agreement entered into as a result thereof, came into existence, composed of eight commissioners representing the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and eight representing the State of New Jersey. This joint commission has been since the 1st day of July, 1931, and is now engaged in performing the duties required of it by the agreement entered into.

The purpose that actuated the two States in coming to a mutual understanding and agreement as embodied in the compact before the House is best stated in the language of the agreement appearing on pages 2 and 3 of Senate Joint Resolution 41, reading as follows:

Whereas both States have mutual interests in the development of the Delaware River from Philadelphia and Camden to the sea, of the Delaware River from Financipina and Canden to the sea, and particularly in developing the facilities and promoting the more extensive use of the ports of Philadelphia and Camden by coastwise, intercoastal, and foreign vessels; and Whereas it is highly desirable that there be a single agency of whereas it is making desirable that there he a single agency of both States empowered to further the aforesaid interests of both States: Now, therefore,

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey do hereby solemnly covenant and agree each with the other.

Then follows the recital of the creation of a body corporate to be known as the Delaware River Joint Commission. powers conferred upon such commission are as follows:

First. The operation and maintenance of the bridge owned jointly by the two States and the city of Philadelphia, as its interests may appear, across the Delaware River between the city of Philadelphia in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the city of Camden in the State of New Jersey, including its approaches, and the making of additions and improvements thereto.

Second. The effectuation, establishment, construction, operation, and maintenance of railroad or other facilities for the transportation of passengers across the said bridge, including extensions thereof to the vicinity of Race Street and Eighth Street in the city of Philadelphia, and to the vicinity of Carman Street and Haddon Avenue in the city of Camden.

Third. The investigation of the necessity for additional means of communication between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the vicinity of Philadelphia and the State of New Jersey opposite thereto, and between the ports of Philadelphia and Camden and the sea, and making of such studies, surveys, and estimates as may be necessary to determine the feasibility and cost of any such additional means of communication, whether the same be by bridge, tunnel, canal, or otherwise.

Fourth. Cooperation with all other bodies interested or concerned with or affected by the promotion, development, or use of the Delaware River.

Fifth. The procurement from the Government of the United States of any consents which may be requisite to enable any project within its powers to be carried forward.

Sixth. The promotion of the Delaware River as a highway of commerce between Philadelphia and Camden and Seventh. The promotion of increased commerce on the Delaware River, both freight and passenger, and, for this purpose, the publication of such literature and the adoption of such means as may be deemed appropriate.

Eighth. To study and make recommendations to the proper authorities for the improvement of terminal, lighterage, wharfage, warehouse, and other facilities necessary for the promotion of commerce on the Delaware River.

Ninth. Institution, through the attorneys general of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, of or intervention in any litigation involving rates, preferences, rebates, or other matters vital to the interests of the ports of the Delaware River.

Tenth. Any other functions which may be of mutual benefit to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, in so far as concerns the promotion and development of the ports of Philadelphia and of Camden, and the use by commercial vessels of their facilities.

Under the provisions of the agreement the Delaware River Joint Commission is authorized to issue bonds to repay to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the city of Philadelphia, and the State of New Jersey the amount remaining due to each of them on account of moneys advanced for the construction of the present bridge. This provision will make possible the repayment to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of approximately $10,000,000, to the city of Philadelphia approximately $10,000,000, and to the State of New Jersey $13,500,000. Furthermore, said commission is authorized to issue bonds to cover the construction cost of a high-speed system of transportation over said bridge and connecting with the subway system now being constructed by the city of Philadelphia and a subway system to be built in a portion of the city of Camden. This will entail approximately an expenditure of $10,000,000.

Congressional approval is desired at this time because of a situation that has developed through the inability to dispose of the bonds unless and until there has been congressional approval of the compact entered into between the two States.

It was not generally understood that any additional congressional approval would be necessary beyond that previously given, when Congress gave its approval in 1921 to the building of the Delaware River Bridge; but legal advisers to financial interests claim that, by reason of the constitutional provision requiring congressional approval to any compact or agreement entered into between States, such approval is necessary for the present compact, because its terms are in some particulars different than granted by the original congressional act of approval. While other eminent legal authorities deny for additional congressional approval, yet to grant such approval will undoubtedly make the bonds more readily salable.

There is also an emergency existing in the State of New Jersey that makes congressional action at this time highly desirable and necessary. The emergency to which I refer grows out of the fact, as outlined in a telegram to me from Governor Moore, of New Jersey, that it will be necessary to raise additional funds before July 1 next to give relief to the unemployed of the State. At the present time there are no funds available, and the Legislature of New Jersey is seeking new forms of taxation to raise the revenue to provide the necessary relief funds. If congressional approval is given to the compact or agreement between the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, it will thereby enable the bonds to be issued by the Delaware River Joint Commission and the payment made to New Jersey, from which the relief funds will be available and, in my judgment, will thereby remove the immediate necessity of an additional tax burden upon the people of our State.

I also wish to call to the attention of the House that the passage of this resolution at this time will also make it possible for the commission to issue bonds that will enable the commission to proceed immediately with the construction of the high-speed transportation system already planned by the two States. As the amount will approximate $10,000,000, it will necessarily provide work for great numbers of draftsmen, engineers, and skilled and unskilled labor over a period of many months. It will, therefore, be seen that if congressional approval is given to the resolution it will be a means of providing real, genuine relief to the unemployed of the State of New Jersey and without any expense whatsoever to the Federal Government.

I wish also to call to the attention of the House the fact that no inherent rights of the United States are infringed upon or released under the terms of this resolution. In fact, every right now existing is preserved, and the resolution has the approval of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Department of Agriculture. It has passed the Senate of the United States unanimously. It has had the unanimous approval of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Rules Committee of the House, recognizing the importance of the legislation and the emergency existing, has granted the rule which is now under consideration and which I sincerely hope will be adopted forthwith by the House.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. COX. How soon will the $6,500,000 be available? At once, will it not?

Mr. WOLVERTON. We assume it will be available almost immediately; certainly as soon as the legal requirements for the advertising and issuing of the bonds can be complied with. It has been represented that lack of congressional approval is all that withholds action by financial interests providing the money.

Mr. COX. In other words, your legislature has already taken action in anticipation of favorable action upon the part of Congress?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I so understand. Furthermore, our legislature is now in session and, I am advised, is ready and willing to do whatever may be necessary to make the moneys available at the earliest possible day.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Will this measure create any charge at all against the Treasury?

Mr. WOLVERTON. No. This is the first relief measure that has come before this Congress that will not mean any expense to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it in any way infringe upon the rights of the United States Government?

Mr. WOLVERTON. It does not.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why not let us pass the resolution without any further debate?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I am in accord with the view of the gentleman from Texas, who sees the point very clearly.

Mr. RANSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. With pleasure.

Mr. RANSLEY. I understood the gentleman to state that the money would be available at once. Surely the bonds must find a market. Philadelphia is about to attempt to sell $20,000,000 worth of bonds, and they will undoubtedly conflict one with the other, so that the State of New Jersey could not receive the money at once.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The gentleman is mistaken, for this reason: Philadelphia is to-day offering the $20,000,000 worth of bonds to which he has referred in his question. Therefore that issue will be out of the way before the bonds to be issued by the commission are offered for sale.

In conclusion, as my time has expired, I do wish to urge with all sincerity favorable action by the House on this important resolution that will mean so much to the future welfare of the people of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution. I am in favor of any legislation that will create employment. To-day we were advised that the conferees have agreed on the revenue bill, which will balance the Budget. I am delighted to hear this, and I hope that the banks, the bankers, the press, and foreign investors will be happy and satisfied. I am hopeful that it will afford some relief and will bring about some benefit to approximately 10,000,000 unemployed. I am for any proposition that will result in employment, because, gentlemen, conditions are serious. I have called your attention to these serious conditions many times.

A few days ago, in the city of Detroit, the mayors of the large cities of America unanimously agreed that the cities they represent are not in a position to feed the starving and hungry multitudes, and appealed to the Federal Government for aid. I say it is absolutely necessary that we legislate in the interest of the unemployed and relieve the existing ominous and serious conditions.

I have advocated relief to municipalities for the last year. I believe that such legislation should be forthcoming, first, because the municipalities are in absolute need of funds to take care of their vast numbers of unemployed and starving people, and, second, because any loan that will be extended to them will be repaid.

There are some gentlemen who do not seem to be interested in the hungry people of America. I do not desire to make a statement that may be construed by some as being revolutionary, but I warn you now, my friends, that we must act and act speedily to relieve existing conditions. The President does not appear to be interested in the starving people. I regret that I have no confidence in the workings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation management.

Though I have advocated for almost two years the creation of a Federal finance corporation to relieve the financial stringency, save the banks, and extend credit, so that business would not be seriously affected, I have felt, however, that the membership or directorate of such a corporation should consist of men uninfluenced and uncontrolled by Wall Street, and for that reason I have provided in my bill the stipulation that Congress should have the power to name the five directors. In fact, I deemed this freedom from the control of vested interests so important that in one bill I specifically stated by name who these five directors should be. It was my contention that only men of extraordinary ability and men who placed the Nation before partisanship would administer the law in a manner that would bring the greatest good to the greatest number. I was apprehensive lest the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Meyer, who, though in a position to relieve the financial difficulties, refused to heed my appeals for immediate action, be given full control of the organization. I was fearful that the great power vested in such an institution and placed in the hands of those closely allied with Wall Street interests would be used solely to aid the big interests and that the legitimate industry and business of the Nation would be disregarded.

And to-day, after this Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been functioning for nearly four months, the fears which I entertained at that time have been justified, for, notwithstanding the large amount that has already been advanced, we find upon close investigation that the railroads, insurance companies, and large banking institutions have been the largest beneficiaries and that the country at large has received little or nothing in the way of aid.

The bill directly provides that loans should be made to building and loan associations; yet to this day only a ridiculously insignificant amount has been advanced to these deserving institutions. I can not help but feel that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had used its great power fairly we could have seen the direct benefits accrue from this legislation long before this, and by this time business would have improved, unemployment reduced, and the Federal revenue increased. But, unfortunately, this is not so, and we are to-day obliged to enact this legislation in the hope of balancing the Budget, so as to maintain our credit. There are many provisions in this bill to which I do not subscribe-in fact, to which I am opposed-and for which I dislike to vote, but, unfortunately, we have no alternative but to accept and vote for the bill, for only by the passage of this bill can we enact the legislation in which I am especially interested; that is, legislation that will immediately relieve the millions of the unemployed and starving people, legislation that will grant aid to the States and municipalities, legislation that will create employment, and legislation that will reestablish business.

I feel that we must enact legislation immediately that will relieve conditions before it is too late. I know that inasmuch as I have made these appeals on the floor before, you may be under the impression that I am merely repeating them for grandiloquent effect. Do not be misled, gentlemen. I am repeating them because every day conditions are becoming more alarming. And I will continue to repeat them until we act to remedy the deplorable conditions.

I appeal to the leaders of both sides to face the seriousness of the situation squarely and agree on legislation that will create employment and relieve the conditions which are now threatening the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the rule because its passage will bring before the House Senate Joint Resolution No. 41, a resolution that, in the minds of the councils of Philadelphia, would do great injury to the port.

Senate Joint Resolution 41 is opposed by the present mayor, the Hon. J. Hampton Moore, who was a Member of this House for 14 consecutive years, and by the unanimous vote of the councils of Philadelphia.

The councils of our city passed a resolution asking the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to delay action on the joint resolution until they had completed hearings which are now taking place in the city of Philadelphia. The Legislature of Pennsylvania will meet in a few weeks, and it is our belief that a change can or will be made if this delay is granted.

The bill restricts Philadelphia's control over her own port, and would make possible the construction of additional bridges and tunnels within a 20-mile zone controlled by the commission, without the consent of the councils of Philadelphia. It gives us no opportunity of home rule whatever.

The commission will control the riparian rights, and mark you this. On page 4, article (h), the commission is given the right of eminent domain. This is drastic.

All we want is to postpone action until a more equitable agreement can be entered into.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. RANSLEY. Yes,

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the agreement that has been made and presented here the one entered into by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANSLEY. And the State of New Jersey; yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Are the identical provisions carried in the resolution that Congress is being asked to ratify?

Mr. RANSLEY. Yes. They were ratified by both States.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RANSLEY. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. How is it that Philadelphia's voice was not heard at Harrisburg when this resolution was under consideration? How is it that it apparently comes here unanimously from the two States, when Philadelphia is such an important portion of the State? This is what it is difficult for some of us outside of Pennsylvania to understand.

Mr. RANSLEY. I have not anything to disguise, and I will state to the gentleman from Connecticut that we have a new mayor in Philadelphia—

Mr. TILSON. And a good one.

Mr. RANSLEY. And anybody who knows the Hon. J. Hampton Moore knows him to be an honest, honorable gentleman. I do not want to go any further into the matter.

It was the thought of many that after the bridge had paid for itself and the original investment returned to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, as well as the $10,000,000 that the city of Philadelphia had contributed, the bridge would be opened to all free of charge, or at least a nominal amount charged.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, as there are no further requests for time, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. Under the rule it is provided that the time in favor of the resolution shall be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the subcommittee handling this matter, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Milligan], control the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) granting consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41), with Mr. DISNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Stewart].

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, Senate Joint Resolution 41 grants the consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey creating the Delaware River Joint Commission and specifying the powers and duties thereof.

This resolution was passed by the United States Senate on February 24, 1932. It was referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on February 27, 1932, and reported to the House by that committee on May 19, 1932, with a recommendation that it pass. (Rept.

No. 1383, 72d Cong., 1st sess.) The agreement, creating the Delaware River Joint Commission between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey was entered into on July 1, 1931. This agreement was authorized pursuant to laws passed by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, respectively, during the 1931 sessions of their legislatures.

The Secretary of War, under date of December 29, 1931, approved the passage of this resolution. The Acting Secretary of Agriculture, under date of December 31, 1931, advised the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that that department had no objection to the passage of this resolution. Under date of February 10, 1932, the Secretary of the Navy advised the chairman of the committee that the Navy Department had no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 41 does not involve any expenditures of Federal funds. It merely consents to the agreement between these two States. The rights of the United States are amply safeguarded by the proviso on page 20, "That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, impair, or diminish any right, power, or jurisdiction of the United States or of any court, department, board, bureau, officer, or official of the United States, over or in regard to any navigable waters, or any commerce between the States or with foreign countries, or any bridge, railroad, highway, pier, wharf, or other facility or improvement, or any other person, matter, or thing, forming the subject matter of the aforesaid compact or agreement or otherwise affected by the terms thereof."

Article 6 of the agreement specifies that on or before the 30th day of June, 1932, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the commission shall pay to the State of New Jersey an amount equal to the moneys contributed by that State toward the cost of acquiring property for and construction of the Delaware River Bridge and its approaches and expenditures incident thereto, with interest theretofore actually paid by the State of New Jersey or accrued upon the bonds heretofore issued by such State to borrow money to pay its share of the cost of acquired property for and the construction of said bridge and its approaches.

The sum to be due the State of New Jersey under this agreement is approximately $13,000,000; six and one-half million dollars of this sum are free, unpledged funds.

I have been advised by Gov. A. Harry Moore, of New Jersey, that it is the intention of the State to utilize this sum of six and one-half million dollars for direct unemployment relief.

Governor Moore estimates that on the 1st of July there will be 800,000 inhabitants of our State who will lack food and employment, and the passage of this resolution is of the utmost importance for this reason.

The State of New Jersey has during the last fiscal year expended for unemployment relief a sum in excess of $20,000,000. This fund will be exhausted by July 1, 1932, and it is absolutely imperative that this resolution be enacted into law before that time.

Should this resolution fail of passage, it will be necessary for the State of New Jersey to levy additional taxes in order to raise funds for unemployment relief during the coming

Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, yesterday advised the governor of my State as follows:

I shall be very glad indeed to communicate promptly with the Speaker of the House and the Members of the Pennsylvania delegation and urge upon them the ratification of the bridge compact between New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The State of New Jersey, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and the city of Philadelphia have expended over $34,000,000 in the construction of this magnificent bridge between the city of Camden and the city of Philadelphia.

The Delaware River Joint Commission has under advertisement at this time the sale of bonds in order to refund to the States and the city of Philadelphia the moneys furnished by them and the sale of these bonds is contingent upon the approval by the Congress of this agreement.

The Legislature of the State of New Jersey and the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania have approved the organization of this commission, and the agreement also has the unqualified approval of Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, and Governor Moore, of New Jersey.

Now, gentlemen, I sincerely trust that you will pass this bill. It is imperatively needed. It has been passed on by the legislatures of both States. The Governor of the State and the Governor of the Commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania have both approved it. They are urging it, and I sincerely trust you will not put these two great Commonwealths in the position they would be placed if you failed to pass the bill. I sincerely hope and trust you will pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

WOLVERTON 1.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I greatly appreciate the favorable consideration that has been given by the House to the rule presented by the Rules Committee which thereby permits Senate Joint Resolution 41 to give congressional approval to the compact or agreement entered into between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, creating the Delaware River Joint Commission, to now come before the House for action. Permit me to emphasize the fact that the compact or agreement between the two States, for which we now seek congressional approval, has been signed, sealed, and delivered and been operative and in effect since July 1, 1931, and the commission appointed thereunder has been functioning in a manner that meets with the entire approval of the people of the two States. The only question before this Committee of the Whole House is, in my judgment, to consider whether any rights of the United States are violated by the agreement which has been entered into by these two sovereign States. As an answer to this question, I desire to call your attention to the fact that the War Department, under date of December 29, 1931, advised the chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that, so far as the interests committed to that department are concerned, there is no objection to favorable consideration of House Joint Resolution 101, Seventy-second Congress, first session, which was introduced by me and is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 41, introduced by Senator Kean, and which is now the subject matter of our consideration. The Department of Agriculture, under date of December 31, 1931, informed the chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that, after careful consideration of House Joint Resolution 101, which, as I have already stated, is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 41-

It is the view of the department that the proposed compact sets up a desirable plan for providing facilities for commerce by rail, highway, and water; for the management of such facilities; and for additional facilities as may be needed from time to time. therefore, is without objection so far as the department is con-

The Navy Department, under date of February 20, 1932, advised the chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee as follows:

The interests of the naval service are considered to be ade quately protected by the provisions contained on page 20 of the bill. The legislation does not involve any expenditure of public funds. In view of the foregoing, the Navy Department has no objection to the passage of House Joint Resolution 101.

If any further guaranty were necessary to corroborate the statement that I have made, that no right of the United States is violated by the granting of the consent requested, I would mention then that this bill was referred to the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee presided over by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLIGAN]. Not only distinguished, but with a reputation for careful, sincere, and conscientious consideration of every matter that comes before his committee. I am certain that the fact that this bill received the approval of Mr. MILLIGAN and the subcommittee, as well as the general unanimous approval of the main committee, is a sufficient guaranty that every right of the United States is well preserved.

Now, then, what reason has been advanced why congressional approval should be withheld?

No one has alleged that it will violate or do harm to any right of the United States. No one has alleged that it will violate or infringe the rights of the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or of the State of New Jersey.

The only objection that has been presented against the adoption of the resolution is that which emanates from the city of Philadelphia. It would seem that Philadelphia is fearful that some of its rights and prerogatives will be disturbed in the event that congressional approval is given to the agreement. I am of the opinion that the objection which has been made is not well founded or of any real substance. It is a phantom fear, and in making this observation I do not wish to impugn the sincerity of the gentleman from Philadelphia, who has spoken against the adoption of the rule, for I am certain that he is sincere and believes that the objection he has made is well founded. But I insist that a reading of the resolution will show to any fair and unprejudiced mind that there is in fact no foundation for the fears he has expressed on behalf of the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. With pleasure.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman is a very able lawyer. He has brought out the fact in his previous remarks to the House that this arrangement between the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey will provide $6,500,000 to be used by the State of New Jersey in giving relief to the unemployed.

Mr, WOLVERTON. The gentleman is right.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Does the gentleman think it is right to give to any commission the right practically of eminent domain, so far as 10 miles north and south is concerned?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I thank the gentleman for asking for information upon that question, because it gives me the opportunity to show him and anyone else who may have a like view that there is no foundation or reason for the suggestion that jurisdictional power is given to the Delaware River Joint Commission over that portion of the water front of Philadelphia to which he has referred. In answering the gentleman's question I wish to point out to him that nowhere in the entire agreement entered into between the two States is there any power or jurisdiction given to the commission to control the river front of Philadelphia. The bill merely provides, as set forth in article 9—

That the said Commonwealth and the said State will not authorize or permit the authorization of the construction, operation, or maintenance of any additional vehicular bridge or tunnel, or any additional bridge or tunnel having railroad or other facilities for the transportation of passengers between the said Commonwealth and the said State over or under the Delaware River by any other person or body than the commission within a distance of 10 miles in either direction from the said bridge.

The gentleman will, therefore, see that what he has assumed to be a jurisdiction of the river front of Philadelphia is merely an agreement by the State with those who have taken the bonds of the commission, and for the payment of which the tolls of the bridge are pledged, that so long as such bonds remain unpaid the said States will not grant competitive rights to individuals. If the gentleman will look carefully into the agreement, he will furthermore find that the only power granted to the joint commission is to take over and operate the bridge, which is already in existence, and has been conducted by a joint commission since July 1, 1926, and in addition thereto build a system of high-speed transportation between the cities of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J. The additional powers that are granted are merely to investigate and study questions affecting port development and to make report to the legislatures of the respective States. No new project, whether a bridge, tunnel, or anything else of whatsoever kind or character, can be constructed except by the approval of the legislatures of the two States. Furthermore, as an additional protection, no action of any kind or character can be taken by the joint commission unless approved by a majority of the members of the commissioners from each of the States. As a further guaranty to the gentleman from Philadelphia that no harm can come to his beloved city under the terms of this agreement, I bring to his attention the fact that at the present time six of the eight members of the Pennsylvania portion of the joint commission are residents of the city of Philadelphia. I can not understand what further guaranty my friend from Philadelphia, or the mayor of that city or the city council, would desire or expect.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But there is a joint commission of eight in the State of New Jersey and eight in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WOLVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. CONNOLLY. When the agreement was drawn it provided for the appointment by the legislature of the eight commissioners to represent the State of New Jersey, and on the Pennsylvania side our act of the legislature required that the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania and the attorney general, and so forth, should be commissioners, and that left Philadelphia all the time in the minority.

Mr. WOLVERTON. If six out of the eight present commissioners are a minority, then I am unable to calculate correctly. I again call to the attention of my friend that at the present time there are six members of the Pennsylvania portion of the joint commission from the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But we are speaking of the future.

Mr. WOLVERTON. What the future has in store for Philadelphia I do not know. There was a time when Philadelphia could dictate what the future of Pennsylvania should be. Whether that will continue in the future, I do not know.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOLVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Is it not a fact that the mayor of Philadelphia is now a member of this commission under this act and will still be a member of the commission?

Mr. WOLVERTON. That is true.

Mr. MILLIGAN. And further, is it not a fact that when they had a meeting relative to this particular resolution the mayor of Philadelphia failed to appear at the meeting?

Mr. WOLVERTON. That is true. Further, this legislation was not passed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania until the then mayor and other officials of the city government and every representative of the city of Philadelphia in the legislature, both in the senate and the house, had agreed to it. So the present resolution which grants congressional approval to the agreement entered into between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey had the approval of every member from the city of Philadelphia and it was not until then that the legislature passed it.

Furthermore, the statement that was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ransley] that this agreement gives jurisdiction to the commission over 10 miles of water front on either side of the bridge, is not true in fact, as a reading of Articles IX and XII, to which I have previously referred, will show. Anyone who knows Mr. Ransley as well as I do will agree with me that he would never intentionally make a misstatement. He is too honorable; he is too fair; and his motives need no defense from me. But the fact is that he is mistaken, and anyone who will read the resolution from beginning to end will find that nowhere is jurisdiction given to the joint commission over 10 miles of the water front of Philadelphia on either side of the present bridge. It provides only that no private interest shall have the right to build additional bridges or tunnels within that restricted area.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It only prevents a private interest from building tunnels or bridges in that district. The joint commission can not do it. They can only do it by consent of the legislatures. What the gentleman is fearful of is that some time in the Senate of Pennsylvania the Legislature of Pennsylvania may not do what the Philadelphia representatives would want them to do. Pennsylvania is the sovereign power. Philadelphia only exists by grace or leave of the State of Pennsylvania, and that is true of every municipal government in any State. A municipality has only such powers as are given as the State deems proper. So what the gentleman is fearful of is the fact that the city of Philadelphia is the child rather than the parent of Pennsylvania. I, inadvertently, yet not so improperly, made the mistake a day or two ago before the Rules Committee of speaking of the "State of Philadelphia." I was mistaken in that. It is only a theory which some may have that the city of Philadelphia should have the prerogatives and rights of a State rather than a city. In the remaining few minutes I have I wish to emphasize the fact that this agreement represents the act of two sovereign States, unanimously adopted by both legislatures and approved by both governors, having the consent of every member of the legislature from the city of Philadelphia. Representatives from Philadelphia wish Congress to do for Philadelphia what the State of Pennsylvania was not willing to do.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman make the statement that this agreement was unanimously ratified by both legislatures?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I do.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Legislature of New Jersey and the Legislature of Pennsylvania?

Mr. WOLVERTON. The Legislature of New Jersey and the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and it received the approval of both governors.

Mr. HASTINGS. And was unanimously ratified?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Yes, sir. Aside from the statements that have been made here to-day that might indicate otherwise, the finest spirit of cooperation exists between the members of this joint commission from the city of Philadelphia and the State of New Jersey. They have never had a difference between them. They are working hand in hand, and every member of that commission from Philadelphia is asking that this bill be approved by Congress, with the possible exception of the mayor, and if I should take the time to read to you from the minutes of the joint commission you would see that even the present mayor of Philadelphia, in his statement to the joint commission indicated he would do what he could to remove the objection made to the passage of this resolution by a former Congressman from the city of Philadelphia. The only reason that has ever been advanced by the mayor of Philadelphia publicly, although I do not know what he may have said privately, was that contained in a letter, in which he stated:

I advise that the city of Philadelphia is now advertising a $20,000,000 bond issue which is sorely needed to meet city necessities and restore city credit. Another issue just at this time, of course, would affect the situation here

That objection does not now exist, for the reason that to-day the city of Philadelphia is advertising and selling its $20,000,000 bond issue referred to in the mayor's letter. Thus the only objection advanced by the mayor that has come to my attention is probably by this time out of the way and disposed of.

I wish to further call your attention to the fact that every Philadelphia newspaper-Republican, Democrat, and independent—has written the strongest editorials imaginable asking for the approval of this compact between the two States. The president of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce publicly stated at a public hearing held recently in Philadelphia that it would be one of the finest things that could be done for the city of Philadelphia. Civic leaders, business men, and public officials in both States are earnestly petitioning this body for favorable consideration of this resolution. I have in my hands now telegrams of the most urgent character that I would like to insert in the RECORD if space would permit.

There is no difference of opinion among good-thinking citizens who believe in the State of Pennsylvania and the port of Philadelphia as to the merits of this bill. [Applause.]

The former Governor of New Jersey, Morgan F. Larson, a Republican, gave of his best efforts for the fulfillment of this great purpose before the completion of his term in January last. The present governor, A. Harry Moore, a Democrat, has taken up the fight where his predecessor left off. He has conscientiously, faithfully, and with great energy used the power and the influence of his office to complete this great and important matter that means so much for the future welfare of the people of these two States. Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania has given like effort.

To-day, I am in receipt of the following telegram from Governor Moore of New Jersey, reading as follows:

TRENTON, N. J., June 2.

Hon. Charles A. Wolverton,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Have to-day received a letter from Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania as follows:

"Dear Governor Moore: Your telegram of to-day is just received. I shall be very glad indeed to communicate promptly with the Speaker of the House and the members of the Pennsylvania delegation and urge upon them the ratification of the bridge compact between New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Sincerely yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

You can use this in your speech because if the governor of Pennsylvania is for this compact, surely Congress should be swayed by that fact rather than by some political objection. A. HARRY MOORE, Governor.

As this telegram indicates, the question is not political. It is a question of permitting two great sovereign States to complete a great undertaking that gives promise of promoting to a high degree the mutual interests of the people of their respective States. [Applause.] Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to take five minutes, because I think this resolution has been very thoroughly explained. For the first time since I have been a Member of the House, both sides of the House, the entire State of New Jersey, seems to be in entire agreement as to the bill. I might also say that I think a majority from Pennsylvania is in agreement as to the resolution. The only question in my mind regarding this resolution is that it is within the means of Congress to alleviate the serious situation existing in New Jersey by passing Senate Joint Resolution 41, which, as you have heard, has for its purpose the ratification of a pact between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania concerning the operation of a Delaware River bridge between the cities of Camden and Philadelphia.

If the House ratifies the pact, which already has been ratified by the Senate and by the Legislatures of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, it will be possible for the joint bridge commission of the two States to issue $43,000,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of paying back to New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the city of Philadelphia the money they invested at the time the bridge was constructed several years

New Jersey will receive $13,000,000 of this money and will immediately put more than $6,000,000 into the relief chest. with more to follow as needed. No Federal aid is asked in the handling of this problem.

New Jersey will have to begin immediately the expenditure of $2,000,000 a month for the relief of approximately 600,000 people, who, through the depression, have been rendered dependent upon public charity. It is believed that 800,000 people will have to be cared for before September. At a conference of the leading business men and bankers in the office of Governor Moore on May 20 last, called to consider public relief, it was reported in one south Jersey town three factories, the sole means of support of the town's working population, will be closed by July 1. This will put practically the entire town upon the dependent list.

Railroad and ferry traffic into the city of New York from our State showed 31,099,221 less riders in 1931 than in 1930. This means that hundreds of thousands of Jersey commuters are out of work.

I sincerely hope the membership of the House will vote for the resolution and help New Jersey, as well as Pennsylvania, in this very serious crisis that confronts them at the present time. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the aforesaid compact or agreement, and to each and every term and provision thereof: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, impair, or diminish any right, power, or jurisdiction of the United States or of any court, department, board, bureau, officer, or official of the United States over or in regard to any navigable waters or any commerce between the States or with foreign countries, or any bridge, railroad highway, pier, wharf, or other facility or improvement, or any other person, matter, or thing forming the subject matter of the aforesaid compact or agreement or otherwise affected by the terms thereof: And pact or agreement or otherwise affected by the terms thereof: And provided further, That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution or any part thereof is hereby expressly reserved.

Whereas, pursuant to Act No. 200 of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved June 12, 1931, and chapter 391 of the Laws of New Jersey, approved June 30, 1931, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey have entered into a certain compact or agreement, which said compact or agreement has been duly executed and delivered by the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on behalf of said Commonwealth and by the New Jersey Interstate Bridge Commission on behalf of said State: and State; and

"Whereas the Pennsylvania Commission, existing by virtue of Act No. 338 of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, approved July 9, 1919 (Pamphlet Laws, 814), and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and the New Jersey Interstate Bridge Commission, existing by virtue of chapter 271 of the Laws of New Jersey of 1929, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, are acting jointly under the name of the Delaware River

"Whereas the interests of the people of the two States will be best served by consolidating the two commissions in corporate form, and granting additional powers and authority thereto with reference to the said bridge, and to other and further means of communication between the two States in the vicinity of Philadelphia and Camden; and

"Whereas it is highly desirable that there be a single agency of both States empowered to further the aforesaid interests of both States: Now, therefore

"The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey do hereby solemnly covenant and agree each with the other, as follows:"

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLIGAN. This is a compact between two States passed by their legislatures and signed by their governors. The House can not strike out the enacting clause of the compact. The resolution is the only part affecting the compact over which the House really has jurisdiction, because the rest of it is a legislative act of the State Legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Mr. RANSLEY. It is a compact, but at the same time it is a resolution before the Congress of the United States.

Rule 23, section 854, reads as follows:

A motion may not be made to strike out until the first section of the bill has been read.

I would interpret that part of the joint resolution up to Article I as the first section of the resolution.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will continue the reading of the preamble.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. RANSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to report the same back forthwith with an amendment striking out Article II and Article IV thereof.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion to recommit was rejected. The Senate joint resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLIGAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency bill, and pending that I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana with reference to the time. I will say to the gentleman that I have requests which amount to an hour and 20 minutes. I do not know whether we will take all of that time or not, but that is the time I think we need.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think an hour and 20 minutes will be sufficient on our side. That will make the total time 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours and 40 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Woop, and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the University of Alabama on May 23, 1932, during the commencement exercises conferred on Gen. Frank T. Hines the degree of doctor Doctor Denny, president of the university, speaking for the board of trustees, paid high tribute to the distinguished services rendered by General Hines during the World War and in his present important official position as Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

In May, 1931, the university celebrated its one hundredth anniversary and is rightly classed as one of our country's outstanding institutions of learning. Her sons and daughters have made lasting and worth-while contributions in every field of human endeavor, and on its roll of students appear the names of representative citizens from all of our States, Territories, and insular possessions.

During his visit to the university General Hines was the guest of the local posts of the American Legion and the Spanish-American Veterans, and now, under leave granted by the House, it is my pleasant privilege to extend my remarks by placing in the RECORD a copy of the instructive and inspirational address delivered on that occasion by General Hines to this year's graduating class.

The address follows:

SPEECH OF GEN. FRANK T. HINES TO THE 1932 GRADUATING CLASS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA

Doctor Denny, members of the Alumni Association, members of Doctor Denny, members of the Alumni Association, members of the graduating class of 1932, ladies and gentlemen. With your graduation to-day from college you complete a most important step in your life's work. You are leaving a college rich with the traditions and history of over a century, its distinguished alumni in every State of the Union bearing witness to its sterling service in the educational field. No matter how great your satisfaction in the completion of your courses, I know that satisfaction must be tinged with regret that your solourn here is ended. It may be said that you stand at a closed door about to be opened which will disclose opportunities and possibilities of great importance to you. The path you follow after passing through this doorway will reflect the trend of your inclinations, govern your achievements, and form the channels of your future lives. At this particular time you find a modern world, disillusioned, chaotic, bewildered, demanding a solution adequate to return to its normal course.

It has been indicated frequently recently that the fundamental cause of all of our trouble is personal selfashness and fear. We hear it said that men must be changed if problems are to be solved, that we are in need of greater leadership throughout the world, and that this is our primary need. I do not subscribe to all of this, although there may be a just foundation for the theory that the fundamental cause is due to selfashness. I do feel, however, that so far as our country is concerned there is need for greater interest on the part of our citizens in their country and the exercise of the right of citizenship.

Our country and its Government belong to all the people. It ought not to be under the domination of any one element or of any one section. For it to fall under the entire control of the people of wealth, or the people who are wage earners, would be contrary to our declared principles. They all should be partakers in the responsibilities and benefits and all be represented in the administration of our Government. It is important that those who are charged with the conduct of our affairs should be equally solicitous of the welfare of all localities and all classes. Our endeavor should be to have neither outlaws nor favorites, but all deavor should be to have neither outlaws nor favorites, but all should be beneficiaries of the common good through the discharge of common duties.

of common duties.

In looking forward to your future, some of you may look with apprehension—and no doubt the way may be difficult for some and smoother for others—but for all it may be the instrument of progress, mentally and spiritually, if you will pursue it conscientiously, taking advantage of your opportunities and paying strict attention to your obligations.

Education has been defined as the preparation for the art of living. Do not consider that you have completed your education with your graduation to-day; rather feel that you have completed important preliminaries.

A desire to succeed is taken for granted, but while there are many and varied conceptions and evaluations of that thing we call success, in the end it must be measured by service, accom-many and varied conceptions and evaluations of that thing we call success, in the end it must be measured by service, accomplishment, and the regard of our fellow men. If we can leave, at the end of the journey, a record of diligence, faithfulness to duty, unselfish and honorable dealing in all our contacts, surely we may conclude that we have made a success of our lives, whether our achievement be supplemented by material competence or encompassed by the contentment that accompanies awareness of having done our best through the years.

It is but natural that we all should desire and strive for those things the world invariably associates with success in life—finanthings the world invariably associates with success in life—financial independence, with a comfortable measure of leisure, personal prestige, and pleasures of social contacts. These things in themselves are worthy enough, but it is in the ways and means through which we seek them that our standards and ethics are proclaimed and our characters formed. It is a continuous process that endures throughout our lives, and few of us there are who can finally feel that the effort is completed. We remain much in the position of the little girl returning from her first day at school, when asked by her mother, "Well, dear, what did you learn to-day?" replied wearly, "Nothing at all; I have to go back to-morrow." We must all go back to-morrow until the job is done.

I am sure that you all must feel, and rightly so, that in the termination of your college career you have reached a definite milestone in your journey through life, and while, no doubt, you share the bewilderment experienced by many travelers when confronted at a crossroad with a group of signposts, the choice of your road must be made—the journey must go on. You come to this selection with the equipment of the education you have so far acquired plus whatever traits of character you were endowed with at birth or which you have developed along the way. It is assumed that you have also adopted a more or less definite code of ethics. It remains now for the knowledge you have acquired to be transmuted into wisdom, remembering always that while "knowledge is proud that it knows so much, wisdom is humble that it knows so little"; unless knowledge eventually leads to wisdom it is little better than ballast.

The use that you make of the knowledge that has been afforded

The use that you make of the knowledge that has been afforded you, the diligence with which you strive to increase it, and the industry and perseverance which you bring to your chosen endeavors in life, all will be potent factors in determining the degree of your success. It is not a thing that just happens, this business of making a success! It is composed partly of opportunity and partly of capacity, with a large measure of that more prosaic element known as hard work.

And there are plenty of jobs still to be done notwithstanding

And there are plenty of jobs still to be done notwithstanding the almost unbelievable progress which has been witnessed in the commercial and industrial world in the space of your lifetime. Contemplation of the number, variety, and ingenuity of the thousands of new inventions, products, and achievements within the past 20 years almost overwhelms us with a sense of the futility of developing anything new under the sun, but the process goes steadily on and will continue as long as intelligence and energy exist.

A most impre A most impressive array of achievements during the past 25 or 30 years was cited by Merle Thorpe, editor of the Nation's Business in Washington, in an address broadcast to the graduating classes of 1930, prominent among which were the Panama Canal, the first Pacific cable, the Tungsten lamp, the first transcontinental telephone line in 1915, air mail in 1928, trans-Atlantic radio nental telephone line in 1915, air mail in 1928, trans-Atlantic radio telephony in 1927, parcel post in 1913, and commercial photographs by wire in 1925. These were among the things at which your fathers marveled, and even within the last few years there have been added to the list of wonders mechanical switchboards for telephone exchanges, mechanical power station attendants, electrification of railroads for intercity transport, electrically driven ships, and the establishment of radiobroadcasting as a national institution, with commercial television rapidly becoming a reality a reality

Referring again to the more recent developments, Mr. Thorpe said, "You have not forgotten your first photoplay only 15 years ago in your enjoyment to-day of the photoplay's new dimension, the talking picture; you have seen skyscrapers grow two stories a year for each of your 20 years, and observed welding begin to compete with riveting. You may well be anxious as to what there is left for you to do. Chemistry has added to your vocabulary such words as celotex, celophane, celanese, rayon, velox, duco, and pyrex, and has provided you with iceless refrigeration, oil heat, and the world's best music on the air."

Truly everything seems to have been done, but in reality there is no reason to fear that the next 25 years will be less prolific in accomplishments than the past.

But, aside from the opportunities of the business world, there is a clear call to the youth of to-day in the conditions that are daily Referring again to the more recent developments, Mr. Thorpe a clear call to the youth of to-day in the conditions that are daily becoming more prevalent, constituting a menace not only to our becoming more prevalent, constituting a menace not only to our ideals and traditions but actually to our security as a nation. On every hand we hear or see evidences of unrest, of disregard for the laws of the land, of this or that "racket," and one of the most disturbing features which we must face in these conditions is the fact that so many of the participants are the young. Are we to conclude that the existence of such conditions indicates lack of solidarity in American life; and if so, must we blame that lack on our long adherence to the "melting pot" policy conceived in unselfishness and pursued in the development of that freedom which is the corner stone of our national structure? Is this precious and dearly bought freedom degenerating into a laxity that is penetrating and polluting the most vital elements of our national life?

Unlike the nations of Europe, who pride themselves on their

Unlike the nations of Europe, who pride themselves on their racial unity, we are a hybrid Nation. We have welcomed to our shores, among others, the persecuted and discontented groups of other lands, beckoned hither by the promise of individual liberty and opportunity. This process has endured for many years and we have been proud of our ability as a Nation to assimilate these alien groups, frequently divesting them in the process of racial characteristics inimical to our ideals and fostering those traits which lent themselves to ready acceptance of our standards and customs. In the earlier years of our national life the ards and customs. In the earlier years of our national life the blood strain which we know as American was sufficiently virile and blood strain which we know as American was sufficiently virile and pure to permit of this assimilating and neutralizing without deterioration; but the constant infiltration of alien races has gradually produced an attenuation of this original blood strain which is rapidly becoming more manifest. Supplementing this, we have the usual by-products of our civilization showing the characteristics of unrest, irresponsibility, and disregard for law and order. Economic depression is a fertile field for these elements to prosper in, and with such fertilization discontent spreads and unless adequately controlled becomes menacing to our national safety and unless adequately controlled becomes menacing to our national safety.

It is high time to do something about it—this unrest is not going to be stilled except by a conscious, deliberate, and determined effort on the part of the citizenry. Never before has there been a greater need or greater opportunities for the manifestation of Americanism, inviolate and militant, to combat and neutralize the activities and influence of antagonistic forces which would destroy the very fabric of our social structure and tear down the ideals we have reared through the years of our development.

Our country was founded on certain great principles fundamental in character. It seems to me in times like these through which we are passing it is imperative to consider these principles and see to it that we shape our lives in accord with them.

which we are passing it is imperative to consider these principles and see to it that we shape our lives in accord with them.

The form and functions of our Government are the result of the independent activity and thought of the people, but with the lapse of time we have settled back into our own more restricted lines of endeavor, leaving the activities of the Government in the hands of a few who have made such matters more or less their life work. life work.

Perhaps some of you are even now asking yourselves "What can I do about it?" And I say to you, you will need to do something very definite about it, if you intend to fulfill your duties and privileges as citizens. It will not be enough to live your own lives uprightly; it is imperative that you take an active part in the affairs of your community, bringing all your courage and resourcefulness to bear against the evil conditions and pracand resoluter thies to bear against the evil conditions and practices you encounter, not fearing to oppose or denounce them openly. Some there are who contend that criticism of our institutions and policies is unpatriotic, that it denotes a lack of proper respect, but that can not justly be said of constructive criticism from an earnest citizen manifestly unselfishly concerned for the country's well-being.

Public opinion is the most potent weapon we can use to fight evil and it behooves each one of us to declare himself whenever the opportunity offers. Inertia and indifference can be as pernicious as crime itself, and what we accept without protest, we tacitly condone.

We may turn in repugnance from the contemplation of un-wholesome conditions, but so long as we allow them to remain unchallenged, passively at least, we are participants.

In my judgment, there is too little recognition of the duties of citizenship and a lack of full appreciation of its privileges.

There is need for a new spirit of public service, an unselfishness that will predominate, and so bring about the overthrow of the self-seeker and the greedy, a new and higher standard of civic relationship and civic responsibility. It is natural that America should look to her college graduates for the fostering of such spirit and such ideals. It is a peace-time service comparable in urgency to that required in time of war which is the first obligation of good citizenship. tion of good citizenship.

A good citizen mindful of his country's traditions should consider its potentialities as an individual nation as well as the significance of its position among the nations of the world, and building day by day on this background assist in preserving the integrity and prestige of his government.

That this responsibility is being widely neglected is evident on every hand. Disregard of law, ridicule of our Congress, of the judiciary, and other men in high public office are prevalent, all of which tend to destroy that confidence in those responsible for the machinery of our Government, which, if carried to the extreme, will undermine the very foundations of good government. We all know that the American people are much attached to their Government and in every contractions are such attached. to their Government and in every great emergency they have come forward to its defense in the fullest measure. Yet in time come forward to its defense in the fullest measure. Yet in time of peace the tendency is to belittle, and interest wanes in those fundamentals of good government that are essential to its progress and stability. If we are to continue as the great nation that we have a right to be, it is necessary that there be developed among our people a greater interest in public affairs, a greater appreciation of the value of citizenship. This work should have its inception in the schoolroom. It is most important that the initial impression given to the children of America should emanate from teachers whose ideals are the true ideals of Americanism. The importance of the work of those engaged in teaching the children of America and carrying on engaged in teaching the children of America and carrying on the education of the youth through the graded schools can not be overestimated, and perhaps we expect too much from the teachers in comparison with the compensation and the position awarded them.

The proper spirit of Americanism, together with respect for law and order, should be one of the first lessons taught in schools.

Patriotism should be an integral part of our every feeling at all times, for it is merely another name for these qualities of soul which make a man, in peace or in war, by day or by night, think of his duty to his fellows, and his duty to the Nation through which his and their loftiest aspirations must find fitting expres-

Young America should be taught to love America, to support its Constitution and its laws; to learn that the violation of its laws is descration of all that is good and destructive of those high is desecration of all that is good and destructive or those high ideals fought for by the fathers of our Nation. Next to love of country should come respect for our institutions and for those who are charged with the responsibility of government. We can not expect the proper spirit of citizenship to prevail if we continue to ridicule those charged with the making as well as with the execution of our laws. It is equally important, of course, that those selected for public service should be able to command the confidence essential to inspire proper respect for their authority.

It is of further importance that our citizens take such interest.

It is of further importance that our citizens take such interest in the affairs of our country—whether it be city, State, or National—as to assure the selection of proper representatives to conduct the business of government for them.

I am sure each one of you would resent any implication of lack f patriotism or love of country on your part, but I wonder how many of you have included in your plans for the future any definite exercise of your rights as citizens, how many of you realize the privileges that are inherent in those rights? How many of you hold this Nation in your thoughts as "my country," not merely "this country"?

We need to feel a sense of possession and inclusion in our relation to our country. We need the stimulus of the pride that such an awareness brings, and we have just cause for pride. No other country of all the world has higher standards of living. No other country offers such opportunities to its citizens. America has never engaged in a war of aggression or conquest. Her strength and support have ever been on the side of liberty, justice, and peace, but her participation in war, when inevitable, has been effective, valiant, and unselfish.

This mention of war brings to mind unavoidably the subject of

This mention of war brings to mind unavoidably the subject of veteran relief. No doubt some of you had an older brother, or perhaps even your father, serving in the World War, so you may know of these matters at first hand, but I feel that it is proper at this time to emphasize to you the liberality of your Government in dealing with her veterans in order that you may realize an additional cause for pride in your country.

in dealing with her veterans in order that you may realize an additional cause for pride in your country.

No other country of all those engaged in the World War has dealt so generously or adequately with the disabled veterans. Commencing in 1636, the Plymouth Colony provided, through their court, that any man sent forth as a soldier and returning maimed should be maintained competently by the colony as long as he lived. In 1776 the Continental Congress enacted the first pension law, giving half pay for life or during disability to every officer, sailor, or soldier losing a limb in any engagement, or who was so disabled in the service as to incapacitate him for earning a livelihood. Later the Congress of the United States developed military pension legislation to take care successively of the veterans of the War of 1812, the Indian wars, the Civil War, and the Spanish-American War.

For veterans of the World War Congress provided compensation | for disability, death compensation to dependents of veterans whose death was due to their service, the privilege of securing up whose death was due to their service, the privilege of secting up to $10,000 life insurance from the Government at moderate rates, vocational training with pay for veterans who suffered disability constituting an occupational handicap, and training without pay for veterans suffering lesser disabilities. Medical care and hospitalization were also provided without cost to veterans for serviceconnected disabilities.

Subsequent to the original enactments, legislation has provided free hospitalization and domiciliary care for veterans of all wars without regard to the nature or origin of their disabilities. Disability allowances have also been provided for permanent disability allowances have also been provided for permanent disabilities. bilities of nonservice origin and retirement pay for disabled former emergency officers.

I will not weary you with a recital of the detail of effort and service which have been required to provide and administer all these benefits, but will summarize by telling you that the Veterans' Administration to-day is maintaining and operating 57 hospitals, 10 veterans' homes, and 54 field offices, and is making monthly payments to over 1,400,000 individuals.

monthly payments to over 1,400,000 individuals.

Disbursements for the last fiscal year were over three-quarters of a billion dollars, of which less than 5 per cent went for administrative cost or "overhead." It is difficult to think in terms of such magnitude, but a few comparisons will help to realize them. For instance, that three-quarters of a billion dollars is more than half of the salaries paid all the teachers in all the public schools of the United States for the same period; it is seven-eighths of the cost of maintenance of all our churches of every denomination; and, to turn to more material affairs, it is almost three-quarters of the value of the average cotton crop for the last 10 years, and more than three times that of our entire for the last 10 years, and more than three times that of our entire

Although the increase of expenditures on account of our brothers in arms has been more or less gradual, the sum total had with the close of the last fiscal year reached the sum of more than fourteen and one-half billion dollars.

Again to make comparisons: This sum is almost three times the total of all the appropriations made by the Congress for all purposes during the eight years just preceding the war—that is, the fiscal years 1909 to 1916, inclusive. It would build four times the number of churches in the United States, nearly three times the number of buildings used for public-school purposes in the United States, and more than fourteen times all our college, university, and technical-school buildings.

States, and more than fourteen times all our college, university, and technical-school buildings.

And now, my friends of the graduating class, go your way and my best wishes are with you. You soon become, if you are not siready, citizens in your own right. Success, a clean life, and happiness to you. Your university has brought you thus far; life in its true sense confronts you. Make the best of it, and may the traditions of your country and the principles for which it was established guide you to useful endeavor and stalwart citizenship. Look proudly to your country, revere its traditions, fight for its prosperity and future, and above all live that life, whatever be its intrinsic reward, which will cause you to know that you have been an honorable citizen, appreciative of the privileges your country affords, jealous of its integrity, and alert in its defense. Be not afraid of patriotism; it is the soul of citizenship. Be not afraid of service, it is the road to contentment, and it is a thing we all can give—as Edgar Guest has written:

I have no wealth of gold to give away, But I can pledge to worthy causes these: I'll give my strength, my days and hours of ease. My finest thought and courage when I may, And take some deed accomplished for my pay. And take some deed accomplished for my pay. I cannot offer much in silver fees, But I can serve when richer people pay, And with my presence fill some vacancies. THE ALASKA RAILROAD AND THE RICHARDSON HIGHWAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of Alaska, including an address I made before the Territories Committee on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks made by me before the House Committee on the Territories, on May 17, 1932:

Mr. Taylor. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the transfer from the War Department to the Interior Department of the juris-diction over and the activities of the Board of Road Commissioners of the Territory of Alaska. That board was created by Congress in 1905 and put under the Secretary of War and authorized to construct and maintain roads, trails, bridges, and related works in Alaska, and the board has operated ever since in that capacity in that department. My information is there is no criticism of that department or of that board. But there is a wide-spread feeling throughout Alaska and in Congress and out of Conspread reeling throughout Alaska and in Congress and out of Congress that there should be a systematic combination and coordination of all the 40 or 50 bureaus, boards, and commissions with all their many hundreds of Federal employees that are constantly operating upon the people of Alaska. Many of them are functioning under the guise of "Conservation."

Alaska has been nearly "conservationed" to death. All the departments of our Government and some 36 bureaus are dipping into Alaska.

into Alaska, and Congress appropriates for all those hundred and twenty-four activities about $12,000,000 a year. That condition has gone on so long that it would be an enormous undertaking to has gone on so long that it would be an enormous undertaking to consolidate, as it ought to be, practically all those activities into one department. It would properly require an exhaustive investigation in a careful and systematic way by a competent commission, and it would require considerable time to accomplish it without doing serious injury to the Territory and to a great many people. But that is no reason why Congress should not make a start at it. Many beneficial changes and transfers can be made without delay. Last year some important transfers were made from the Bureau of Education to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The Interior Department has jurisdiction over the public lands, which is about 98 per cent of Alaska. That department also has jurisdiction over all the Indians (about 15,000) and the Eskimos (about the same number) and the large reindeer industry, the national parks, and the Alaska Railroad and boat lines, the governor and the Territorial Legislature, the Geological Survey, the minerals, and many other activities.

minerals, and many other activities.

If the government and control of the vast variety of interests in that Territory are ever to be centered into any one department, the Interior Department is the logical and most natural one. Because of the very great and wide variety of people and property rights now under the supervision of that department, the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee for that department or some of its members have several times visited Alaska, and made a personal study of the matters for which they appropriate more at these with the committee with these in 1992. Alaska, and made a personal study of the matters for which they appropriate money. I was with the committee up there in 1923 and again last summer. We visited Juneau, the capital, twice and the other main cities and towns from Ketchikan to Seward. We made a trip from there to Fairbanks over the Alaska Railroad and returned over the Richardson Highway to Chitina and over the Copper River Railroad to Cordova. It was my judgment, and I think the judgment of the other members of the commitover the Copper River Railroad to Cordova. It was my judgment, and I think the judgment of the other members of the committee, that those two main great, very important, and very expensive Government-owned parallel highways, only about 80 miles apart, might very appropriately be put under the control, coordination and management of some one department of our Government.

A special committee of the Senate made an exhaustive and thorough investigation of those two highways. They prepared an elaborate, detailed report, which was printed as Report No. 1230 of January 5, 1931, on Senate Resolution 298. They became thoroughly convinced that for the proper, orderly, and systematic operation of the Alaska Railroad and the Richardson Highway, both in the interest of the Government and the people of Alaska, they should be put under the control of the same department.

With that thought in view they conferred with both the Secretaries of War and the Interior and those officials agreed with them, taries of War and the Interior and those officials agreed with them, and they jointly decided that the Interior Department was the proper one to take over not only that highway, but all the work of the Alaska Road Commission, and to carry out that determination the chairman of that Senate committee, Senator Howell of Nebraska, was authorized to prepare and introduce in the Senate a bill to that effect, which he did as S. 4525, and as the chairman of the Interior Department House Appropriations Committee, and with approval of the Secretary I have introduced the same bill in the House as H. R. 11717.

The bill may, I think, be appropriately termed purely an administration measure. In the printed report No. 753 on this bill in the Senate, appears a letter from the President to Senator Howell as follows:

> THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, March 11, 1932.

Washington, March 11, 1932.

Hon. R. B. Howell,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Senator: I am sending you herewith a memorandum on the subject of the transfer of the Richardson Highway from the War Department to the Department of the Interior. It is apparent that this can not be accomplished without action of Congress, as the present situation is fixed by statutory law.

I am wondering if your committee would not be willing to introduce such legislation. If so, I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Interior would have the necessary form of legislation prepared at your request. Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

The bill is short and speaks for itself, and I ask to insert it in the RECORD here as follows:

H. R. 11717

A bill providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the board of road commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the board of road commissioners in the Territory of Alaska, and upon the Secretary of War, as provided for in the act of January 27, 1905 (ch. 277, sec. 2, 33 Stat. 616), as amended by the act of May 14, 1906 (ch. 2458, sec. 2, 34 Stat. 192), and acts supplemental thereto, and amendatory thereof, are hereby transferred to the Department of the Interior, and shall hereafter be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, or under his direction, by such officer, or officers, as may be designated by him.

officer, or officers, as may be designated by him.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall execute or cause to officer, or officers, as may be designated by him.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall execute or cause to be executed all laws pertaining to the construction and maintenance of roads and trails and other works in Alaska, heretofore administered by said board of road commissioners under the direction of the Secretary of War; and all appropriations heretofore made, and now available, or that hereafter may be made, for expenditure by said board for meeting the cost of such work in the Territory of Alaska, are hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, to be thereafter administered in accordance with the provisions of this act; and the said board is directed to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior all equipment, materials, supplies, papers, maps, and documents, or other property utilized in the exercise of such powers, for the use of the said Secretary in the administration of the construction and maintenance of roads, tramways, ferries, bridges, and trails, and other works in the Territory of Alaska, heretofore administered by said board.

SEC. 3. That with the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Interior shall have power, by order or regulation, to distribute the duties and authority hereby transferred, and appropriations pertaining thereto, as he may deem proper to accomplish a more economical and effective organization thereof, and to make rules and regulations governing the use of roads, trails, and other works, including the fixing and collection of tolls where deemed necessary and adviseable in the public interest.

other works, including the fixing and collection of tolls where deemed necessary and advisable in the public interest.

SEC. 4. That all estimates of appropriations for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails and other works, as heretofore submitted by the Secretary of War, shall hereafter be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

However, before asking this committee for this hearing, I made a personal inquiry of and request upon the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not this proposed transfer would work any additional burden upon the people of Alaska or involve any additional employees or expense upon the Government, and he has answered my request very frankly and fully and I think perfectly satisfactorily, as will appear from his letter of May 16, which is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 16, 1932.

Hon. Edward T. Taylor,
House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Taylor: At your request I am pleased to write you concerning the effect of the transfer of the Alaska Road Commission from the War Department to the Interior Department, as provided by H. R. 11717. It is difficult, of course, to forecast in detail the organization which would be maintained by this department is the transfer ware made effective. This is partially like the contraction of the course of the cou ment if the transfer were made effective. This is particularly true since the appropriation for 1933 carried in the War Department bill has been reduced from $800,000 for 1932 to $354,310 for 1933. I can only speak, therefore, on the basis of the present administrative set-up.

I am advised by the Secretary of War that normally six Army officers are employed on the work of the Alaska Road Commission, officers are employed on the work of the Alaska Road Commission, but that at present there are five actually on duty. He also states that there are 99 civilian employees, all listed as temporary.

The actual expenditures for permanent employees in 1931, according to the Budget report, was $109,290, with an estimate of $110,770 and $111,540 for 1932 and 1933, respectively. The salaries and wages for temporary employees carried by the Budget report for 1931 was $817,463, with estimates of $762,275 and $600,505 for 1932 and 1933, respectively. Civilian employees occupy positions of senior engineers, superintendents, assistant associate engineers, disbursing clerks, mechanics, etc.

senior engineers, superintendents, assistant associate engineers, disbursing clerks, mechanics, etc.

If this activity is transferred to the Interior Department it is my intention to assign the administration to the Governor of Alaska, who is at Juneau, where the headquarters office of the road commission is located. We would expect to operate through so much of the present civilian organization as could be maintained under the prospective reduced appropriations, relieving the Army officers now assigned. This plan does not contemplate establishing new positions and it would be expected that the total present cutlay for salaries, including the pay and allowances of the commissioned officers, would not be exceeded. No curtailment of the road, bridge, and trail construction program is contemplated, except such as may be necessitated by reduced appropriations. This transfer has and trail construction program is contemplated, except such as may be necessitated by reduced appropriations. This transfer has not been urged as a matter of economy in road building but to make possible a smaller deficit on the Alaska railroad and in the interest of effective coordination of related activities now handled by two departments. Nevertheless, there is no foundation whatever for the assumption by citizens and organizations in Alaska, either that a change in the road-building program would result to the detriment of the Territory, or that administration under this department would be more expensive to the Government by reason of operation under a civilian administration: in fact, it would be of operation under a civilian administration; in fact, it would be our endeavor to continue the efficient operation now maintained by the War Department.

Sincerely yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

On the next day, May 17, 1932, the Secretary wrote a somewhat similar letter to Senator Howell, as follows:

We would expect to operate through so much of the present civilian organization as could be maintained under the prospective reduced appropriations, relieving the Army officers now assigned. This plan does not contemplate establishing new positions and it would be expected that the total present outlay for salaries, including the pay and allowances of the commissioned officers, would not be exceeded. No curtailment of the road, bridge, and trail construction program is contemplated, except such as may be necessitated by reduced appropriations. This transfer has not been urged as a matter of economy in road building but to make possible a smaller deficit on the Alaska Railroad and in the not been urged as a matter of economy in road building but to make possible a smaller deficit on the Alaska Rallroad and in the interest of effective coordination of related activities now handled by two departments. Nevertheless, there is no foundation whatever for the assumption by citizens and organizations in Alaska either that a change in the road-building program would result to the detriment of the Territory, or that administration under this department would be more expensive to the Government by reason of operation under a civilian administration; in fact, it would be our endeavor to continue the efficient operation now maintained by the War Department.

Sincerely yours.

Sincerely yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

I also asked the chairman of this Committee on the Territories to refer my bill to both the Secretaries of War and Interior for their official report thereon, which he did, and both have reported favorably.

The Secretary of the Interior reported as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 5, 1932.

Hon. GUINN WILLIAMS

Chairman Committee on the Territories,
House of Representatives.

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: With reference to your request for a report on H. R. 11717, transferring the Alaska Road Commission to the Interior Department, I believe this action to be advisable if we hope to succeed in our efforts to place the Alaska Railroad on a self-sustaining basis. Of equal importance is the effective control which Congress would have in considering the budgets for the main transportation systems in the Territory. The railroad, river, and highway systems would be under one head and expenditures could be properly correlated. The Secretary of War is agreeable to this action, and I inclose a copy of his letter to me of April 4. The change in the draft of the bill mentioned therein has been incorporated in the bill now before you.

been incorporated in the bill now before you.

The Richardson Highway was built from Federal funds and parallels the Alaska Railroad into the interior of Alaska. The rates on the railroad were increased something more than a year ago and since then competition has developed by the establishment of trucking services over the highway which already has reduced the railroad revenue. It is not proposed to fix excessive tolls over the highway, but some tolls are necessary to provide proper regulation. No administrative curtailment of the roadbuilding program for Alaska is expected to result from this transfer.

transfer.

I recommend enactment of this legislation.

Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Secretary.

The Secretary of War reported thereon as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 12, 1932.

Hon. GUINN WILLIAMS.

Chairman Committee on the Territories,

House of Representatives.

Dear Mr. Williams: In response to your request of April 30, 1932, for a report on the bill H. R. 11717, providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and conferred by law upon the board of road commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior and for other nurroses you are equised as follows: of the Interior, and for other purposes, you are advised as follows:
While it is believed that the activities referred to have been efficiently and economically administered under existing law, the War Department interposes no objection to the enactment of the proposed bill.

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. HURLEY, Secretary of War.

Mr. Campbell. Does the War Department favor the transfer of the highway to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior?
Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; the reports here from both Secretaries officially

Mr. TAYLOR. 1es, the reports here from both Secretaries officially recommend this transfer.

Mr. Driver. I assume that the purpose of the bill is to effect economies in operation?

Mr. Taylor. Yes; and to bring about a proper cooperation in these two closely related activities both owned and operated by the Government

Mr. Driver (interposing). Do you find some fault with the system of road construction and operation there now?

Mr. TAYLOR. No; I am not finding fault. Mr. Wickersham, the Delegate from Alaska, is a member of this committee and he is here now in the room, and he will address the committee shortly. He thoroughly knows the situation and can correct me if I am in error. I know that railroad is not at all self-supporting. During the past several years my committee has been appropriating about a million dollars a year for the operation of this railroad, 470 miles long, over and above its receipts, and that parallel highway nearly 400 miles long is costing the Government a very large amount of money every year, and that country is not developing the way it should. It is a question in my mind as to how long the Government should or how long Congress will keep up both of those highways at that expense.

Col. O. F. Olson, the superintendent and general manager of the Alaska Railroad, has during the past two years cut down the number of employees on the railroad and reduced the operation number of employees on the railroad and reduced the operation costs very greatly, and we have this year cut his appropriation down about one-half of the former amount. The subcommittee on the Interior Department appropriations allowed only $500,000 for next year for the Alaska Railroad. Mr. Olson is doing a splendid work by trying in every way possible to effect economies and reduce the expenses of that railroad as well as the branch and the boats on the Yukon and the Tanana Rivers operated in connection with it.

This Richardson Highway is only open about four months in the summer time. It cost the Government $2,732,000, and its maintenance and improvement has cost an additional $3,820,000, making the total cost to June 30, 1931, $6,552,000. Of that amount it is estimated that Alaska has contributed $2,600,000. There was expended upon that road during the fiscal year 1930, for maintenance and otherwise, about $303,000.

Mr. Parsons. How long is this road?

Mr. Taylor. About 400 miles.

Mr. Parsons. And there are more than 100 employees as a maintenance cost?

maintenance cost?

Mr. Taylor. Yes; there are now 5 or 6 Army engineers and 99 civilian employees. The Secretary of the Interior and his executive assistants think they can dispense with these Army officers without any detriment to the Government or the work and allow the civilians to go ahead without filling those six places. They feel that the present civilian engineers and other civilian employees can handle this work very efficiently.

Of course, this committee understands that this Richardson Highway is not the only activity the Alaska Road Commission has. It has roads and trails running all over Alaska. There are 1,750 miles of wagon roads, 1,400 miles of dog-sled roads, and 7,300 miles of trails that have altogether cost $17,273,794.62 up to June 30, 1931, and of that amount Alaska has contributed $3,769,418.62. The greatest part of all that work is done by civilians. In the The greatest part of all that work is done by civilians. In the pioneer days it was best to put all that work under the War Department. I think the Army engineers have made a splendid record, but it is believed we have reached a period when that work could be much more appropriately done by civilians under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. It is the idea of Secretary Wilbur that these road-building and

It is the idea of Secretary Wilbur that these road-building and maintenance activities should be put under the direct personal supervision of the Governor of Alaska. The present governor, George A. Parks, is an able engineer, and he holds his office under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. He has lived in the Territory about 30 years and is there all the time and is nearer in touch with the people all over the Territory and personally knows the local conditions better than anyone else could.

Mr. DRIVER. Do you understand that the economies that would be effected by this proposal would be small? Is it not more a matter of coordinating these activities?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. It is believed to be a step in the direction of consolidation and systematic civilian government throughout Alaska. Personally, I believe this proposed transfer would bring about a great many economies. When it is considered that the people of Alaska contribute out of their meager receipts quite a people of Alaska contribute out of their meager receipts quite a large sum toward the construction and maintenance of those roads, trails, and bridges, I feel perfectly confident that Governor Parks could and would handle that work much more satisfactorily to the local people and get more work and improvements for the same amount of money than the Army engineers can possibly do. That is not the slightest reflection upon the Army officers or the board of road commissioners. It is just ordinary common sense and human nature. People very naturally try to spend their own money as carefully and judiciously as they possibly can.

Mr. Driver. In what respect does their operation under these separate organizations and administrations conflict and interfere separate organizations and administrations conflict and interfere with proper administration on either or both the highway and the

Mr. Taylor, My understanding is that there is some lack of harmony between the subordinate officials of these two departments in the operation of the two Government-owned systems of ments in the operation of the two Government-owned systems or transportation and that as a result Uncle Sam is getting the worst of it. I haven't sufficient information to go into details. But I know both the railroad and all the roads and trails are most awfully expensive. We have a hard fight, both in the Appropriations Committee and in Congress, every year to get these appropriations. There is a very determined and growing sentiment in Congress that the Government should either get out of that railroad and blokway transportation business or very greatly. ment in Congress that the Government should either get out of that railroad and highway transportation business or very greatly reduce that enormous expense. These appropriations come very near being beaten every year. They have been reduced over half this year below what they were last year, and unless times greatly improve, or my committee can show substantial economies, the entire amount may be cut out next year. I am trying desperately to save both roads. Alaska needs all the roads and trails we can possibly give them. They have got to have them to develop that Territory.

Mr. Driver. Does any highway in Alaska operate under a toll system?

Mr. TAYLOR. No; I do not think so. But times have never before been as they are now. They may have to operate less expensively or not at all. This bill would give the Secretary of the Interior the same authority to fix a toll or rates and conditions on the roads the same that he now has over the railroad.

Mr. Driver. Is that matter addressing itself to the local administrative but the level and the severemental activities.

istration or both the local and the governmental activities?

Mr. Taylor. Secretary Wilbur, in his letter before the committee, officially and definitely states that he would put the whole road and trail business throughout the entire Territory under the direct supervision of the Governor of Alaska, who would be officially responsible to the Secretary, and the governor would carry on this civilian organization. The six Army officers would be retired and the present civilian engineers and employees would continue the work under the supervision of the governor, as I understand his

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do they not charge a certain license on the trucks operating upon that highway?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know the license system of Alaska.

Mr. Wickersham. Every truck pays a Territorial license, as in the United States; but there is no particular license charge on account of that highway.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the income from that license go to upkeep-ing that highway?

Mr. Wickersham. No.

Mr. Campbell. Have you a gasoline tax in Alaska? Mr. Wickersham. No. Mr. Parsons. What is your annual license fee for cars?

Mr. Parsons. What is your annual license fee for cars?
Mr. Wickersham. An automobile pays $15 a year, I think, and the license for a truck costs about the same. The proceeds from this source go into the general Territorial fund. The Territory itself makes large appropriations for this road.

Mr. Taylor. I think the Territory of Alaska appropriates all it reasonably can for all the roads. The funds of the Territory are very limited, but they contribute as much as they can, and I think the people of Alaska should have more to say about where and how their money is spent.

Mr. Wickersham. The Territory has appropriated about 31 per cent of the total cost of this.

Mr. Taylor. The Alaskans proudly call the Richardson Highway

Mr. Taylor. The Alaskans proudly call the Richardson Highway the finest dirt road in America. It was started in 1905, the first trail was broken through from Valdez to Fairbanks in 1907, the first wagon team went through in 1910, and the first automobile made the trip in 1913. That was several years before we built the Alaska Railroad. That railroad was built not for profits but to develop Alaska. I was a member of the committee that drafted and put through the bill providing for the construction of that road. We had a long and hard fight over it.

Mr. Douglass. The highway was in existence before the railroad?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; several years. I think the railroad was completed in 1923.

Mr. Wickersham. The Richardson Highway was constructed under the act of 1905 and the Alaska Railroad was constructed under the act of 1914.

Mr. Parsons. Of what material is that highway constructed?
Mr. Taylor. It is a good dirt road. I rode over it last July.
Many thousands of people ride over it every summer.
Mr. Parsons. It is not a hard-surfaced road.

Mr. Taylor. No. It is an expensive road to maintain. I think it crosses four ranges and there are several fords and a ferry or it crosses four ranges and there are several fords and a ferry or two. We got into the rivers three or four times. The men in charge of the road had to provide caterpillar tractors to pull us through several streams. The highway crosses many streams. Some are bridged and some are not. It is a summer road, opened each year at great expense, and kept open about four months. The highway has lately been extended from Fairbanks northerly to Circle City, making the road from there to Valdez 531 miles long. It is practically the only long road in the world that has no crossroads at all. When you start out on that 400-mile road you can turn neither to the right nor to the left but keep on going—if you can.

can turn neither to the right nor to the left but keep on going—if you can.

Mr. Dayver. Is this maintenance a joint enterprise between the Territory of Alaska and the Federal Government?

Mr. Taylor. Yes; to a certain extent. The Territory contributes what it can toward it and also toward the maintenance of all trails and roads throughout all Alaska. The Territory contributes,
I think, as much as it reasonably can. But the War Department is in control of all those roads and trails, while the Governor of Alaska is not under the War Department, and he has little or nothing to do with it. These Army officers are in command of this highway and all the others.

Mr. Douglass, I am wondering what the Army is doing in

Mr. Douglass. I am wondering what the Army is doing in Alaska anyway.

Mr. TAYLOR. The act of Congress of 1905, authorizing the construction of these highways in Alaska provided, "that all moneys derived from and collected for liquor licenses, occupation, or trade licenses," and so forth should be used in building roads. trade licenses" and so forth, should be used in building roads, bridges, and trails. That law is still on the statute books.

Mr. Parsons. Was this intended as a national-defense proposition?

Mr. TAYLOR. The primary object of the construction of all those roads and trails and that railroad was to develop that Territory. But the whole matter of road building was put under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and that was entirely proper at that time. That was in 1905, and still is, a vast moun-tainous undeveloped region, and they wanted good engineers and they wanted an iron hand in control of the system. But military control is not necessary there now.

Mr. Douglass. They thought, perhaps, that the Bolsheviki were going to try to retake that country.

Mr. Taylor. The element of national defense is considered more

Mr. Taylor. The element of national defense is considered more or less in nearly all road building. The War Department has run this Richardson Highway ever since its start and there has been a feeling for many years that it is not now a necessary or proper function for the War Department. The matter of putting it under the Department of Agriculture was considered, but, finally, these executive cabinet officers have, with the approval of President Hoover himself, decided that this road building that was originally to be done largely from the receipts of liquor licenses, and was put judger the War Department, should now be transand was put under the War Department, should now be transferred bag and baggage to the Department of the Interior and relieve the Army engineers and the War Department of that relieve the Army engineers and the War Department of that work, and let them be assigned to work at other places.

I think it is unnecessary for me to say that there is nothing but the kindest feeling on the part of the Interior Department Appropriations Committee and all of its five members for Alaska. We gave the Territory practically every item and nearly all that the Budget recommended for Alaska for this next year. We cut from other places $6,273,920 under the Budget estimate.

Mr. Smith. You cut the Geological Survey.

Mr. Taylor. Yes. We reduced the amounts somewhat for some activities that we thought might very well be furloughed a year or two, under the existing condition of the Federal Treasury, especially that $100,000 asked for to make fundamental research into abstract geologic science. That was entirely too visionary to spend so much money on during these tragic financial times. We did not in any way injure the development of Alaska. There was no thought of harming Alaska, or retarding her development of here was no thought of harming Alaska, or retarding her development. was no thought of harming Alaska, or retarding her develop-ment, and we do not feel that we did. My sworn duty compels me to always guard the Federal Treasury. At the same time, I want to see "America's last frontier" grow.

want to see "America's last frontier" grow.

Last year the Interior Department annual appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1932 carried $89,247,606.73. This year the same bill for the fiscal year of 1933, as it was signed by the President on April 22 of this year, carried $45,533,672.32. However, I should say that $20,000,000 of that last year's bill was for flood control which was strictly not chargeable to the Interior Department. But, figuring last year's bill at $69,247,606.73, the reduction made in that bill this year for the next fiscal year is 34.2 per cent. If the other departments of our Government and the other committees of Congress would make as good a showing proportionately toward economy as the Interior Department bill makes this year, the current expenses of our Government would be reduced approximately half a billion dollars. ernment would be reduced approximately half a billion dollars.

ernment would be reduced approximately half a billion dollars.

Mr. Driver. Both the railroad and the highway were constructed for the development of Alaska?

Mr. Taxlor. Yes. There was no expectation that they would be profitable for several years at least, and I am not at all surprised that they are not yet self-sustaining.

Mr. Driver. To conserve the convenience and business welfare of the people of Alaska?

Mr. Taxlor. Yes, sir. No one can visit Alaska without being proud of those red-blooded Americans up there—especially the old "sour doughs"—the pioneers of 35 years ago.

Mr. Driver. If we should place a toll on the users of that highway, do you not think that will interfere to some extent with the development of Alaska?

Mr. Taylor. That would of course depend upon the amount of the toll and upon whom and where it was placed. Secretary Wilbur says, "There is no foundation whatever for the as-sumption by citizens and organizations in Alaska, either that a which says, there is no foundation whatever for the assumption by citizens and organizations in Alaska, either that a change in the road-building program would result to the detriment of the Territory, or that administration under this department would be more expensive to the Government by reason of operation under a civilian administration; in fact, it would be our endeavor to continue the efficient operation now maintained by the War Department."

I am perfectly confident the people of Alaska can implicitly rely upon that formal official statement of Secretary Wilbur.

Mr. Chairman, it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. Our Federal Treasury, in fact our country, is now in a tragically critical condition financially, in fact an unprecedented crisis. Congress has absolutely got to bring about economies. We are imperatively commanded by the American people to very greatly reduce the $4.400,000.000-a-year current expense of running our Government, and to balance our National Budget. If the membership of this Congress does not do so, the changed membership of the next Congress will. Everybody defantly demands that no taxes be increased and no salaries be reduced. Yet everybody wants and appeals to us for the same large appropriations that no taxes be increased and no salaries be reduced. Yet every-body wants and appeals to us for the same large appropriations they have been making during our flush times. But the burden of getting those appropriations devolves upon a very few men. I don't know how long Congress will continue to appropriat-these large sums of money for Alaska. Last year our appropria-tions for Alaska were nearly $12,500,000. That is not at all the fault of the people of Alaska. There are, as I recollect, something like 800 Federal employees drawing salaries for doing something in connection with Alaska.

Mr. Finney. But a large number of those employees are taking care of the Eskimos and the Indians, the same as the work is done for the Indians here. Others take care of public lands, They are not dealing exclusively with 30,000 or 40,000 white people in Alaska.

Mr. Taylor. There are not 30,000 or 40,000 white people in Alaska. I doubt if there are 25,000. Alaska has not asked for and is not responsible for and ought not to be charged with all that swarm of Government employees.

Mr. Driver. We have Alaska, and, like many of the activities in our own country, in view of existing national emergency, we feel that it is well to curtail those activities to the very bone; but this question also enters, How far are we furthering or staying progress in Alaska? We have these investments in Alaska, covering both roads and the railroad, which are for the purpose of developing Alaska. Suppose we should allow them to fall into disuse and deteriorate? Here, however, is the thing that runs through my mind—the use of the toll there would be for one of two purposes, namely, either to contribute to the maintenance of highways and thereby reduce the expense to that extent, or to interfere with the operation of truck lines on the highways to an extent that the railroad would get the business. In either event, the Government would benefit. We all want to effectuate that. The question is how far that may be done under the provisions of this bill. To what extent do the trucks on the highways deprive the railroad of tonnage?

Mr. TAYLOR, I can not give any definite data on that mat The trucks do not take any traffic away from the railroad in the wintertime or for about eight months of each year, and it is equally certain that they and the boats do take a great deal of business away from the railroad during three or four months of each year. But I have not the figures as to just how much.

Driver. To what extent is this particular highway usable during the course of a year?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is usable only in the summer time. Mr. Driver. How long is that? Mr. Wickersham. About four months in the year.

Mr. Taylor. Mr. Chairman, I think we are giving too much attention to just this one road. This bill pertains to all the thousands of miles of roads and trails and bridges and ferries all over a Territory one-fifth the size of the entire United States. Alaska is twice as large as Texas and as big as 500 Rhode Islands. Alaska a Territory one-fifth the size of the entire United States. Alaska is twice as large as Texas and as big as 500 Rhode Islands. Alaska is an Indian word meaning "the great country," and it is grandly and sublimely great in every respect. Our object is to coordinate that whole system so that we may be able to show some improvements, economies, and other substantial benefits that will justify us in making this transfer and thereby keep up all those means of transportation and enable a few of us to continue to obtain from Congress these appropriations which we have only gotten by the skin of our teeth this year. The United States and Canada are now cooperating in the construction of a great international highway to extend from Seattle, through Canada, to Fairbanks. Canada has already spent a very large amount of money in building several hundreds of miles of that road, and when it reaches our border, of course, it comes under our jurisdiction and we are expected to continue that highway so that there will be a good, safe automobile highway from Seattle to Fairbanks.

That is one thing the Department of the Interior has especially in mind. It feels that these highways should be coordinated and under a centralized control. There is a great deal of data on this international highway matter that we are now working on. There are, roughly, about 200 miles of that highway in the Territory of Alaska, between the border and Fairbanks, and a part of it is now constructed. This is a large and very important proposition.

Mr. Campeell. What is the nature of our national income from Alaska?

Mr. Taylor, I prefer to let Judge Wickersham answer that.

Alaska?

Mr. Taylor. I prefer to let Judge Wickersham answer that. Mr. Wickersham. I will tell you that when I speak.

Mr. Taylor. I have at my office some information on the different activities of every department of the Government functioning

Mr. CAMPBELL. Could you put that in the record?
Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. There is a human side of this question, the financial side, the practical and businesslike side. I feel that financial side, the practical and businessike side. I feel that while you should, of course, take into consideration the wishes of the people of Alaska, you should also take into consideration the wishes of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, and you must be mindful of the conditions of our Federal Treasury.

Mr. Douglass. Is there any other part of the United States where a tay is placed on public roads?

a tax is placed on public roads?

Mr. Taylor. I do not know. I have recently heard about building toll bridge

Mr. Driver. Have you procured from any source, or have you an estimate of the amount of money that would probably be realized from a toll in connection with these highways?

Mr. Taylor. No; I do not know that any toll would be necessary.

If Congress quits appropriating money for either the railroad or the roads and trails of Alaska, or all of them, it may become necessary to establish tolls or abandon its roads. Secretary Wilbur says it will depend on the amount of money Congress appropriates. That will depend upon the amount of money we have to appropriate. I wish you would all read the book Alaska—Uncle Sam's Attic, by Mrs. Mary Lee Davis, a former resident of my congressional district. It is the best description of Alaska that I have ever read.

Alaska is a country of marvelous and enormous potential wealth. But it is not developed and it never can be developed without a vast system of roads and trails. There are many millions of dol-lars worth of fish, minerals, and furs taken out of Alaska every year, but the people who take it all out do not leave very much in Alaska for it all. At least, that's the way it seems to me. They are taking out all that enormous wealth, Alaska's own birthright, and shipping it all away.

Mr. Wickersham. They are shipping it to the United States. Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, that is true. They ship many millions of dollars of gold to the United States Mint and sell it to Uncle Sam. They ship out millions of dollars of copper from the fabulously rich Kennecott Copper Mines. They ship the furs to St. Louis, the greatest fur market in the world, and sell them to the large the greatest fur market in the world, and sell them to the large organized fur dealers. The organized salmon industries ship the fish to San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle, and sell it to the fish combinations. One author says, "The canners buy all their supplies outside Alaska, and hire three-fourths of their help outside Alaska under the "yellow-dog" contracts; a large percentage of such help is Asiatic, hired at slave's wage and paid off—not in Alaska but in Seattle or San Francisco. They bring nothing to the country and they take all they dare from it." Two-thirds of the entire world's supply of canned salmon comes from Alaska. But where does either Alaska or the Federal Treasfrom Alaska. But where does either Alaska or the Federal Treasury come in on all that big business?

Mr. Driver. And without that operation their returns would be very much diminished.

Mr. Taylor. How do you mean? Mr. DRIVER. From the enterprises.

Mr. Taylor. Possibly so. Mr. Douglass. When you say white people you mean our citi-

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You mean Chinese, Filipinos, Mexicans, and such?

such?

Mr. Taylor. By white people I mean white people. Not Chinese, Filipinos, Mexicans, Japanese, Indians, or Esquimos. I did not see any Negroes up there. Those people that are taken to Alaska on the fishing boats that I saw are not white people or citizens of this country. They are, practically speaking, contract laborers. I do not want to criticize things in Alaska. I want to be helpful to the Alaskans. I would not have the people of Alaska feel that we are working against them in any way; but the House Appropriations Committee is the Budget Committee of our Government. It is the real watchdog of the Federal Treasury, and all of us members of that committee, especially the Interior Department subcommittee, are having a hectic time trying to justify to Congress appropriations of about $12,000,000 a year to Alaska.

Mr. Wickersham. You are getting that much gold every year out of Alaska.

Mr. Wickers out of Alaska.

Mr. Taylor. Uncle Sam does not get any gold that he does not pay for. What I mean is, it seems to me that those great interests are not helping to build up Alaska as they should. I do not see where those who take so many millions of dollars out of Alaska leave much for Alaska.

Mr. Wickersham. They do not, but they build up Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco very much.

PARSONS. But the money does not get to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CROWE. Do you mean that the interests that are taking coal and other resources out of Alaska are on the same basis for purposes of comparison? Judge Wickersham has shown us how these people go to Alaska, get the fish, and leave nothing. Do you mean that the Government keeps up a road for some such people who take the resources from Alaska and leave nothing? Is it on the same basis as the fishing industry?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; to some extent, but not much of that material

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; to some extent, but not income the first is sent out over the Richardson Highway.

Mr. Campbell. That is all for the benefit of certain private parties like the Guggenheims and the fishery interests?

Mr. Wickersham. They do not use this road—the Guggenheims and the fishery people.

Mr. TAYLOR. The copper people have their own railroads and boats and everything else, including a commissary.

Mr. Finley. To what extent does the tourists' crowd contribute to the receipts of the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. Taylor. The tourists' business is increasing a little all the time associally those gainst to the Market Market Market and the Market Ma time, especially those going to the Mount McKinley National Park. Mount McKinley is the highest mountain, 20,300 feet, and the most sublime sight on this Western Hemisphere, and in the years to come untold millions of people from all over the world will journey to Alaska to see it. That sight-seeing business is a will journey to Alaska to see it. That sight-seeing business is a very important enterprise and should be helped and encouraged I we reasonably can.

Mr. Parsons. I should like to have the total cost of the railroad

Mr. Parsons. I should like to have the total cost of the railroad there and the maintenance cost.

Mr. Taylor. The original cost, including equipment, was $57,-000,000. I will put in the record the amount we have been paying out on account of it every year. The Interior Department sub-committee handles all of the appropriations for that railroad.

Mr. Parsons. Has that railroad ever paid interest on the invest-

Mr. Taylor. No. It was run well but very expensively until Colonel Olsen took charge of it about three years ago. He is a wonderfully competent engineer and he is doing a fine job, cutting down expenses wherever possible. We were for some time appropriating about a million dollars from the Federal Treasury each year on account of this railroad, but Colonel Olsen has reduced that he have been account of the railroad but Colonel Olsen has reduced that he have been to the colonel of the same account of the railroad but colonel Olsen has reduced that he have been to the colonel of the same account of the railroad but colonel Olsen has reduced that he was the same account of the same duced that by about 50 per cent. That million dollars was over and above the receipts of the railroad. We appropriated $500,000 for this railroad for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Finley. How is he maintaining the railroad?

Mr. Taylor. He is doing a very good job. He is a thoroughly experienced railroad man and very economical, and wonderfully industrious. He comes from a country that produces thrifty and reliable men.

FARMING IN ALASKA

Mr. Chairman, in the terrific jam of official business that is Mr. Chairman, in the terrific jam of official business that is heaped upon us all the time, especially upon the members of the Appropriations Committee, I have never been able to take the time to make the intensive study of Alaska that my official responsibilities would warrant. But I have thought a great deal about that vast region and the many thousands of courageous and indomitable citizens of our States that have gone up there and staked their lives upon the development of that, "Our last frontier." And when I think of the hopes, ambitions, determinations, and character of those people, most of them from the Western States, many from Colorado, and contemplate the marvelous variety of natural resources, in fact, the fabulous latent wealth of that Territory, and then look at the conditions there, now 65 years since it came under our flag, I can not resist feeling that there is something wrong somewhere.

now 65 years since it came under our flag, I can not resist feeling that there is something wrong somewhere.

The fault, if there is any, is not in the Territory and not much, if any, is chargeable to those people. I think the principal fault is here in Washington. I do not believe that Alaska can or will ever develop the way it should, or have a prosperous and increasing citizenship unless and until our policy toward that Territory is changed. They have absolutely got to have very much cheaper and better means of transportation between the States and the Territory; and also throughout all the main parts of the Territory. It can not develop without that, and the local residents have not the means and can not construct all the necessary truck roads and Malemute roads and trails and bridges. Road building and maintenance are both frightfully expensive.

and maintenance are both frightfully expensive.

and maintenance are both frightfully expensive.

Another thing: The people have got to develop farming and dairying and eat good healthy home-produced food, and quit shipping it all in from New York or somewhere. During our visit to Alaska last summer, I inquired of residents in some 12 or 15 towns what per cent of the foodstuffs that are consumed by the people who come from the States is imported from the States, and I think in every place I was told 100 per cent. The Territory can never develop and the people can never be prosperous as long as they live out of cartons and tin cans. The freight and express and passenger rates on both the ocean ships and river boats and on the railroads are, in my judgment, utterly prohibitive of any reasonable development of the Territory. Of course, they justify that on account of the very small amount of business and the high cost of maintaining the transportation facilities, which is true. Nevertheless, I think the amount of business will continue to be very small, and the Territory will remain practically is true. Nevertheress, I think the amount of business will continue to be very small, and the Territory will remain practically at a standstill for many years to come if that condition continues. Senator Dickinson of Iowa, when he was a Member of the House and was chairman of the House Department of Agriculture appropriations subcommittee, went with his committee up to Alaska two or three years ago and made quite an extensive trip over the Territory, examining so-called farms (they went there for that express purpose) and upon his return he stated to me that on all the farms he yisited there he saw only one woman. Of course, he did not claim to have seen all the farms in Alaska. But anybody who knows anything whatever about a farm knows that a farm without a woman on it isn't any farm at all.

Alaska has a very great variety of climates, and crops of practically all kinds that grow in the Northern States can be raised in abundance in some parts of the Territory. But the present inhabitants are not raising them in any appreciable quantities. Of course, no one can expect the old sourdough to ever give up the lure of gold and go to farming. Nevertheless, that situation up there has got to be changed somehow. For several years I have had a kind of a solution in my own mind if it becomes necessary. It may be only a visionary hallucination or an iridescent dream. But it is to this effect: The present population, who went up there from the States, are adventurous and fearless pioneers who have the heroic pioneer spirit. They went there mostly to get into the mining or some business connected with it.

I doubt if one out of a thousand ever went there to farm, and they never will or can successfully farm; and unless we can induce a class of people to settle up there who are accustomed to that kind of a climate and are contented to live there and are willing kind of a climate and are contented to live there and are willing and competent to do the kind of hard, constant, and confining work and lead the kind of a life that is imperatively necessary to build up that country, my thought is that our State Department ought to before long systematically take up with Norway or Sweden a policy of modifying our immigration laws so as to permit as a start, say, 500 select, young, experienced farmers from within 300 or 400 miles of the Arctic Circle, and who, with their ancestors, have lived there for many generations under the same conditions and in the identical kind of a climate that Alaska has, and arrange to have them and their wives go and settle on suitable and arrange to have them and their wives go and settle on suitable lands in Alaska. There is more good agricultural land in Alaska than there is in all Norway, Sweden, and Denmark combined. Those people are honest, very industrious, thrifty, saving, hardworking, law-abiding, God-fearing, home-loving, splendid people, who have been very successful in their own country. They pay their debts and keep their account in the black and attend to their debts and keep their account in the black and attend to their own business and don't waste their money. They make the best kind of citizens and would all become well off.

Sweden is only one-fortieth the size of Alaska. Alaska has possibly 28,000 people from the States. Sweden has over 6,000,000 people. Sweden has more cattle to the acre than any other nation in the world. They ship considerable butter to New York City and sell it at a profit. Those people can and will be glad to live in the rigorous climate and make the best and most successful farmers and they will raise the finest dairy stock and fine families. They would have about ten times the opportunities for success they now have in their country. They would furnish all kinds of they now have in their country. They would furnish all kinds of farm and dairy produce to all the people of Alaska. They would also develop the metalliferous mines and coal mines and lumber and many other industries and make a substantial citizenship and solvent backbone for the entire Territory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But at the present time we do not need any more farm products.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of course the people here in the States do not need any more farm products than we have and there is not the slightest danger of there ever being any farm products shipped here from Alaska; but the people of Alaska need more farm products. That is the reason I would limit the number of Norwegian farmers to settle there to the number necessary to supply Alaska only with agricultural and dairy products.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They get their foodstuffs from the United States?
Mr. TAYLOR. Sure they now get their foodstuffs from the States at an outrageous expense for freight, and that is all right for us.
But I am thinking and talking about the future welfare and possible development of our own Territory of Alaska and of our own people up there. Of course, they could not ship their farm products to the States, but they could supply Alaska and possibly a part of northwestern Canada. Generally speaking, our people who went to Alaska did not go there to farm and they are not farming. Most of them went there to make a stake and hoped to make it quickly. The average boy and girl of to-day raised in this country with our splendid climate and all our modern conveniences and comforts and educational and social and all possible up-to-date advantages are not going and this generation never will go to aliaska to farm. No one can blame them for not wanting to go off to some isolated place and take a piece of land in the primitive condition that it has been in for millions of years, and put in many years of the hardest, most backbreaking, and heartbreaking work on earth trying to make a farm and a home. And even after they get the four to producing something they must keep up they they get the farm to producing something they must keep up that constant hard work 16 hours every day and 7 days every week and 365 days every year, and only spend about $7 a year for clothes and nothing for anything else. Practically speaking, "They must live with the cow, the sow, and the hen."

live with the cow, the sow, and the hen."

I speak from sad personal experience, because that is the way I spent the first 19 years of my life. The frontier pioneer farmers of our country deserve a monument as high as the Washington Monument, and their wives deserve a monument twice that high. And yet I do not believe the hopes of either the people of Alaska or of the States will ever be realized unless and until there is a contented and successful farming and poultry-raising, dairying population in Alaska sufficient to supply all the products of that kind that all its population can consume. I intend to follow up this subject somewhat if nobody from the United States is willing to actually farm in Alaska and see if I can get some husky Swedes to do it.

to do it.

Mr. Finley. What portion of Alaska is timbered? Mr. Wickersham. All the southeastern part of Alaska is timbered. In the interior there is a small covering of timber, but not much, except along the streams.

Mr. Taylor. I feel that I should say with the utmost kindly feeling toward the people of Alaska that from nearly 24 years of experience in the House of Representatives, and half of that time experience in the House of Representatives, and hair of that time being a member of the Budget Appropriations Committee of Con-gress, and many years a member of the Interior Department Ap-propriations Subcommittee, of which I at present have the honor of being chairman, we have had a long struggle in Congress secur-ing these vast appropriations for the upbuilding of Alaska, and I feel that we could have proportionately kept up this support un-der ordinary conditions, but in the present unprecedented crisis of our country I feel practically certain that very great economies of our country I feel practically certain that very great economies and changes have got to be brought about in Alaska.

The appropriations for the roads, bridges, trails, and so forth in Alaska carried in the War Department bill have for several years past been $800,000. For the next fiscal year, as you are all aware, the Bureau of the Budget reduced that amount to $656,000. The War Department Appropriations Subcompilities recommended that War Department Appropriations Subcommittee recommended that that amount be cut for the next year to $354,310. And when the bill came up for hearing on the floor of the House on the 19th day of May, 1932, the Chairman of the Economy Committee, Mr. McDuffie, of Alabama, offered an amendment to the bill to strike out that entire amount and leave no appropriation whatever for any work of that kind upon any of the roads, trails, bridges, and so forth, of Alaska throughout the entire Territory for the next so forth, of Alaska throughout fiscal year.

And after a spirited debate on the matter, in which I took an active part, his amendment was only defeated by a vote of 56 to 50, showing very conclusively the sentiment of the House of Representatives on this subject. (See Congressional Record of May 19, 1932, pp. 10681-10683.) We have always had opposition to these Alaskan appropriations, but we never came so near not only being defeated but having them all wiped out. So that I say in all seriousness and kindness to the people of Alaska and to their all seriousness and kindness to the people of Alaska and to their friends everywhere that it is not wise nor in the interests of Alaska to oppose any reasonable efforts toward consolidation and coordination, and economies that we are absolutely compelled to practice to the utmost extent, not only in Alaska; but everywhere practice to the utmost extent, not only in Alaska; but everywhere under the American flag.

About 30 years ago, William Allen White, editor of the Wichita (Kans.) Gazette, wrote an article entitled, "What's the Matter with Kansas," and overnight it made him nationally and almost internationally famous. He and that article have been referred to ever since. I wish some genius would perform a similar service for Alaska and awaken and arouse our hundred and twenty-five million Americans to the boundless treasures and limitless possibilities of "the land of the midnight sun," the richest jewel that was ever owned by any nation in all history. Sometime some one will have that inspiration and electrify our country with it. But we Members of Congress are too frantically busy these days trying to find out "what's the matter with the United States" to give scarcely any attention to anything else.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES IN ALASKA

Last summer, before we visited Alaska, I asked the Bureau of the Budget and Mr. Ebert K. Burlew, the administrative assistant of the Secretary of the Interior, to furnish me a statement of the amount of expenditures, Federal and Territorial, in Alaska from 1925 to 1930, inclusive. And at the request of the chairman, and for the information of the committee, I ask to insert in the record that statement, which is as follows:

¹ Receipts from Territorial sources deposited in Territorial treasury of Alaska and expenditures made therefrom.

Concerning the Alaskan Railroad: The original cost was figured at $52,000,000, and the expense of equipment has been about $5,000,000 additional. For many years the expense of operation of the railroad and the boat lines in connection with it and the Curry Hotel and power plant and other activities have cost the Government about a million dollars a year more than the receipts. I think the hearings will show that the total appropriations that have been made to this railroad and its incidental accessories have been something over $70,000,000, and our total receipts have been approximately $14,000,000. In other words, the loss for the operation of the railroad from its construction up to October, 1931, was approximately $10,700,000 over and above the total receipts.

At the request of the committee, I also insert herewith a statement of the appropriations in the War Department acts for construction and maintenance of roads and trails in Alaska for 1924 to 1932, inclusive, which are as follows:

PROHIBITION

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, one of my opponents in the primary, both on the platform and in his literature, erroneously states:

My opponent, W. W. Hastings, recently voted in Congress not to permit the people to vote on prohibition. Thus, Mr. Hastings and I are at issue. When Mr. Hastings voted against submitting the prohibition question to a direct vote of the people he in effect asserted that the American people are incompetent and denied them their inalienable right to decide such questions for themselves. This was contrary to every Democratic principle.

This is not true. It is only another effort to mislead the people. There was no resolution voted on in Congress which "submitted the prohibition question to a direct vote of the people," but to conventions in the several States. We have, in the 143 years since the Federal Constitution was adopted, ratified 19 amendments, all submitted to the legislatures of the several States and none to conventions. In our State we have the primary system for the nomination of members of the State legislature, where the people have a direct vote. We have abolished the convention method. The Beck-Linthicum resolution provided as follows:

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution of the United States when ratified by conventions chosen for that purpose in the several States.

We have always had prohibition in the Indian Territory part of Oklahoma. The enabling act required a continuance of prohibition in that part of the State for 21 years from statehood. When the State constitution was adopted the people by popular vote permanently extended it to the entire State "and thereafter until the people of the State shall otherwise provide by amendment of this (State) constitution and proper State legislation." This same constitutional provision included and prohibited "beer, ale, and wine" (sec. 7, art. 1). Legislation was enacted by the State legislature to vitalize and enforce this provision.

The adoption of the Beck-Linthicum resolution would not affect the Oklahoma constitution nor repeal the State laws, and therefore would not legalize the sale of intoxicating beverages in the State of Oklahoma.

Our State constitution (sec. 1, art. 5) reserves to the people the power of the initiative and the referendum, a principle of government which I heartily approve, and no one who indorses such provisions can consistently object to a legal referendum on any issue.

The national Democratic platform in 1928 contained the following provision on prohibition:

The Republican Party, for eight years in complete control of the Government at Washington, presents the remarkable spectacle of feeling compelled in its national platform to promise obedience to a provision of the Federal Constitution which it has flagrantly disregarded and to apologize to the country for its failure to enforce laws enacted by the Congress of the United States. Speaking for the national Democracy, this convention pledges the party and its nominees to an honest effort to enforce the eighteenth amendment and all other provisions of the Federal Constitution and all laws enacted pursuant thereto.

As a representative of my district I have always followed the mandate as expressed in the vote of the people and will continue to reflect the sentiments of the people of my district and State on all questions as instructed through State legislation and the party platform.

THE HULL-O'CONNOR BEER BILL

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the Hull-O'Connor bill

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, on Monday the House will vote on the bill to legalize the sale of beer upon which a tax of 3 cents a pint is proposed. It is not probable that there will be a majority in favor of the measure, but the vote will serve to show the exact strength of the opponents of the Volstead Act as it has been interpreted by the Treasury Department and the courts.

It will also serve to advise the voters who favor the legislation of brewing just how many of the Members of the House obey the mandate of their constituents. That there are upward of 5,000,000 voters who have expressed themselves in favor of the modification of the Volstead Act was demonstrated through the presentation of a petition by the Congressional Districts Modification League, which contained the signatures of upward of 5,000,000 American citizens demanding that their representatives in Congress modify that unenforceable law to the extent of permitting the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer, and the Literary Digest poll indicated that the country, by a substantial majority, stands opposed to national prohibition.

While it is not expected that there will be a majority in favor of the Hull-O'Connor beer bill, it will undoubtedly disclose the fact that there has been a very great increase in the numbers of Members elected to the present Congress who favor modification of the Volstead Act as compared with the number elected to any previous Congress since the enactment of that unpopular and unenforceable law. The vote will enable the electorate to determine who among the Members of the present House shall be reelected if a majority of each constituency favors the change which the so-called "beer bill" proposes to bring about. It should not be forgotten that the enactment of that bill into law will accomplish two prime purposes: It will serve to aid the enforcement of the prohibition law as it is not and can not be enforced to-day and will add at least half a billion dollars to the Federal revenues and almost as much more to the income of the States which take advantage of the opportunity by some sort of license law under which the sale of light wines and beer may be regulated and controlled. Also it will curtail the profits of the bootlegger and make beer obtainable at moderate cost, and, above all, will serve to furnish employment to hundreds of thousands of men in the malting, brewing, and many mechanical industries, such as cooperage, carpentry, glass blowing, iron industries, and a score or more of other trades.

The question of prohibition and modification of the existing law can not be ignored. Whether or not either or both great political parties incorporate a liquor plank in their national platform, it is inevitable that the question will come up in at least 75 per cent of the contests for seats in the next House to be elected in November, and I do not hesitate to predict that no matter what the outcome of the vote may be to-day there will be a substantial majority to favor modification in the House which will be in control of legislation after the 4th of next March.

Congress can change the allowable alcoholic content of beer without violating the eighteenth amendment. That can be done in 48 hours, but 7 years may be required to bring about the repeal of the amendment itself.

Our Budget troubles would be over, our unemployment problem lessened, our crime wave diminished, and our country would be in better order if we should modify the Volstead Act and do it now.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether it is the purpose of the gentleman from Tennessee to have general debate only to-day, or is it is his intention to proceed with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRNS. My purpose is to proceed until the House determines to adjourn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it will be possible to finish the bill to-day? Two hours and 40 minutes will bring us until nearly half after four.

Mr. BYRNS. I would like to begin the reading of the bill and read just as much of it as we can. There are no controversial subjects in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. It is simply a question of how much time will be taken in general debate?

Mr. BYRNS. That is it, and we may not consume that much time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee understands that it is the intention to have the committee rise at 4 o'clock?

Mr. BYRNS. I understand that, but I do not think all of this time will be consumed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12443, the second deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Mr. Disney in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum, and I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much indebted to the chairman of the committee for his indulgence in granting to me so much time this afternoon. I shall endeavor to conclude my remarks without having to consume all of the time that has been allotted to me for the purpose of giving some expressions to matters that might be regarded as of a political nature.

Ours is a government by political parties, and properly so. I think the developments of time, of legislation, and party policies have demonstrated that is the only consistent, logical, and proper way in which to conduct the public affairs of the people of this country.

The time is now approaching when the two great political parties of this country, the Republican and Democratic Parties, will go to the country upon their party platforms and upon their party achievements for the indorsement of the electorate in the November contest.

I desire this afternoon to have your attention while I undertake to answer a statement made a short time ago over the radio, a public political address, by the distinguished Senator from the State of Iowa, Senator Dickinson. I realize that if he had made this statement upon the floor of the Senate of the United States, on account of the comity existing between the two Houses, it would not have been proper for me to have referred to his speech, but this was a public address delivered outside of the Senate forum and over the radio, of course, to a very large public audience in America.

In the course of these remarks the distinguished Senator used this language:

The preponderance of evidence is that the Democratic Party has a congenital incapacity for government.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

I anticipated that that quotation would arouse the applause of my Republican friends.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will not yield now, but I will be glad to yield later. As I stated in the beginning, the very purpose of this address upon my part is to demonstrate that that statement and claim, which will be reiterated in this campaign throughout the length and breadth of America. has absolutely no historical basis; and my purpose before I conclude is to answer from the annals of our political proceedings in the Congress of the United States and demonstrate that, instead of there being a historical justification for the statements made by the distinguished keynoter of the coming Republican convention, I can satisfy any candid and fair-minded man, who is not governed and swayed by political bias, that that statement is historically untrue [applause], and that the Democratic Party has a magnificent record of constructive legislation from the very time when Thomas Jefferson founded it in the beginnings of the Republic. [Ap-

I am not going to undertake to go very largely this afternoon into any ancient history, but I think the student of our national and political development in this country will certainly agree that among the outstanding former Presidents of the United States are Thomas Jefferson, Monroe,

Madison, Jackson, Cleveland, and Woodrow Wilson. All of them were leaders in Democratic thought and policies. [Applause.]

The Democratic Party claims Thomas Jefferson as its political godfather and patron saint, and the only times when our party has gotten into serious political difficulties in its long history have been upon those occasions when it has departed from the ancient faith of Thomas Jefferson with reference to the fundamentals of Government procedure. [Applause.] And remember that the Democratic Party has had many opportunities to make mistakes. I grant this, because it is an ancient political organization. Others, like the Federalist Party and the Whig Party and the Know-nothing Party, have come and played their short time upon the stage and then have disappeared from the scene of action, but the party of Thomas Jefferson, founded essentially upon the fundamental principles announced in the Declaration of Independence and in his first and second inaugural addresses, has endured and held the affections of a great number of people in the United States of America during its more than 100 years of existence.

I wish the limitations of time would allow me to go more extensively into the history of our party's development and of its organization and of the things that it has stood for during the passing of the decades and of the generations, but, as I have said, the limitations of time will not permit this.

If you will take a map of the continental territory of the United States of America to-day, every single foot of it, with the exception of the territory covered by the original 13 Colonies, with all of its wealth, with all of its great developments and all of its growing population, came under the flag of this Republic under Democratic administrations. [Applause.]

But let us get down to more modern times. I said that I propose to challenge the statement made by the Senator from Iowa that the Democratic Party was congenitally incapable of constructive government. I further said that under our system of government a party is legitimately to be charged with responsibility for failure or success when it is intrusted with political power by the people.

I shall not have time to take up all of the constructive legislation placed upon the statute books under the eight years of Wilson's administration when we had the Presidency and both branches of the Congress, but I will refresh the recollection of my Republican friends, and particularly of their distinguished keynoter, with a few of the outstanding achievements, and leave it not to the partisan but to the disinterested and fair-minded people of America in this coming campaign to determine from the facts whether or not the accusation made is justified.

Let us go into the realm of business and finance and commerce. For a great many generations in this country there was established no real financial system to control the credit and the currency and the stability and the elasticity of our financial institutions. The charge was made, and it was firmly grounded, that for a great many years the great financial interests, dominated by the banking institutions of New York and Chicago and London, absolutely controlled the elasticity of our currency, as well as the credits of the country, and could fix the interest charges as they saw fit and to suit their own selfish purposes and precipitate upon the people of America great financial panics; and it was left for the constructive brains and genius and statesmanship of Mr. Wilson's administration, and the Congress serving under him, to devise and place upon the statute books our great Federal reserve system, and without the sound and safe provisions of that law every candid man must admit it would have been absolutely impossible for us to have financed the great World War or to have measurably withstood the present great financial panic that is pressing down upon the business of the country; and it was placed upon the statute books, my friends, despite the opposition of that great center of banking interests that had heretofore controlled the financial destiny of America, and despite the opposition of the leaders of the Republican Party.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I will not yield now. I will say to the gentleman that if I have time I will be pleased to yield later on.

This was constructive legislation. If it has not been, why have not those who are opposed to it and those who are criticizing the Democratic Party made any effort to repeal its basic provisions when they have been in power?

It is candidly admitted that probably the most equitable tax ever devised in this country, or in any other, to gain revenue to carry on the expenses of the government is an income tax. Without the provisions of the income-tax amendment, as written into law, during all the recent years of our history it would have been impossible for us to have fairly laid tribute of taxation upon those most able to bear it in America, and yet our friends of the Republican Party, with all of their long years of power in this country, with few exceptions since the Civil War, have never thought about providing this fine and equitable system of taxation; but it was submitted to the people of the United States and ratified and became a part of the American Constitution under a Democratic administration.

If our party during its eight years of power had done nothing else except to inaugurate and put into effect these two great measures I have suggested, in my opinion, it would forever deserve the praise and commendation of the people of the United States. [Applause.] Is this constructive legislation or is it destructive legislation?

In order that combinations and matters in restraint of trade and unfair commercial practices might not be resorted to in this country and might be legally restrained, the Democratic Party, in this same administration to which I am referring, conceived the idea of establishing a Federal Trade Commission in order that legitimate competition might be fairly conducted among the business interests of America.

That is constructive legislation. If it was not, why have not you gentlemen of the opposition sought to repeal it?

We have heard a good deal about the tariff of late. Under the Democratic administration of Woodrow Wilson we passed what, in my opinion, was one of the fairest and soundest tariff bills of modern times—the Underwood tariff bill—under the provisions of which our neighbors in foreign countries, those to whom we sold our goods, were willing to accept it as a matter of fair competition, and it did not bring into being these great hordes of retaliatory tariffs that have been ruining our foreign trade under the provisions of the Smoot-Hawley Act. We had general prosperity in the United States of America in industry and employment of labor under the provisions of that tariff act.

What about agriculture? Did the Democratic Party, when it had its last lease of power, do anything whatever for the men that follow the furrow, the men who provide food and clothing and shelter for the people of this country? For years and years they had been subjected to exorbitant interest rates when they attempted to borrow money for their needs.

The Democratic Party established the system of Federal loans to the farmers over long periods of time, at a low rate of interest, emancipating them in a large measure from the usurers of this country. Was that constructive legislation? If not, why have not you gentlemen sought to repeal it?

Since the establishment of this Government the people of the United States had no real adequate highway system. We were in the mud. It took them days to make journeys that now we make in a few hours. It was under the same Democratic administration that there was put into law our magnificent program of Federal aid to highways. That was the first development of a real modern up-to-date highway system in America, which has permeated nearly every section of our country to-day. Was that destructive or constructive legislation?

Conceding that the youth of America was entitled to some little stimulant or encouragement along lines of vocational education, the Democratic Party placed on the statute books provisions, with a small Federal appropriation, largely augmented by appropriations from the States, giving these youths vocational education, making them more useful and more capable citizens.

In the interest of soldiers who lost their earning capacity in the World War, we inaugurated the Federal system of vocational retraining for crippled soldiers of the World War.

The Democratic Party inaugurated the valuable system provided by the Smith-Lever Act, by which the farmers have been so greatly aided in methods of modern and scientific agriculture. If it is not a useful function for agriculture, why does not some leading Republican move to repeal it?

What has it done for labor-the men and women of America who toil, the man in overalls, the woman in gingham, the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in our industrial life? Under that administration to which I am referring, in order that labor and its representatives and its interests might have a spokesman and mouthpiece in the seats of the mighty, we established permanently the Department of Labor in order that men of the class to whom I have referred might have a hearing in the councils of the Nation and that their interests, their welfare, might not be disregarded. Recognizing the great principle of humanity and of real democracy, that human labor is not a commodity, we enacted the Clayton amendment to the antitrust act, which gave labor organizations, agricultural and industrial, the right to organize themselves into unions for their own protection and for the improvement of their working conditions without being subject to prosecution by law. I feel justified, Mr. Chairman, in asserting, without any undue partisan claim, that the whole history of the Democratic Party from its very origin up to this time has evidenced an anxiety and solicitude for the average man in America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the reason why it has not gone out of existence like some of these other political competitors in the arena of our public affairs.

We put afoot for the first time in this country a recognition officially that there ought to be some limitation upon the number of hours a man should toil in this country, and we enacted the Adamson 8-hour law in the Wilson administration, affecting the employees of the railroads of the country.

That was the beginning of an agitation which is now becoming more apparent, that under our industrial system, in this great machine age, when the machine has displaced so many millions of our men and women, it is necessary to further reduce the hours of labor. It was but a recognition of the principle that we have to extend still further in the interest of getting employment to the unemployed masses of our country. Even among the great industrialists of our land we find an agitation for a 6-hour day and for staggered employment. Will our Republican friends say that that was destructive legislation, that the Democratic Party when it had responsibility and power proved itself generically incapable of undertaking constructive government for the benefit of the masses of the people of our country?

We established a Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor, which has been of very great service to childhood and motherhood in this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest, along the matter of the hours of labor, that in a bill that the Ways and Means Committee reported out to-day we provide for a 5-day work week on public works.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is but an illustration of the principle I suggested a few moments ago, that in the evolution of our social and economic system we have to keep abreast of the times. My friends, the Democratic Party has always been willing to experiment along some lines of social progress and not forever stand pat on an archaic, outof-date system. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am afraid that I can not yield to a question now. I may yield a little later. What about popular government? Under our conception of government, it is government by the people, by their franchise, and by their direction.

I do not know whether the personnel has been improved any or not by the innovation to which I shall refer; but for a great many years Members of that great body at the other end of this Capitol, which is sometimes referred to as the greatest deliberative body on earth, were elected by a small group of politicians, assembled in the State legislatures often dominated by the sinister influence of a favored privileged class, exercising an undue influence in the selection of those two representatives in each State in the Senate of the United States. The Democratic Party when last in power, believing in popular government and the right of the people to control their affairs and their offices, submitted for the ratification by the people of the United States an amendment providing for the popular selection of United States Senators by the people in the States of the Union. We also put afoot and passed the woman's suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States along the line of popular and universal suffrage in this country.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. GIFFORD. In order to ask the gentleman if that august body at the other end of the Capitol has been greatly improved under the present method?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I said that gentlemen might draw their own inferences as to whether the system had improved, but I was illustrating the cardinal principle of the Democratic faith, that the people themselves are entitled to have a voice in the selection of their Representatives, whether they make successful selections or not. I do not think it would be possible to change it now, and I doubt if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] would submit a proposition to repeal the amendment to the Constitution providing for popular election of United States Senators. That is what I am talking about. They get up here and say, as this distinguished Iowa Senator said in this radio speech, that the Democratic Party is incapable generically of constructive government, and yet when we stand here and point out the undisputed facts of our political history repudiating and disproving that charge, gentlemen sit silent and do not and will not, on these great major propositions that had Democratic origin which I have suggested, dare stand up and say they stand for the repeal of them. The truth of the business is that they are seeking merely to further put afoot that old fallacy, announced by Senator Dickinson, and the other one that they are seeking to again fool the people with, that you can only trust prosperity to the people of the United States under a Republican administration. I will have something to say about that in a few moments.

We have heard a great deal of late about national defense. the protection of the flag and of the interests of our people. It was under Mr. Wilson's administration and a Democratic Congress that the great national defense act of 1916, which is the basis of our present Army organization, was founded and established. Is that constructive legislation or not? Yet I have heard many gentlemen on the minority side during the present session of Congress argue very earnestly not to break down that fine system of national defense which was established under a Democratic administration.

The Federal water power act, of such great importance to the people of this country, was of Democratic origin and sanction. Was that destructive? Would you have the water power of this country unregulated and uncontrolled by the financial buccaneers of the country, who could first grab off the franchises and licenses, or would you have them regulated and controlled by some function of the Federal Government, to put equitable and just restrictions upon their operation and manipulation? If you would have the proper regulation, then you must admit the Federal power act was one piece of constructive Democratic legislation.

What about our merchant marine, our ships upon the high seas, which carry what little commerce we have left from this country to our foreign customers? In 1916, when the Democratic Party passed the original shipping act, which is now the law of the country, with some few amendments, only 6 per cent of the foreign commerce of the United States was carried under the American flag, manned by American sailors.

Under the construction program set afoot under that administration, even to-day, although a great many of our ships have been sold and gone out of commission; under the inspiration and organization of the American merchant marine some 40 or 45 per cent of our foreign commerce is carried under the American flag on ships manned by American sailors. Is that destructive or constructive legislation?

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield there? The gentleman was looking this way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are other gentlemen over there aside from the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman is very agreeable to look at. I have yielded to the gentleman once and I do not yield further.

In my opinion, another great outstanding achievement of Mr. Woodrow Wilson's administration and that of his advisers was the way in which we conducted and won the Great World War. During the carrying forward of our military and naval operations in the short period we were engaged in the World War it became necessary to call to the colors millions of men and to expend billions of treasure; but within a time that was not anticipated when we went into that war it was brought to a glorious and successful conclusion.

One thing about its administration that has always appealed to me as an American and as a Democrat was the fact that although this Government spent some $30,000,-000,000, which passed through the hands of officials chosen by a Democratic administration, after the war was over, after our friends the Republicans came into power in Congress, thinking it would be possible for them to uncover many cesspools of corruption, they appointed some 53 different special committees of one sort or another, trying to find, no doubt for political purposes, some acts of corruption on the part of the Democratic administration, or at least some of its high officials. After they had spent thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars from the Treasury of the United States in this insidious effort to uncover some Democratic corruption in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, I heard the chairman of the last one of those "smelling" committees stand on this floor and make his final report, and upon my interrogation I drew from him this statement-and it is embalmed in the records of this Congress in yonder Library-that after all of their investigation, through all of these activities, involving all the temptations to cupidity and corruption that might be submitted to man, he had to stand here and confess to this House and to the American people that they were unable to lay their fingers upon one single Democratic thief. [Applause.]

I think that is somewhat of a constructive record in these days and times—just plain, common honesty.

I do not want to refer to any unhappy things that followed the Wilson administration, but some things did follow which still shame the recollection of the American people. When the next administration came into power it is a matter of familiar history to our people how many men, not in low places but in high places of dignity and responsibility, either through their weakness of character or from their incapacity to resist temptation, although they had been honored with high dignity in the performance of duties for the American people, were found guilty of shameless dishonor. Cabinet officers, administrative officers, men holding positions of great trust and responsibility, driven from their high office by the scourge of public and popular indignation at the betrayal of their trust. [Applause.]

I say it is an unfortunate and despicable page from the annals of the American people.

Then ensued the orgy of control by the great interests of this country during three Republican administrations. The present Executive has been at the head of the Government for about three and one-half years. Senator Dickinson, when he goes out to deliver his stirring keynote speech to my Republican brethren in Chicago, will, no doubt, tell them about the great constructive glories of the Republican Party and of this administration.

Now, we have known Brother Dickinson in this body. I see men who served with him many years. The time was when he was the well-recognized leader of the farm bloc on the Republican side of the House of Representatives, and I remember with very great clearness the speeches he used to make to you on the Republican side as the leader of the farm bloc when he would demand upon the part of the farmers of this country some legislation that would put agriculture upon a parity with industry in America. He was the leader who finally secured the passage through Congress of the Haugen equalization fee, which was subsequently vetoed by a Republican President.

When Mr. Dickinson, in his keynote speech out yonder in Chicago a week or two from now, gets up to tell you the glories of the Republican protective-tariff system and of the great anxiety that his party has for the promotion of the interest and welfare of the agriculture of the United States of America, I would like for him to remember these words of his which I am now going to quote and which he gave out publicly soon after Mr. Coolidge had vetoed the equalization fee bill. It makes very interesting reading. Here is what he said:

Considerable importance has been attached to Mr. Mellon's declaration in the Capitol, where the economic principles he opposes already have been defeated in the House and are approaching a vote in the Senate.

proaching a vote in the Senate.

Representative Dickinson described as "absolutely without warrant" the Secretary's statement that the equalization fee, while technically to be paid by the farmer, would in reality be paid by the consumer, and said his purpose evidently was "to solidify opposition to the bill, especially among the workingmen of the country." Mr. Mellon's arguments, he added, sounded "strangely like those of Mr. Hoover," the Secretary of Commerce.

Obviously referring to the defeat of Senator Cummins by former Senator Brook Marx, insurgent, in the recent Republican primary Obviously referring to the defeat of Senator Cummins by former Senator Brookhart, insurgent, in the recent Republican primary in his State, Mr. Dickinson declared that if the Mellon view "is the verdict of the administration, then the thunderbolt that came out of Iowa the other day is merely the sheet lightning of the coming storm."

[Applause.]

I want to say to you, my friends, that if what we can hear from the plains of Iowa to-day and from that great northwestern country, whose statesmen and citizens still realize they are not securing any assistance under the provisions of the protective-tariff system but on the contrary are being penalized under its provisions, and that the leaders of this administration are not going to approve of any legislation along the lines indicated formerly by Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. DICKINSON and you other farm men here in this section-if what we can hear of the noise of the coming revolt out in that section of the country means anything, it is but the lightning before the tornado, because if Mr. Dickinson was stating the truth when he was the spokesman of the farm bloc here in the House of Representatives when the farmers here and those interested in farm legislation were seeking to enact legislation that the farmers themselves wanted for their benefit—I say to you, if that is the type of statesmanship that is going to dominate the keynoter and the Republican convention, the farmers of that section will have a right to refer to this statement made by the Senator in 1928.

Now, we have had some constructive legislation in the last three years, I suppose, under the administration now in power. If I were asked to pick out what I, as a student of congressional history, would consider the two outstanding achievements of the present Republican administration, they would be the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill and the Federal farm marketing act. These are the things I imagine the keynoter and others will refer to with great pride.

Now let us see what has happened to the commerce and industry of the United States of America under the provisions of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. It is important that the people of this country in the coming campaign should know something about the facts of what has resulted in the practical administration of this great beneficent measure for the intended protection of American industry and American agriculture. Let us see what effect it has had on the driving away from America of American money that ought to have been invested, under the proper system of tariff, here in our own country for the employment of American laborers.

I do not know that I will have time to mention all of this, but I would like very briefly to call attention to the following facts: In 1930 the country's foreign trade fell $2,737,000,000 under that of 1929, and in 1931 it fell below that of 1930 by $2,389,000,000. In the two years it fell from a total of $9,600,000,000 in 1929 to $4,514,000,000. Meanwhile the Government now running the country under this great constructive policy was erecting a new building for the Department of Commerce in Washington at a cost of $17,500,000, and expenditures for that department were increasing from a little more than $34,000,000 for the fiscal year 1928 to $54,000,000 for the current fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this point to incorporate in my remarks a few other statistics along the line of foreign trade.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the following figures tell the story of the economic losses sustained during the last two years:

	1929	1931	Increase (+) or decrease (-)
Exports.	$5, 240, 995, 000	$2, 424, 000, 000	-$2, 816, 995, 000

Based on figures published in the Wall Street Journal, it was estimated at the close of 1930 that from the peak of the bull market to December 31, 1930, securities outstanding in the United States, listed and unlisted, had shrunk by more than $80,000,000,000. This shrinkage continued steadily during 1931, so that the shrinkage in the market value of securities is considerably in excess of $100,000,000,000. On January 1, 1932, in its financial section, the New York Times published a table showing that on the preceding day the average price of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange was 21.7 per cent of the average of prices on September 19, 1929, a drop of 78.3 per cent.

On January 23, 1932, the National Industrial Conference Board placed the shrinkage in national wealth during 1930 at a little more than $32,000,000,000, the estimate covering only physical assets and not including securities and credits. For the same year it placed the reduction in national income at $14,000,000,000. For 1930 the Industrial Conference Board placed the national wealth at $329,700,000,000 and the national income at $71,000,000,000. If the same rate of shrinkage continued during 1931, the total reduction for two years in national wealth was more than $64,000,000,000 and in income more than $28,000,000,000.

With reference to the removal of American capital to foreign countries under the operation of this great constructive legislation, the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, in plants which have been located in Canada is a branch of the United States Steel Corporation near Windsor representing an investment of $60,000,000. There is a branch of the Aluminum Co. of America in Quebec, the largest of its kind in the world, capable of producing 400,000,000 pounds of aluminum annually.

Gentlemen, I do not think it is necessary to continue with any further statements of fact as to the adverse effects of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill upon American trade and commerce. Men will say that other foreign countries have also lost a part of their foreign trade, but it is particularly significant that the statistics show that the United States of America has lost 15 per cent more of its foreign trade than any of our other competitors abroad.

Do our friends point with any degree of pride to the operations of the Farm Board? As I stated a few moments ago, the representatives of agriculture who came to Congress asked either the enactment of the equalization fee or the debenture system, which would give agriculture the benefit of the operation of the tariff. However, both were denied to agriculture, and the administrations of Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Hoover insisted that the only relief that would give any benefit and which would provide constructive and helpful relief was to set up this Farm Board and give it $500,000,000 with which to operate.

What has been the result of that system? Practically all of that money, that tremendous sum of money, under the false system of operation set afoot by that board, under its mismanagement, under its actual speculation in commodities with Federal money, under its bad system of making unwise advances to the Stabilization Corporation and other bad business practices—the result of it is that they have practically exhausted all of the fund, and agriculture to-day is at the lowest ebb it has been certainly in the last 50 years. Yet those are the two chief outstanding accomplishments of this administration since it went into power.

They will go out in this campaign and say that the Democratic Party is now in control of the House of Representatives in this Congress, and that it has failed to accomplish anything; that its leadership has fallen down; that it has no coherency of action; and that it has again proven the axiom announced by Senator Dickinson that we are incapable of constructive government.

We have only a very meager majority on the Democratic side in the control of the present House of Representatives, just a handful, so to speak, or a theoretical majority, yet I want to say to you and I want to say to the country that I am not ashamed, in fact I am proud, of the record made by the Democrats in the House of Representatives in this session of Congress as far as we were able to enforce our policies. [Applause.]

When we came back here and assembled in December what was the condition of the country? Before we came the President of the United States sent out an alarm message to all the Representatives that the whole fabric of the financial structure of the world was about to tumble about our ears and that unless in advance we committed ourselves to a moratorium upon our foreign debts he would not be answerable for the disastrous consequences that might fall upon the people of our own country. When we came back here, in our anxiety, in a nonpartisan way, to go ahead on the recommendation of the man we thought we had the right to rely upon in this great crisis of our country, a great many of us on this side heeded his request and voted for his moratorium. However, looking back upon it to-day, I say for one, although I did it as a measure of cooperation at that time, and felt in my heart we were justified in answering that appeal on the part of the President in that emergent situation, that if I had it to do over again, I would not vote for a moratorium [applause] because in my opinion it was the entering wedge-conceived in large measure by the great financial interests which are involved in it-in a program for the ultimate cancellation and noncollection of every dollar of our foreign debts. [Applause.] I make the prediction here and now that it will be a long, long time, if ever, before the influence of that moratorium upon the minds and hearts of those who owe us those debts will be removed, but on the contrary they are going to rely upon the theory that we are not going to really demand the collection of those debts.

We voted for the President's Reconstruction Finance Corporation upon the same theory. A great many of us did it on the idea that it would afford facilities for the great institutions of the country—the banks, the railroads, and other credit organizations—to tide themselves over and have some money to put into the channels of trade. Yet I submit—although it has no doubt saved some institutions from failure, although it has served that beneficent purpose in a large degree, and I am gladly willing to concede it—that upon the whole extension of that tremendous amount of credit to these institutions in its effect has not helped the average man in America one particle.

The Democratic Party in this session of Congress, willing to show its spirit of adventure in constructive policies, as I suggested awhile ago, has tried to meet this present situation. I took occasion a few days ago in a few brief remarks to say that the time had come in the history of this Congress when we were going to have to burn some of our bridges behind us in our preconceived notions of economic policy. So in our desire to help the farmers of this country, who are in an utter state of destitution and hopelessness to-day—and I am glad we were joined in that by some of our friends on this side of the House who are deeply interested in agriculture—we passed a bill which had for its purpose the stabilization of commodity prices, so as to give back to the man who produces the cotton, the wheat, and the corn of this country something for the stuff he produces.

As I say, we passed the Goldsborough stabilization bill, directing the Federal Reserve Board to use its credit and all the powers it had to try to revive the prices received for agricultural products, as well as other business products in this country, so that there might be some purchasing power and some breaking up of these frozen credits. You gentlemen on that side who voted for that bill will not deny that was constructive legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question.

Mr. MICHENER. With reference to that particular bill, is it not true that Senator Glass has stated that the bill can not pass, and he himself has inserted something else in its place?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care what Senator Glass or anybody else says about it. I am talking about the sincere effort on the part of the Democrats in this House to do something which, in our opinion, will be of benefit to the farmers and other laboring people in this country. [Applause]

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. The substitute offered by Senator Glass in the Senate is itself an effort to enlarge the currency supplied to the people of this country with a view to accomplishing the same purpose intended by the Goldsborough bill

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and inasmuch as my distinguished colleague from Alabama has just risen, I want to say that, in my opinion, he has contributed almost invaluable service to the people of this country in the financial legislation he has sponsored as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee at this session of the Congress. [Applause.]

In our desire as a party to protect the deposits of the people of this country in the banks, involving the savings of their lifetime, the money that they had put away for a rainy day and for all of the exigencies that may occur in human experience, we are seeking through the Steagall bill for the guarantee of deposits in the banks of this country—National and State—to remove in the future the possibility of this terrible tragedy that has come upon so many communities and so many hearts and homes in America in the last few years under the present system of instability of a great many of our banking institutions. This, in my opinion, is constructive legislation.

We have passed the appropriation bills and sent them to the Senate in this session of Congress and reduced the President's own budget by $165,000,000.

Called upon by the President and using our own judgment as to its necessity we passed a tax bill to balance the Budget and to restore business confidence in this country and sent it to the Senate.

We expect to bring out here for your consideration and, I trust, approval, within the next few hours a bill that has for its object the restoration of employment to thousands, if not millions, of people in this country [applause], who are now hopeless and desperate, without food and without clothing and without shelter.

Furthermore, we propose to give into the hands of your President—my President as well, of course—an opportunity to have a fund, sufficient in amount, whenever in his opinion the desperate necessity arises, to take care of the actual destitution and hunger and poverty of millions of our people in the great congested industrial centers of this country. We are proposing to give him the power and we are willing for him to exercise his humanity and his judgment to use this fund to see to it that the American people do not starve.

Some gentlemen talk about the dole, and this is one of the bridges I was talking about a few moments ago.

In my opinion the first duty of any government, particularly a government like ours, is to preserve itself. This is a government of the people, and we are not going to preserve in all its pristine stability and security the Government of the United States as long as we have eight or ten million starving, homeless, hopeless people under our flag. [Applause]

I say to you, my friends, I believe it is a legitimate function of the Congress of the United States, if such a desperate emergency does occur, to carry out the provisions of the Rainey bill, which will be up for consideration in a day or so here in this House, involving the proposition of giving to the Chief Executive sufficient funds with which to see to it that people do not actually starve and shiver to death in this country, and also to provide work for our hordes of idle workers.

There are other things involved in the record of the House of Representatives that I might refer to, but my time has about expired.

Gentlemen, of course, what I have said has been in the nature of a partisan address. I realize we have honest differences of opinion in this country upon questions of policy, but I do feel in my heart of hearts that the time is now upon us, more than it has been in many generations, when we are going to have a real test of democracy in America, a real test of representative government in America. New developments, new conditions, social and economic and financial, are going to call upon us as a challenge to exercise our genius for legislation and our constructive leadership to meet the new conditions, and we may not expect to rely absolutely upon the old, archaic, and unstable policies of the past that are not sufficient to meet the conditions with which we are now confronted. And looking back upon the long and illustrious record of my party, during all the decades of its organization, taking the history of its accomplishments, fairly and without undue praise, I feel, my fellow Democrats, that in this crisis, particularly if in the November elections we are given full control of this Government, in the White House and in the Senate of the United States, the people of America may rely with security upon our earnest and diligent effort to bring forth constructive legislation of the sort I have mentioned under the last Democratic administration—that will bring deliverance and peace and renewed prosperity to the people of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it has been very interesting to hear the address of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]. He has attempted to reply to and to criticize the address of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] over the radio the other night, when Senator Dickinson said that the Democratic Party had a constitutional incapacity to govern.

Has there ever been a better illustration of the truth of Senator Dickinson's charge than the handling of the House of Representatives by the Democratic Party since the first of last December? They brought in a tax bill, framed by their own Ways and Means Committee, and they allowed it to be picked to pieces. They brought in an economy bill from their own committee, selected by them, and they allowed it to be picked to pieces and absolutely destroyed. And now to-day we are advised by the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], during the speech of the gentleman from Alabama, that they have reported the so-called Garner unemployment relief proposition.

When this proposition was called to the attention of the House I went into it with a view to analyzing it, and analyzing what it will do for the workingmen of America. I approached it from the standpoint of what relief these projects will give to men out of work. I approached it from the standpoint of whether or not in fact, in view of the history of the country and its different corporations and its municipalities, its counties, and its States since the depression occurred, whether or not it is a sound policy for us to embark on.

I want for a moment to discuss that situation here in the House. In the appropriation bills we have passed for 1933 there is carried for new projects $277,000,000, and it is estimated by the department bureaus that have that work in charge that it costs to put a man to work on river and harbor work $4,700. It costs to put a man to work on public-building projects $5,666. To put a man to work on Veterans' Bureau hospital construction propositions it costs $3,140. To put a man to work on Navy projects it costs $3,333. To put a man to work on public roads—and they say that is the most fertile field—costs $3,600. To put a man to work on flood control costs $1,250. That is because they pay, as I understand, less than a dollar a day for labor.

The following table shows in detail the picture of what all public works cost and will produce in the nature of employment in the fiscal year of 1933, beginning July 1, next. The table shows the number of employees provided for, indirectly, which is, I believe, absolutely erroneous and more than double what would actually result. The last column shows the cost of putting one man to work for one year in each of the so-called schemes. The table follows:

Type of work	Funds al- ready pro- vided for 1933 in bills passed by the House		Average number of employees provided for indirectly as claimed by bureau	Direct cost per em- ployee per year
Rivers and harbors	$37, 000, 000 85, 000, 000	8, 000 15, 000	8, 000 25, 000	$4,700 5,666
Veterans' Bureau	17, 000, 000	5, 400	5,000	3, 140
Navy	9, 000, 000 100, 000, 000 29, 000, 000	2,700 27,777 23,000	2, 500 55, 554 5, 000	3, 333 3, 600 1, 250
Total	277, 000, 000	81, 877	101, 054	1

While it can truthfully be said that the expenditure of a large portion of what is already provided is to an extent for projects which serve a useful purpose, nevertheless, a large portion of them are nonproductive and will require very large appropriations by the Federal Government and the States to maintain.

Why should we go ahead and provide work for the people by embarking on projects which run up a tremendous big expense and do not give employment relief at all in proportion to the amount expended? Why should we so increase the bonded indebtedness of the Federal Government and the bonded indebtedness of our States and the tax burden upon our people that they will never be able to work out of it? Why should we rather not loan the money to the States, which is necessary, temporarily, to feed the people wherever that is necessary, and reduce our taxes, stop borrowing money, restore confidence to business, and permit it to go ahead, and permit employment conditions to improve?

Tremendously large expenditures at this time will simply put a very small percentage of our unemployed to work. Such expenditures can only be met by a tremendous bond issue, which will ruin the credit of the Government and impose a tremendous tax burden on our people which they can not meet.

This tax and these bond issues will prevent business recovery and cause greater deflation. They will keep private industry back and prevent it from obtaining the funds which are necessary to put industry back on a stable basis. Let us rather turn the remaining wheat, which the Farm Board has, over to the States or to the Red Cross to be used in feeding the people, and get rid of the 100,000,000 bushels of wheat which are a constant menace to the market, and give our farmers a chance to sell our wheat products at better prices.

Let us, by the adoption of sane business and economic methods, restore the confidence of our people, and give our business communities an opportunity; and, by economical, sound action, reduce our expenditures to the limit. By doing this we will put five times as many people to work as we possibly could put to work by any of the so-called aid schemes. All of these schemes just add another burden to the taxpayers, destroy confidence, and prevent economic recovery and increase unemployment. The real friends of the laboring man will oppose these schemes. I am opposed to bills providing for embarking on large Federal projects, some of which might be desirable if business conditions were right and the Treasury had a surplus and the Budget were balanced. I am opposed under any circumstances to projects which simply make added burdens to the Treasury, and which are not needed now or at any other time. Most of these projects which are in this bill are not needed at any

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I do not yield. For instance, we propose to relieve unemployment and distress in the United States by building a post office in the Virgin Islands, by spending $825.000 to construct buildings in Alaska.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. In addition to the $825,000 for two public buildings in Alaska, the Garner proposal carries half a million dollars for forest roads and trails and five different river and harbor projects, to take care of unemployment among 60,000 inhabitants.

Mr. TABER. The basic industry there, gold mining, is the industry in all the world which is flourishing at top speed.

In my home town they have provided a post office to be built at a cost of $315,000, which I did not ask for, and which I know we do not need at this time. I am not going to cast a beam into the other fellow's eye and have one in my own. All we want there, when business gets back, is a small addition to the present building, costing possibly $50.000 or $75.000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Our country started off on a false economic theory when this depression came along. We thought we could relieve unemployment by embarking upon vast schemes of public work, which would not be looked at in ordinary times. Where did we get? We drove all of our railroad corporations into bankruptcy, we drove our great big utility corporations into bankruptcy, and to-day, as a result of it, our States and our cities and our counties can not borrow money, and we have to help them out. Why we should indulge in such ridiculous expenditures at this time is away beyond me. The number of people that could possibly be put to work by the expenditure of $846,000,000 under the Garner scheme, the greatest possible number, is 291,613, and that is a very liberal estimate. But the expenditure of that sum of money can not be made short of two and a half to three years in these projects that have been laid out. The expenditure of that sum of money will so put Uncle Sam into the red that it will further destroy the confidence of the people and destroy the confidence of business, and instead of putting men to work, some 291,613, it will destroy that confidence and force three or four times as many men out of work in private industry.

Why can we not face this problem intelligently, why can we not face it as it is without spending money foolishly and give our people and the taxpayers a chance to recover? They have recovered from every depression that we have ever faced. America can recover from this depression, but we must learn our lesson from the depression. We must economize. We must go along on a reasonable basis and permit business to come back and we must function on such a basis as we can get along on and sustain. If we have to relieve distress, it should be done through the States. If the States can not finance the matter, we might have to loan them the money. That is legitimate. But let us stop going at this job wrong end to and begin now, right now, by firmly resolving to put patriotism above the idea of placing a post office in some place that does not need it, by putting patriotism above our desire to get some great big expenditure in our district that we can glory in. The people back home do not want big expenditure. They want a chance to recover. For God's sake, let us give it to them, let us start right now. The people do not want these expenditures, they do not want anything of the kind, but they do want business to get a chance to come back. Let us turn down this proposition and turn it down so vigorously that the country will be restored to confidence and business can come back and millions upon millions of men can be put to work, instead of putting a couple of hundred thousand men to work and driving a million and a half out of work. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, for the past 20 years, whenever it was necessary for an alibi to be presented for the delinquencies of the Democratic Party, the distinguished and able gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] has been called upon. If there is anyone who can present a thorough alibi it is that gentleman, because he is a man of distinction, ability, and attainments, and one of the few of this body who can handle a political situation with the dexterity that is required under the circumstances.

The gentleman always begins his remarks by invoking the shades of Jefferson, and he invokes them well, overlooking the fact, perhaps, that the measures which he has indorsed here so highly to-day are exactly contrary to the policies laid down by that great statesman, Jefferson, who, instead of wishing a bureaucratic government, even insisted that the States pay the expenses of the Revolution.

It will not be possible for me to answer many of the statements which the gentleman has made, because his was a carefully prepared speech, and I did not expect to speak until a moment ago, when I had the pleasure of listening to the gentleman's remarks.

The gentleman discussed the Underwood tariff bill and stated what a great piece of legislation that was, but neglected to mention the fact that in 1913, just before war broke out in Europe, there were 3,000,000 men out of work in the United States, a greater percentage of men out of work, compared to the situation existing in 1913, than there are out of work to-day at the close of a great European war and at a time of universal, world-wide depression.

The gentleman brought up the iniquity of the Farm Board and its stabilization policy, and said that the Republican Party did not understand how those things ought to be done, and a moment ago I happened to pick up the Congressional Record of April 25, 1929, and on page 572 I find that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama voted for the formation of the Farm Board, to which so much objection is made, and if I understand correctly, a great many gentlemen interested in cotton have been very interested in its perpetuation.

The gentleman discussed all of the legislation of much moment in the United States since the time of Abraham Lincoln, and stated specifically that its adoption was all due to the intellect and ability of the Democratic Party. For instance, the gentleman said the Federal Reserve Board had accomplished wonders. We agree with that, but those of us who know our history know that it was initiated by the great President of the United States, William Howard Taft, who initiated the first investigation of that great subject. and that the passage of the bill was simply work done by men, Republicans and Democrats alike, who were students of the banking situation, and neither party can claim credit for that act any more than they can claim credit to-day if we amend the bank laws in a Democratic House and a Republican Senate. No one can claim credit for the passage of any of this legislation.

Of course, I could not help but smile when the distinguished and affable gentleman from Alabama claimed credit for the Democratic Party for the good-roads program inaugurated in the United States. That, my friends, was not because of the Democrats. That was because of the automobiles, and they, their manufacturers and mechanics, rather than the Democratic Party, ought to be given the credit.

I could not help but listen to the gentleman with a great deal of interest when he discussed the war, because I happened to have been present in this House during the early stages of the European war, and I can well remember in May, 1916, when, on the floor of this House, we had the votes to pass the Kahn amendment to the Hay bill, the War Department appropriation bill, which would have doubled the size of the Army on July 1, 1916, and kept us out of that European war if a member of President Wilson's Cabinet had not come on the floor of this House and deliberately said that the administration wanted no preparation, and the votes were changed. If I recall correctly, 11 votes, changed on that day in 1916, when all of us knew we were being led into the World War, would have doubled the size of the American peace-time Army and would have created a General Staff. They can not claim much for the Democratic Party in those days.

Then I recall, in August, 1916, the President of the United States came to this House and asked that the Council of National Defense be created, and we Republicans unanimously voted for it, because we knew we were being led into the European war without any preparation whatever and that our sons were to be conscripted. That bill was enacted, and they met within two weeks after the election, when he kept us out of war, and formulated the food control act and the conscription act that we passed immediately after war was declared in 1917.

I do not think anyone will want to express many alibis for Republicans in those negotiations, or claim much credit for Democrats, if they are familiar with the history of what actually happened and what is shown by the record. It is impossible to fool the people of the United States.

That is so manifest that in the succeeding election President Harding received a majority of 7,000,000 votes, but any Republican who could have secured the nomination could have been elected at that time because the American doughboy and the American people knew what had been done to them when the Kahn amendment was voted down, when the Council of National Defense bill was brought out, when we were kept out of war and then declared war. It is common knowledge of the citizenry that any Republican could have been elected. It was because of the faults of our Democratic friends and not because of our strength.

I can recall exactly 10 years ago this month when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Woodruff] and myself made the original attacks on men connected with the Harding administration, particularly in the legal department of the Government, and we secured no help from the Democratic side except one gentleman, to whom I am glad to give credit, because he was of some assistance, and that is the distinguished Democratic floor leader to-day, Mr. Henry Rainey; but the fight had to be made within the ranks of the Republican Party.

I do not think any Democrat can claim much credit for what occurred in those days, and to-day I still see the same things being done to national defense by this Democratic majority when they eliminated 2,000 officers from the military service when that action will not save a dime for the Government because it will be compelled to transport those officers to their homes. We are going through the same national-defense wrecking again. Why, I would almost think that we had another Democratic President in the White House to keep us out of war from the attitude that has been taken by the Democratic leadership in breaking Army morale during this recent Democratic House control.

I can not help but discuss the Garner bill. In reading the bill, on page 58, I found a very concrete illustration of Democratic efficiency under its administration of legislation. On page 58 I found that they were to build a post office in Stephan, S. Dak., at a cost of not exceeding $55,000. I know Stephan. In the brave days of my youth at one time I hauled coal there at $1.75 a ton with which to get some money to go to school. It is 22 miles from a railroad, 25 miles south of Highmore, served by rural route No. 22. Fifty-five thousand dollars put into Stephan, S. Dak., is more money than every farmhouse within a radius of 10 miles around that post office would bring on the market, and there is no one living there who does not know it. There is a symptom of Democratic efficiency in the so-called Garner bill that will be brought up in the House in a very short time, and these remarks are symptomatic of what will happen when they bring it up under suspension of the rules. I will say we are going to vote it down. We will not vote for a post office in Stephan, S. Dak., where the post office will cost more than all the land and houses in two townships will bring in the open market. We will vote it down, and then you will go out to the people of the country and say, "Oh, the Republicans voted it down."

If you want to be fair with it, bring in a rule, and you can bring it in, and we will get a motion to recommit and go right along with you in trying to take care of whatever aid is required in the way of such self-sustaining buildings as are required and whatever is needed for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because then you will be going along the road the President is traveling. You can not go to the people of the country after this speech and bring the Garner bill up under suspension of the rules without the trickery being exposed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. On December 7 the House of Representatives was organized by the alleged Democrats.

On December 8 they revised the rules.

On December 9 the demagoguery started.

Up to that date the people of the country had some hope that Representatives, fresh from the people, would have a constructive policy.

After one look at the new organization, I doubted it, and on December 9 said:

Frankly, I feel sorry for anybody who tries to lead the Democratic side during the next year, because it is the most disorganized group politically that has ever yet been disorganized. * * * I have grave doubt about your Democratic leadership, because the Democrats will be like an army; and you can not make an army out of a disorganized mob going in different directions, thinking different things, and having different equipment. But if you do succeed in making an army out of it and will follow the suggestions of the President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, our people will not starve; and in anything looking toward that end you will get the cooperation of this (the Republican) side, just as it gave cooperation to President Wilson at a time when there was a complete Democratic administration. This demonstration of Democratic leadership in these times of distress is rather illustrative of what will happen during the rest of the session. I think the Democratic Party to-day ought to get busy and organize the committees and get to work * * *

Since that time there has been nothing but demagoguery. Democrats have ruined the Democratic majority and Democratic hopes for success, have disorganized the Budget, and by their actions in one week in the mob scenes during the debate on the tax bill wiped out $3,000,000,000 of the value of grain, cattle, stocks, and bonds. They have done nothing but practice their old campaign speeches, which many of them prepared 10 years ago and have been polishing up ever since. Originally they were practiced and proclaimed in their own congressional districts. Since Congress convened, while the country suffered, they have been, with flourishing gestures and oratorical voices, inflicted upon the House of Representatives.

On this same day that I pointed out the Democratic disorganization, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], to show the stability and cohesion of the Democratic majority of this House, said:

The gentleman from South Dakota speaks of our organization as though we were a disorganized mob; yet I point to the fact that in every preliminary caucus that the Democratic Party has had since this Congress was called into session, although we recognize honest differences of opinion in our ranks on many economic and social problems, every action we have taken with respect to the future government of the country as administered through the House of Representatives has been by unanimous vote.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, what he thinks of it now. It is said that the Speaker of the House is hardly on speaking terms with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and everywhere one goes he hears the Democratic backlash of vituperation used against some other Democrat.

The Democratic majority never could and can not now function.

Billy Mason, of Illinois, expressed it when he said, "No wonder the Democrats can not run the House of Representatives. Sometimes it is difficult for smart Republicans to do so."

This Democratic House reminds me of a supposedly great musical organization—all piccolo players. Its inefficiency reminds me of a legless frog in a whirlpool or a bill-less pelican in an eating contest. One day it seems that the Democrats of this House are an aggregation of second-class privates, marching under the direction of the gentleman from New York, General LaGuardia, and the next moment they look and act like a combat unit, composed exclusively of fat, old, retired major generals, with neither field officers, noncommissioned officers, nor privates in their ranks.

At that I want to compliment my friend from New York, General LaGuardia. He will be emblazoned in the annals of history for many great actions and attributes, and the greatest of those achievements will be the Democratic ides of March, when he took charge of a clear Democratic majority in the House of Representatives of the United States and "marched the troops right up the hill and marched them down again." Without even a pipe to play, but like the pied piper of Hamelin in the year 1284, he marched through the well of this House followed by a lot of full-throated mice and left them in the deep waters, in which they are now going down for the third time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from South Dakota five additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If Uncle Billy Mason could come back to the House—because nobody could do justice to this disorganized session except our old friend Uncle Billy—and see some of the new Democratic leaders—and they all think they are leaders—he would say, "Every time one of them gets up in the morning and puts on his pants he thinks half of the world is dressed, and every time one of them walks up Pennsylvania Avenue he wonders why the other side of the Avenue does not tip up."

After many of these oratorical outbursts it is apparent that the men responsible for them, like the flea on the wagon wheel, look back and say, "Good gosh, what a heck of a dust I'm raising."

All in all, this disorganization and complete parliamentary breakdown of the Democratic majority of this House is a tragedy, not only for real Democrats but for real Republicans and the people of the United States.

Now, I do not want to become prominent in advising the Democratic majority. It has, however, followed General Laguarda into the deep water, and if it would follow up my advice it would come up after the third dip.

At 4 this afternoon the Democrats are to hold a caucus. That, of course, is dangerous for the Democratic Members of this House. They should have Kenneth Romney, Sergeant at Arms, meet them at the door and search them for weapons. Not for pistols and bowie knives, the famous old Democratic weapons, but for gas bombs, hat pins, stilettos, and radio broadcasting microphones. There would be none but verbal casualties.

After that caucus bring in the sales tax, the only fair tax that will balance the Budget, pass the economy and reconstruction bills without pork, and we Republicans will join with you in passing them.

You ought to be able to get enough votes, excepting what Mr. Hearst calls the jackass rabbits, together with the 153 Republicans, to secure a substantial majority.

If you do that, you will have a chance to bring the country back to some prosperity. With this indecision about the tax bill, with this demagoguery, and with all these things that happened, every market—stock, grain, cattle, hogs, and everything—has dropped to nearly nothing because Congress talked; it fiddled and did nothing. If you would pass this legislation, there would be something done.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have not the time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Again repeating what I said, this disorganization that has been caused by this indecision and with the defeat of the sales tax—

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not yield. Mr. Chairman, this is an illustration of Democratic disorganization. They do not even know the rules of the House. I repeat, if you want to rectify what has been done, you need only to bring out the measures advocated by the President. You could bring out the sales tax.

Mr. KELLER. Why do you not do it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have been with him on all these things. The difficulty is with the gentleman from Illinois and men of his type. They are responsible for the situation of disorganization in the House. The difficulty is not with me or men of my type. [Applause.] We would join with you and you could get back all of this value of grain, hogs, cattle, and everything. You could not return everything to the price it brought before this disorganization. That could not be done at once because of this Democratic disorganization.

You know, I am not much of a partisan, because I do not believe so much in partisanship, but when I find that partisanship is carried to the extent it has been carried here, then I must complain about it, because it has affected every basic industry in the United States. It has wiped out everything from manufacturer to agriculture. Then a further attempt is made to disorganize the finances of the country by building a post office in every little country village. When such pork barrel bills are presented to us I simply can not keep silence. I must give expression to some of my opinions. However, I will say that if you will bring in fair measures without the pork barrel we will give you the votes to pass them. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I think we all enjoyed the good-natured raillery of our colleague from South Dakota. We can all acquit him of being a very virulent partisan. He has never displayed that tendency in my association with him on the floor of this House for many years, but in his effort to be humorous he omitted to be accurate. I hope he will pardon me if I make a correction with respect to the origin of the items in the so-called "pork barrel" bill. The Speaker of this House, who presented the bill subsequently introduced by Mr. Rainey, did not evolve these post offices in hick towns out of his own mind. He did not conjure them up out of the air. Does the gentleman know where those items came from? They came from the interdepartmental committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I know perfectly well that the one at Stephan did not come from the Republican administration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No. I am going to tell the gentleman something about where it came from. It came from the administration's own commission, the interdepartmental committee, to which we foolishly delegated our authority once upon a time in a lapse of wisdom and good judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will yield later.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The Democratic Party is not going to follow that commission, is it?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It must be emphasized that it was this partisan commission that planned this much-criticized program of public buildings. I might say that, while they have projected buildings in Republican villages of 1,500 inhabitants and planned to build post offices many times the value of all the public improvements in the vicinity, they have ignored good Democratic centers like the city of New York. For instance, in Bronx Borough, of 1,300,000 inhabitants, the Federal Government purchased a site 19 years ago for $176,000. The interest on that has been lost for that period, amounting to $209,000. There is an aggregate stalemate there of nearly half a million dollars simply because we could not persuade this amiable commission, which is responsible for these items in the Rainey bill, to erect a post office in a Democratic borough of 1,300,000 people.

However, I do not intend to and did not arise to make a partisan speech.

THE NEW REVENUE BILL

In view of the fact that we are on the eve of taking up the much-talked-of revenue measure, containing various new taxes—increases in postage, increases in income tax, and so forth—I am prompted to give the intimation to this House that we ought not to be in such a hurry to adjourn that we should feel obliged to pass an improvement, thoughtless, stupid measure.

TAXATION

Taxation is one of the most vital functions of government. It has been said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. The power to tax has been at the bottom of all tyranny throughout the ages, and it may fairly be said that every revolution of any moment in the world's history has been due to the fact that those who were at the head of government forgot the necessities, the needs, and the sufferings of their tax-ridden people and imposed burdens upon them beyond their power to endure.

Take, for example, our own Federal Budget—four billion dollars! This means $33 tax on every man, woman, and child throughout the United States, and this is separate and apart and distinct from local taxation. In my own municipality we have a budget of $600,000,000, which means a burden upon every man, woman, and child in the city of New York of nearly $100; and where a man and his wife and three children are struggling to get along, this means a deduction from his wages of $500 a year. In other municipalities the taxes are equally onerous.

I appeal to those who have shown such anxiety to reduce salaries to consider what this means. In the city of New York the municipal taxation is $500 for a family of five. Add to this $165 of Federal taxation, which ultimately falls upon the backs of the consumers, and we have $665 that the average head of a family of five has to bear.

Taxation is like dust thrown into a vessel of water. It stays on the surface for the moment, but soon precipitates to the bottom, so taxes settle upon the backs of the ultimate consumers, who, having nothing to sell but their labor, can not shift the burden any lower. This is a truth that can not be contradicted. The struggle throughout the ages has been to find a tax that will stick where it is put, and not fall upon the ultimate consumer. The only known way to accomplish this is to make the initial tax so small that there is no incentive to shift it or pyramid it.

THE INCOME TAX

If there is any part of our economic system which needs revision more than any other, it is our income tax. The law as it stands, with its deductions, its exemptions, its exceptions, its modifications, its allowances, and its brackets, absolutely defeats its avowed purpose.

TAX DODGING INVITED

It is so inequitable, it invites evasion. Take corporations as an illustration. In 1930, 498,110 corporations filed income-tax returns. Do you know how many paid taxes? Just 214,000 corporations reported net incomes that were taxable. Two hundred and eighty-three thousand corporations ducked, dodged, or evaded their tax liabilities.

What was the gross income of these corporations? One hundred and twenty billion dollars—and they paid taxes on \$5,627,312,995. That is on about $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent of their total

In the case of individual incomes, the contrast is not so glaring; but even there, out of 3,376,552 returns, 1,429,877 persons evaded or ducked the payment of any income tax whatever.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there is now pending before the Treasury Department practically $900,000,000 of unpaid taxes?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would not be surprised-I have not gone into that phase of it.

However, in preparation for this talk to-day, and not being certain that I would be able to get time, I put in the RECORD of last Thursday tabulations which I prepared with a great deal of pains, and I have had the remarks reprinted in pamphlet form and I expect every Member of the House will have them on his desk to-morrow. The title I have given the pamphlet is Tax Gross Incomes One Cent a Dollar, reprinted from the Congressional Record of May 26, 1932.

Going back to the corporations, the gross income of these corporations was $120,000,000,000, and they only paid $618, 000,000, or one-half of 1 per cent. This was the average. Actually those who were honest enough to pay any income tax at all actually paid as much, in some instances, as 10 per cent of their gross earnings. The general average is so low because so many corporations paid no tax at all.

TAXLESS INCOME RETURNS

Here is the glaring fact that there were 52,411 corporations in 1930 which showed no net income whatever. They paid no taxes, yet they showed a total gross income of $41,-000.000.000.

How do they evade their income tax? It is needless to tell anyone within the sound of my voice of the horde of "tax experts" who put their services at the disposal of anyone who can afford to pay them. They show the dishonest how to juggle the law so as to show no income. Then there are the "refunds."

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I observe that the gentleman has spent a great deal of study and time going into these matters, and I wonder whether he has made an examination of the number of refunds and the amount of those refunds to corporations by this administration, and whether the same lawyers that represented corporations in some instances that have received millions from the Government are the same lawyers that represented them when they failed to pay the $900,000,000 due the Government, referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden]?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is true in many cases, but I do not propose to touch on that to-day, because that is simply cumulative argument. Having these facts before you, how would you cure the situation?

Mr. McFADDEN. Before the gentleman leaves that subject, will he yield to me?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying, because I, too, have been doing some research work in regard to the very matter he is talking about. Of the $900,000,000 that is due and pending now before the department, running over several years, probably $200,000,000 of that are taxes which foreign steamship companies in the United States have evaded payment of through just such practices as the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am glad to have that contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]
